SEC. 324. MERCHANT MARINER DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) INTERIM MERCHANT MARINERS' DOCUMENTS.—Section 7302 of title 46, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "A" in subsection (f) and inserting "Except as provided in subsection (g), a"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(g)(1) The Secretary may, pending receipt and review of information required under subsections (c) and (d), immediately issue an interim merchant mariner's document valid for a period not to exceed 120 days, to—

"(A) an individual to be employed as gaming personnel, entertainment personnel, wait staff, or other service personnel on board a passenger vessel not engaged in foreign service, with no duties, including emergency duties, related to the navigation of the vessel or the safety of the vessel, its crew, cargo or passengers; or

"(B) an individual seeking renewal of, or qualifying for a supplemental endorsement to, a valid merchant mariner's document issued under this section.

"(2) No more than one interim document may be issued to an individual under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection.".

(b) EXCEPTION.—Section 8701(a) of title 46, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after the semicolon in paragraph (8);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (9) as paragraph (10); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8) the following:

"(9) a passenger vessel not engaged in a foreign voyage with respect to individuals on board employed for a period of not more than 30 service days within a 12 month period as entertainment personnel, with no duties, including emergency duties, related to the navigation of the vessel or the safety of the vessel, its crew, cargo or passengers; and".

Section 2302(a) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking "$1,000." and inserting "$5,000 in the case of a recreational vessel, or $25,000 in the case of any other vessel.".

Subtitle C—Renewal of Advisory Groups

SEC. 331. COMMERCIAL FISHING INDUSTRY VESSEL ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) COMMERCIAL FISHING INDUSTRY VESSEL ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—Section 4508 of title 46, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "Safety" in the heading after "Vessel";

(2) by inserting "Safety" in subsection (a) after "Vessel";

(3) by striking "(5 App. U.S.C. 1 et seq.)" in subsection (e)(1)(I) and inserting "(5 App. U.S.C.)"; and

(4) by striking "of September 30, 2000" and inserting "on September 30, 2005".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The chapter analysis for chapter 45 of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking the item relating to section 4508 and inserting the following:

"4508. Commercial Fishing Industry Vessel Safety Advisory Committee.".

SEC. 332. HOUSTON-GALVESTON NAVIGATION SAFETY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

Section 18(h) of the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 1991 (Public Law 102–241) is amended by striking "September 30, 2000." and inserting "September 30, 2005.".

SEC. 333. LOWER MISSISSIPPI RIVER WATERWAY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

Section 19 of the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 1991 (Public Law 102–241) is amended by striking "September 30, 2000" in subsection (g) and inserting "September 30, 2005".

SEC. 334. NAVIGATION SAFETY ADVISORY COUNCIL.

Section 5 of the Inland Navigational Rules Act of 1980 (33 U.S.C. 2073) is amended by striking "September 30, 2000" in subsection (d) and inserting "September 30, 2005".

SEC. 335. NATIONAL BOATING SAFETY ADVISORY COUNCIL.

Section 13110 of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking "September 30, 2000" in subsection (e) and inserting "September 30, 2005".

SEC. 336. TOWING SAFETY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The Act entitled "An Act to Establish a Towing Safety Advisory Committee in the Department of Transportation" (33 U.S.C. 1231a) is amended by striking "September 30, 2000." in subsection (e) and inserting "September 30, 2005.".

SEC. 341. PATROL CRAFT.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Transportation may accept, by direct transfer without cost, for use by the Coast Guard primarily for expanded drug interdiction activities required to meet national supply reduction performance goals, up to 7 PC–170 patrol craft from the Department of Defense if it offers to transfer such craft.

SEC. 342. BOATING SAFETY.

(a) FEDERAL FUNDING.—Section 4(b)(3) of the Act of August 9, 1950 (16 U.S.C. 777c(b)(3)) is amended by striking "$82,000,000" and inserting "$83,000,000".

(b) STATE FUNDING.—Section 13102(a)(3) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking "general State revenue" and inserting "State funds, including amounts expended for the State's recreational boating safety program by a State agency, a public corporation established under State law, or any other State instrumentality, as determined by the Secretary".

SEC. 343. CARIBBEAN SUPPORT TENDER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Coast Guard may operate and maintain a Caribbean Support Tender (or similar type vessel) to provide technical assistance, including law enforcement training, for foreign coast guards, navies, and other maritime services.

(b) MEDICAL AND DENTAL CARE FOR CARIBBEAN SUPPORT TENDER PERSONNEL AND DEPENDENTS.—

(1) PROVISION.—The Commandant may provide medical and dental care to foreign military Caribbean Support Tender personnel and their dependents accompanying them in the United States—

(A) on an outpatient basis without cost; and

(B) on an inpatient basis if the United States is reimbursed for the costs of providing such care.

(2) CREDITING OF PAYMENTS.—Payments received as reimbursement for the provision of such care shall be credited to the appropriations against which the charges were made for the provision of such care.

(3) INPATIENT CARE WITHOUT COST.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B), the Commandant may provide inpatient medical and dental care in the United States without cost to foreign military Caribbean Support Tender personnel and their dependents accompanying them in the United States if comparable care is made available to a comparable number of United States military personnel in that foreign country.

Section 2110(k) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking "2001" and inserting "2006".

SEC. 345. GREAT LAKES LIGHTHOUSES.

(1) The Great Lakes are home to more than 400 lighthouses. 120 of these maritime landmarks are in the State of Michigan.

(2) Lighthouses are an important part of Great Lakes culture and stand as a testament to the importance of shipping in the region's political, economic, and social history.

(3) Advances in navigation technology have made many Great Lakes lighthouses obsolete. In Michigan alone, approximately 70 lighthouses will be designated as excess property of the Federal Government and will be transferred to the General Services Administration for disposal.

(4) Unfortunately, the Federal property disposal process is confusing, complicated, and not well-suited to disposal of historic lighthouses or to facilitate transfers to nonprofit organizations. This is especially troubling because, in many cases, local nonprofit historical organizations have dedicated tremendous resources to preserving and maintaining Great Lakes lighthouses.

(5) If Great Lakes lighthouses disappear, the public will be unaware of an important chapter in Great Lakes history.

(6) The National Trust for Historic Preservation has placed Michigan lighthouses on their list of Most Endangered Historic Places.

(b) ASSISTANCE FOR GREAT LAKES LIGHTHOUSE PRESERVATION EFFORTS.—The Secretary of Transportation, acting through the Coast Guard, shall—

(1) continue to offer advice and technical assistance to organizations in the Great Lakes region that are dedicated to lighthouse stewardship; and

(2) promptly release information regarding the timing of designations of Coast Guard lighthouses on the Great Lakes as excess to the needs of the Coast Guard, to enable those organizations to mobilize and be prepared to take appropriate action with respect to the disposal of those properties.

SEC. 346. MODERNIZATION OF NATIONAL DISTRESS AND RESPONSE SYSTEM.

(a) REPORT.—The Secretary of Transportation shall prepare a status report on the modernization of the National Distress and Response System and transmit the report, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter until completion of the project, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives.

(b) CONTENTS.—The report required by subsection (a) shall—

(1) set forth the scope of the modernization, the schedule for completion of the System, and information on progress in meeting the schedule and on any anticipated delays;

(2) specify the funding expended to-date on the System, the funding required to complete the System, and the purposes for which the funds were or will be expended;

(3) describe and map the existing public and private communications coverage throughout the waters of the coastal and internal regions of the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Caribbean, and identify locations that possess direction-finding, asset-tracking communications, and digital selective calling service;

(4) identify areas of high risk to boaters and Coast Guard personnel due to communications gaps;

(5) specify steps taken by the Secretary to fill existing gaps in coverage, including obtaining direction-finding equipment, digital recording systems, asset-tracking communications, use of commercial VHF services, and digital selective calling services that meet or exceed Global Maritime Distress and Safety System requirements adopted under the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea;

(6) identify the number of VHF–FM radios equipped with digital selective calling sold to United States boaters;

(7) list all reported marine accidents, casualties, and fatalities occurring in areas with existing communications gaps or failures, including incidents associated with gaps in VHF–FM coverage or digital selected calling capabilities and failures associated with inadequate communications equipment aboard the involved vessels during calendar years 1997 forward;

(8) identify existing systems available to close identified marine safety gaps before January 1, 2003, including expeditious receipt and response by appropriate Coast Guard operations centers to VHF–FM digital selective calling distress signal; and

(9) identify actions taken to-date to implement the recommendations of the National Transportation Safety Board in its Report No. MAR–99–01.

(a) AUTHORITY TO CONVEY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation, or a designee of the Secretary, may convey to the Gulf of Maine Aquarium Development Corporation, its successors and assigns, without payment for consideration, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to approximately 4.13 acres of land, including a pier and bulkhead, known as the Naval Reserve Pier property, together with any improvements thereon in their then current condition, located in Portland, Maine. All conditions placed with the deed of title shall be construed as covenants running with the land.

(2) IDENTIFICATION OF PROPERTY.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Commandant of the Coast Guard, may identify, describe, and determine the property to be conveyed under this section. The floating docks associated with or attached to the Naval Reserve Pier property shall remain the personal property of the United States.

(b) LEASE TO THE UNITED STATES.—

(1) CONDITION OF CONVEYANCE.—The Naval Reserve Pier property shall not be conveyed until the Corporation enters into a lease agreement with the United States, the terms of which are mutually satisfactory to the Commandant and the Corporation, in which the Corporation shall lease a portion of the Naval Reserve Pier property to the United States for a term of 30 years without payment of consideration. The lease agreement shall be executed within 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) IDENTIFICATION OF LEASED PREMISES.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Commandant, may identify and describe the leased premises and rights of access, including the following, in order to allow the Coast Guard to operate and perform missions from and upon the leased premises:

(A) The right of ingress and egress over the Naval Reserve Pier property, including the pier and bulkhead, at any time, without notice, for purposes of access to Coast Guard vessels and performance of Coast Guard missions and other mission-related activities.

(B) The right to berth Coast Guard cutters or other vessels as required, in the moorings along the east side of the Naval Reserve Pier property, and the right to attach floating docks which shall be owned and maintained at the United States' sole cost and expense.

(C) The right to operate, maintain, remove, relocate, or replace an aid to navigation located upon, or to install any aid to navigation upon, the Naval Reserve Pier property as the Coast Guard, in its sole discretion, may determine is needed for navigational purposes.

(D) The right to occupy up to 3,000 gross square feet at the Naval Reserve Pier property for storage and office space, which will be provided and constructed by the Corporation, at the Corporation's sole cost and expense, and which will be maintained, and utilities and other operating expenses paid for, by the United States at its sole cost and expense.

(E) The right to occupy up to 1,200 gross square feet of offsite storage in a location other than the Naval Reserve Pier property, which will be provided by the Corporation at the Corporation's sole cost and expense, and which will be maintained, and utilities and other operating expenses paid for, by the United States at its sole cost and expense.

(F) The right for Coast Guard personnel to park up to 60 vehicles, at no expense to the government, in the Corporation's parking spaces on the Naval Reserve Pier property or in parking spaces that the Corporation may secure within 1,000 feet of the Naval Reserve Pier property or within 1,000 feet of the Coast Guard Marine Safety Office Portland. Spaces for no less than 30 vehicles shall be located on the Naval Reserve Pier property.

(3) RENEWAL.—The lease described in paragraph (1) may be renewed, at the sole option of the United States, for additional lease terms.

(4) LIMITATION ON SUBLEASES.—The United States may not sublease the leased premises to a third party or use the leased premises for purposes other than fulfilling the missions of the Coast Guard and for other mission related activities.

(5) TERMINATION.—In the event that the Coast Guard ceases to use the leased premises, the Secretary, in consultation with the Commandant, may terminate the lease with the Corporation.

(c) IMPROVEMENT OF LEASED PREMISES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Naval Reserve Pier property shall not be conveyed until the Corporation enters into an agreement with the United States, subject to the Commandant's design specifications, project's schedule, and final project approval, to replace the bulkhead and pier which connects to, and provides access from, the bulkhead to the floating docks, at the Corporation's sole cost and expense, on the east side of the Naval Reserve Pier property within 30 months from the date of conveyance. The agreement to improve the leased premises shall be executed within 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) FURTHER IMPROVEMENTS.—In addition to the improvements described in paragraph (1), the Commandant may to further improve the leased premises during the lease term, at the United States sole cost and expense.

(d) UTILITY INSTALLATION AND MAINTENANCE OBLIGATIONS.—

(1) UTILITIES.—The Naval Reserve Pier property shall not be conveyed until the Corporation enters into an agreement with the United States to allow the United States to operate and maintain existing utility lines and related equipment, at the United States sole cost and expense. At such time as the Corporation constructs its proposed public aquarium, the Corporation shall replace existing utility lines and related equipment and provide additional utility lines and equipment capable of supporting a third 110-foot Coast Guard cutter, with comparable, new, code compliant utility lines and equipment at the Corporation's sole cost and expense, maintain such utility lines and related equipment from an agreed upon demarcation point, and make such utility lines and equipment available for use by the United States, provided that the United States pays for its use of utilities at its sole cost and expense. The agreement concerning the operation and maintenance of utility lines and equipment shall be executed within 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) MAINTENANCE.—The Naval Reserve Pier property shall not be conveyed until the Corporation enters into an agreement with the United States to maintain, at the Corporation's sole cost and expense, the bulkhead and pier on the east side of the Naval Reserve Pier property. The agreement concerning the maintenance of the bulkhead and pier shall be executed within 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) AIDS TO NAVIGATION.—The United States shall be required to maintain, at its sole cost and expense, any Coast Guard active aid to navigation located upon the Naval Reserve Pier property.

(e) ADDITIONAL RIGHTS.—The conveyance of the Naval Reserve Pier property shall be made subject to conditions the Secretary considers necessary to ensure that—

(1) the Corporation shall not interfere or allow interference, in any manner, with use of the leased premises by the United States; and

(2) the Corporation shall not interfere or allow interference, in any manner, with any aid to navigation nor hinder activities required for the operation and maintenance of any aid to navigation, without the express written permission of the head of the agency responsible for operating and maintaining the aid to navigation.

(f) REMEDIES AND REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—The Naval Reserve Pier property, at the option of the Secretary, shall revert to the United States and be placed under the administrative control of the Secretary, if, and only if, the Corporation fails to abide by any of the terms of this section or any agreement entered into under subsection (b), (c), or (d) of this section.

(g) LIABILITY OF THE PARTIES.—The liability of the United States and the Corporation for any injury, death, or damage to or loss of property occurring on the leased property shall be determined with reference to existing State or Federal law, as appropriate, and any such liability may not be modified or enlarged by this title or any agreement of the parties.

(h) EXPIRATION OF AUTHORITY TO CONVEY.—The authority to convey the Naval Reserve property under this section shall expire 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

(i) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) AID TO NAVIGATION.—The term "aid to navigation" means equipment used for navigational purposes, including but not limited to, a light, antenna, sound signal, electronic navigation equipment, cameras, sensors power source, or other related equipment which are operated or maintained by the United States.

(2) Corporation.—The term "Corporation" means the Gulf of Maine Aquarium Development Corporation, its successors and assigns.

SEC. 348. HARBOR SAFETY COMMITTEES.

(a) Study.—The Coast Guard shall study existing harbor safety committees in the United States to identify—

(1) strategies for gaining successful cooperation among the various groups having an interest in the local port or waterway;

(2) organizational models that can be applied to new or existing harbor safety committees or to prototype harbor safety committees established under subsection (b);

(3) technological assistance that will help harbor safety committees overcome local impediments to safety, mobility, environmental protection, and port security; and

(4) recurring resources necessary to ensure the success of harbor safety committees.

(b) Prototype Committees.—The Coast Guard shall test the feasibility of expanding the harbor safety committee concept to small and medium-sized ports that are not generally served by a harbor safety committee by establishing 1 or more prototype harbor safety committees. In selecting a location or locations for the establishment of a prototype harbor safety committee, the Coast Guard shall—

(1) consider the results of the study conducted under subsection (a);

(2) consider identified safety issues for a particular port;

(3) compare the potential benefits of establishing such a committee with the burdens the establishment of such a committee would impose on participating agencies and organizations;

(4) consider the anticipated level of support from interested parties; and

(5) take into account such other factors as may be appropriate.

(c) Effect on Existing Programs and State Law.—Nothing in this section—

(1) limits the scope or activities of harbor safety committees in existence on the date of enactment of this Act;

(2) precludes the establishment of new harbor safety committees in locations not selected for the establishment of a prototype committee under subsection (b); or

(3) preempts State law.

(d) Nonapplication of FACA.—The Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 App. U.S.C.) does not apply to harbor safety committees established under this section or any other provision of law.

(e) Harbor Safety Committee Defined.—In this section, the term "harbor safety committee" means a local coordinating body—

(1) whose responsibilities include recommending actions to improve the safety of a port or waterway; and

(2) the membership of which includes representatives of government agencies, maritime labor, maritime industry companies and organizations, environmental groups, and public interest groups.

SEC. 349. MISCELLANEOUS CONVEYANCES.

(a) Authority To Convey.—

(1) In general.—The Secretary of Transportation may convey, by an appropriate means of conveyance, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to each of the following properties:

(A) Coast Guard Slip Point Light Station, located in Clallam County, Washington, to Clallam County, Washington.

(B) The parcel of land on which is situated the Point Piños Light, located in Monterey County, California, to the city of Pacific Grove, California.

(2) Identification of property.—The Secretary may identify, describe, and determine the property to be conveyed under this subsection.

(3) Limitation.—The Secretary may not under this section convey—

(A) any historical artifact, including any lens or lantern, located on the property at or before the time of the conveyance; or

(B) any interest in submerged land.

(b) General Terms and Conditions.—

(1) In general.—Each conveyance of property under this section shall be made—

(A) without payment of consideration; and

(B) subject to the terms and conditions required by this section and other terms and conditions the Secretary may consider appropriate, including the reservation of easements and other rights on behalf of the United States.

(2) Reversionary interest.—In addition to any term or condition established under this section, each conveyance of property under this section shall be subject to the condition that all right, title, and interest in the property shall immediately revert to the United States, if—

(A) the property, or any part of the property—

(i) ceases to be available and accessible to the public, on a reasonable basis, for educational, park, recreational, cultural, historic preservation, or other similar purposes specified for the property in the terms of conveyance;

(ii) ceases to be maintained in a manner that is consistent with its present or future use as a site for Coast Guard aids to navigation or compliance with this title; or

(iii) ceases to be maintained in a manner consistent with the conditions in paragraph (4) established by the Secretary pursuant to the National Historic Preservation Act (16 U.S.C. 470 et seq.); or

(B) at least 30 days before that reversion, the Secretary provides written notice to the owner that the property is needed for national security purposes.

(3) Maintenance of navigation functions.—Each conveyance of property under this section shall be made subject to the conditions that the Secretary considers to be necessary to assure that—

(A) the lights, antennas, and associated equipment located on the property conveyed, which are active aids to navigation, shall continue to be operated and maintained by the United States for as long as they are needed for this purpose;

(B) the owner of the property may not interfere or allow interference in any manner with aids to navigation without express written permission from the Commandant;

(C) there is reserved to the United States the right to relocate, replace, or add any aid to navigation or make any changes to the property conveyed as may be necessary for navigational purposes;

(D) the United States shall have the right, at any time, to enter the property without notice for the purpose of operating, maintaining and inspecting aids to navigation, and for the purpose of enforcing compliance with this subsection; and

(E) the United States shall have an easement of access to and across the property for the purpose of maintaining the aids to navigation in use on the property.

(4) Maintenance of property.—(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the owner of a property conveyed under this section shall maintain the property in a proper, substantial, and workmanlike manner, and in accordance with any conditions established by the conveying authority pursuant to the National Historic Preservation Act (16 U.S.C. 470 et seq.), and other applicable laws.

(B) The owner of a property conveyed under this section is not required to maintain any active aid to navigation equipment on the property, except private aids to navigation permitted under section 83 of title 14, United States Code.

(c) Special Terms and Conditions.—The Secretary may retain all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to any portion of any parcel referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(1) Aids to navigation.—The term "aids to navigation" means equipment used for navigation purposes, including a light, antenna, radio, sound signal, electronic navigation equipment, or other associated equipment which are operated or maintained by the United States.

(2) Commandant.—The term "Commandant" means the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

(3) Owner.—The term "owner" means, for a property conveyed under this section, the person identified in subsection (a)(1) of the property, and includes any successor or assign of that person.

(4) Secretary.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation.

TITLE IV—OMNIBUS MARITIME IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Omnibus Maritime and Coast Guard Improvements Act of 2002".

SEC. 402. EXTENSION OF COAST GUARD HOUSING AUTHORITIES.

(a) Housing Contractors.—Section 681(a) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by inserting ", including a small business concern qualified under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a))," after "private persons".

(b) Budget Authority Limitation.—Section 687(f) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking "$20,000,000" and inserting "$40,000,000".

"(g) Demonstration Project Authorized.—To promote efficiencies through the use of alternative procedures for expediting new housing projects, the Secretary—

"(1) may develop and implement a Demonstration Project for acquisition or construction of military family housing and military unaccompanied housing at the Coast Guard installation at Kodiak, Alaska;

"(2) in implementing the Demonstration Project shall utilize, to the maximum extent possible, the contracting authority of the Small Business Administration's section 8(a) program;

"(3) shall, to the maximum extent possible, acquire or construct such housing through contracts with small business concerns qualified under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)) that have their principal place of business in the State of Alaska; and

"(4) shall report to Congress by September 1 of each year on the progress of activities under the Demonstration Project.".

(d) Extension.—Section 689 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking "2001" and inserting "2006".

SEC. 403. INVENTORY OF VESSELS FOR CABLE LAYING, MAINTENANCE, AND REPAIR.

(a) INVENTORY.—The Secretary of Transportation shall develop, maintain, and periodically update an inventory of vessels that are documented under chapter 121 of title 46, United States Code, are 200 feet or more in length, and have the capability to lay, maintain, or repair a submarine cable, without regard to whether a particular vessel is classified as a cable ship or cable vessel.

(b) VESSEL INFORMATION.—For each vessel listed in the inventory, the Secretary shall include in the inventory—

(1) the name, length, beam, depth, and other distinguishing characteristics of the vessel;

(2) the abilities and limitations of the vessel with respect to the laying, maintaining, and repairing of a submarine cable; and

(3) the name and address of the person to whom inquiries regarding the vessel may be made.

(c) PUBLICATION.—The Secretary shall—

(1) not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register a current inventory developed under subsection (a); and

(2) every six months thereafter, publish an updated inventory.

SEC. 404. VESSEL ESCORT OPERATIONS AND TOWING ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except in the case of a vessel in distress, only a vessel of the United States (as that term is defined in section 2101 of title 46, United States Code) may perform the following vessel escort operations and vessel towing assistance within the navigable waters of the United States:

(1) Operation or assistance that commences or terminates at a port or place in the United States.

(2) Operation or assistance required by United States law or regulation.

(3) Operation provided in whole or in part for the purpose of escorting or assisting a vessel within or through navigation facilities owned, maintained, or operated by the United States Government or the approaches to such facilities, other than facilities operated by the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation on the St. Lawrence River portion of the Seaway.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

(1) the term "towing assistance" means operation by an assisting vessel in direct contact with an assisted vessel (including hull-to-hull, by towline, including if only pretethered, or made fast to that vessel by one or more lines) for purposes of exerting force on the assisted vessel to control, or to assist in controlling, the movement of the assisted vessel; and

(2) the term "escort operations" means accompanying a vessel for the purpose of providing towing or towing assistance to the vessel.

(c) PENALTY.—A person violating this section is liable to the United States Government for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day during which the violation occurs.

SEC. 405. SEARCH AND RESCUE CENTER STANDARDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of chapter 17 the following new section:

"§ 676. Search and rescue center standards

"(a) The Secretary shall establish, implement, and maintain the minimum standards necessary for the safe operation of all Coast Guard search and rescue center facilities, including with respect to the following:

"(1) The lighting, acoustics, and temperature in the facilities.

"(2) The number of individuals on a shift in the facility assigned search and rescue responsibilities (including communications), which may be adjusted based on seasonal workload.

"(3) The length of time an individual may serve on watch to minimize fatigue, based on the best scientific information available.

"(4) The scheduling of individuals having search and rescue responsibilities to minimize fatigue of the individual when on duty in the facility.

"(5) The workload of each individual engaged in search and rescue responsibilities in the facility.

"(6) Stress management for the individuals assigned search and rescue responsibilities in the facilities.

"(7) The design of equipment and facilities to minimize fatigue and enhance search and rescue operations.

"(8) Any other requirements that the Secretary believes will increase the safe operation of the search and rescue centers.

"(b) An individual on duty or watch in a Coast Guard search and rescue center facility, including a communications center, may not work more than 12 hours in a 24-hour period except in an emergency.".

(b) APPLICATION.—Section 676(b) of title 14, United States Code (as enacted by subsection (a) of this section) shall apply beginning on July 1, 2002.

(c) PRESCRIPTION OF STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall prescribe the standards required under section 676(a) of title 14, United States Code, as enacted by subsection (a) of this section, before July 1, 2002.

"676. Search and rescue center standards.".

SEC. 406. VHF COMMUNICATIONS SERVICES.

The Secretary of Transportation may authorize a person providing commercial VHF communications services to place commercial VHF communications equipment on real property under the administrative control of the Coast Guard (including towers) subject to any terms agreed to by the parties. The Secretary and that commercial VHF communications service provider also may enter into an agreement providing for VHF communications services to the Coast Guard (including digital selective calling and radio direction finding services) at a discounted rate or price based on providing such access to real property under the administrative control of the Coast Guard. Nothing in the section shall affect the rights or obligations of the United States under section 704(c) of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 (47 U.S.C. 332 note) with respect to the availability of property, or under section 359(d) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 357(d)) with respect to charges for transmission of distress messages.

SEC. 407. LOWER COLUMBIA RIVER MARITIME FIRE AND SAFETY ACTIVITIES.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation not more than $987,400 for lower Columbia River marine, fire, oil, and toxic spill response communications, training, equipment, and program administration activities conducted by the Maritime Fire and Safety Association, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 408. CONFORMING REFERENCES TO THE FORMER MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES COMMITTEE.

(a) LAWS CODIFIED IN TITLE 14, UNITED STATES CODE.—(1) Section 194(b)(2) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking "Merchant Marine and Fisheries" and inserting "Transportation and Infrastructure".

(2) Section 663 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking "Merchant Marine and Fisheries" and inserting "Transportation and Infrastructure".

(3) Section 664 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking "Merchant Marine and Fisheries" and inserting "Transportation and Infrastructure".

(b) LAWS CODIFIED IN TITLE 33, UNITED STATES CODE.—(1) Section 3(d)(3) of the International Navigational Rules Act of 1977 (33 U.S.C. 1602(d)(3)) is amended by striking "Merchant Marine and Fisheries" and inserting "Transportation and Infrastructure".

(2) Section 5004(2) of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (33 U.S.C. 2734(2)) is amended by striking "Merchant Marine and Fisheries" and inserting "Transportation and Infrastructure".

SEC. 409. RESTRICTION ON VESSEL DOCUMENTATION.

(1) amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2) was built in the United States;";

(2) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3);

(3) inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) was not forfeited to the United States Government after July 1, 2001, for a breach of the laws of the United States; and"; and

(4) redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5).

SEC. 410. HYPOTHERMIA PROTECTIVE CLOTHING REQUIREMENT.

The Commandant of the Coast Guard shall ensure that all Coast Guard personnel are equipped with adequate safety equipment, including hypothermia protective clothing where appropriate, while performing search and rescue missions.

SEC. 411. RESERVE OFFICER PROMOTIONS.

(a) Section 729(i) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by inserting "on the date a vacancy occurs, or as soon thereafter as practicable, in the grade to which the officer was selected for promotion, or if promotion was determined in accordance with a running mate system," after "grade".

(b) Section 731(b) of title 14, United States Coast Code, is amended by striking the period at the end of the sentence and inserting ", or in the event that promotion is not determined in accordance with a running mate system, then a Reserve officer becomes eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade at the beginning of the promotion year in which he or she completes the following amount of service computed from the date of rank in the grade in which he or she is serving:

"(1) two years in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade);

"(2) three years in the grade of lieutenant;

"(3) four years in the grade of lieutenant commander;

"(4) four years in the grade of commander; and

"(5) three years in the grade of captain.".

(c) Section 736(a) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by inserting "the date of rank shall be the date of appointment in that grade, unless the promotion was determined in accordance with a running mate system, in which event" after "subchapter,".

SEC. 412. REGULAR LIEUTENANT COMMANDERS AND COMMANDERS; CONTINUATION UPON FAILURE OF SELECTION FOR PROMOTION.

Section 285 of title 14, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "Each officer" and inserting "(a) Each officer"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b) A lieutenant commander or commander of the Regular Coast Guard subject to discharge or retirement under subsection (a) may be continued on active duty when the Secretary directs a selection board convened under section 251 of this title to continue up to a specified number of lieutenant commanders or commanders on active duty. When so directed, the selection board shall recommend those officers who in the opinion of the board are best qualified to advance the needs and efficiency of the Coast Guard. When the recommendations of the board are approved by the Secretary, the officers recommended for continuation shall be notified that they have been recommended for continuation and offered an additional term of service that fulfills the needs of the Coast Guard.

"(c)(1) An officer who holds the grade of lieutenant commander of the Regular Coast Guard may not be continued on active duty under subsection (b) for a period that extends beyond 24 years of active commissioned service unless promoted to the grade of commander of the Regular Coast Guard. An officer who holds the grade of commander of the Regular Coast Guard may not be continued on active duty under subsection (b) for a period that extends beyond 26 years of active commissioned service unless promoted to the grade of captain of the Regular Coast Guard.

"(2) Unless retired or discharged under another provision of law, each officer who is continued on active duty under subsection (b) but is not subsequently promoted or continued on active duty, and is not on a list of officers recommended for continuation or for promotion to the next higher grade, shall, if eligible for retirement under any provision of law, be retired under that law on the first day of the first month following the month in which the period of continued service is completed.".

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 21 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 709 the following new section:

"§709a. Reserve student pre-commissioning assistance program

"(a) The Secretary may provide financial assistance to an eligible enlisted member of the Coast Guard Reserve, not on active duty, for expenses of the member while the member is pursuing on a full-time basis at an institution of higher education a program of education approved by the Secretary that leads to—

"(1) a baccalaureate degree in not more than five academic years; or

"(2) a post-baccalaureate degree.

"(b)(1) To be eligible for financial assistance under this section, an enlisted member of the Coast Guard Reserve must—

"(A) be enrolled on a full-time basis in a program of education referred to in subsection (a) at any institution of higher education; and

"(B) enter into a written agreement with the Coast Guard described in paragraph (2).

"(2) A written agreement referred to in paragraph (1)(B) is an agreement between the member and the Secretary in which the member agrees—

"(A) to accept an appointment as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard Reserve, if tendered;

"(B) to serve on active duty for up to five years; and

"(C) under such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary, to serve in the Coast Guard Reserve until the eighth anniversary of the date of the appointment.

"(c) Expenses for which financial assistance may be provided under this section are—

"(1) tuition and fees charged by the institution of higher education involved;

"(2) the cost of books;

"(3) in the case of a program of education leading to a baccalaureate degree, laboratory expenses; and

"(4) such other expenses as deemed appropriate by the Secretary.

"(d) The amount of financial assistance provided to a member under this section shall be prescribed by the Secretary, but may not exceed $25,000 for any academic year.

"(e) Financial assistance may be provided to a member under this section for up to five consecutive academic years.

"(f) A member who receives financial assistance under this section may be ordered to active duty in the Coast Guard Reserve by the Secretary to serve in a designated enlisted grade for such period as the Secretary prescribes, but not more than four years, if the member—

"(1) completes the academic requirements of the program and refuses to accept an appointment as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard Reserve when offered;

"(2) fails to complete the academic requirements of the institution of higher education involved; or

"(3) fails to maintain eligibility for an original appointment as a commissioned officer.

"(g)(1) If a member requests to be released from the program and the request is accepted by the Secretary, or if the member fails because of misconduct to complete the period of active duty specified, or if the member fails to fulfill any term or condition of the written agreement required to be eligible for financial assistance under this section, the financial assistance shall be terminated. The member shall reimburse the United States in an amount that bears the same ratio to the total cost of the education provided to such person as the unserved portion of active duty bears to the total period of active duty such person agreed to serve. The Secretary shall have the option to order such reimbursement without first ordering the member to active duty. An obligation to reimburse the United States imposed under this paragraph is for all purposes a debt owed to the United States.

"(2) The Secretary may waive the service obligated under subsection (f) of a member who is not physically qualified for appointment and who is determined to be unqualified for service as an enlisted member of the Coast Guard Reserve due to a physical or medical condition that was not the result of the member's own misconduct or grossly negligent conduct.

"(3) A discharge in bankruptcy under title 11 that is entered less than 5 years after the termination of a written agreement entered into under subsection (b) does not discharge the individual signing the agreement from a debt arising under such agreement or under paragraph (1).

"(h) As used in this section, 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given that term in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The analysis at the beginning of chapter 21 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new item after the item relating to section 709:

"709a. Reserve student pre-commissioning assistance program.".

SEC. 414. CONTINUATION ON ACTIVE DUTY BEYOND THIRTY YEARS.

Section 289 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h) Notwithstanding subsection (g) and section 288 of this title, the Commandant may by annual action retain on active duty from promotion year to promotion year any officer who would otherwise be retired under subsection (g) or section 288 of this title. An officer so retained, unless retired under some other provision of law, shall be retired on June 30 of that promotion year in which no action is taken to further retain the officer under this subsection.".

SEC. 415. PAYMENT OF DEATH GRATUITIES ON BEHALF OF COAST GUARD AUXILIARISTS.

Section 823a(b) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following new paragraph following paragraph (8):

"(9) On or after January 1, 2001, Public Law 104–208, section 651.".

(A) by striking "severance" in the section heading and inserting "separation"; and

"(b) An officer of the Regular Coast Guard who is discharged under this section or section 282, 283, or 284 of this title who has completed 6 or more, but less than 20, continuous years of active service immediately before that discharge or release is entitled to separation pay computed under subsection (d)(1) of section 1174 of title 10.

"(c) An officer of the Regular Coast Guard who is discharged under section 327 of this title, who has completed 6 or more, but less than 20, continuous years of active service immediately before that discharge or release is entitled to separation pay computed under subsection (d)(1) or (d)(2) of section 1174 of title 10 as determined under regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

"(d) Notwithstanding subsections (a) or (b), an officer discharged under chapter 11 of this title for twice failing of selection for promotion to the next higher grade is not entitled to separation pay under this section if the officer requested in writing or otherwise sought not to be selected for promotion, or requested removal from the list of selectees.'';

(4) in section 286a—

(A) by striking "severance" in the section heading and inserting "separation" in its place; and

(B) by striking subsections (a), (b), and (c) and inserting the following:

"(a) A regular warrant officer of the Coast Guard who is discharged under section 580 of title 10, and has completed 6 or more, but less than 20, continuous years of active service immediately before that discharge is entitled to separation pay computed under subsection (d)(1) of section 1174 of title 10.

"(b) A regular warrant officer of the Coast Guard who is discharged under section 1165 or 1166 of title 10, and has completed 6 or more, but less than 20, continuous years of active service immediately before that discharge is entitled to separation pay computed under subsection (d)(1) or (d)(2) of section 1174 of title 10, as determined under regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

"(c) In determining a member's years of active service for the purpose of computing separation pay under this section, each full month of service that is in addition to the number of full years of service creditable to the member is counted as one-twelfth of a year and any remaining fractional part of a month is disregarded."; and

(5) in section 327—

(B) by striking subsection (a)(2) and inserting in its place the following:

"(2) for discharge with separation benefits under section 286(c) of this title.";

(C) by striking subsection (a)(3);

"(2) if on that date the officer is ineligible for voluntary retirement under any law, be honorably discharged with separation benefits under section 286(c) of this title, unless under regulations promulgated by the Secretary the condition under which the officer is discharged does not warrant an honorable discharge."; and

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 11 of title 14, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in the item relating to section 281, by striking "three" and inserting "five" in its place; and

(2) in the item relating to section 286, by striking "severance" and inserting "separation" in its place;

(3) in the item relating to section 286a, by striking "severance" and inserting "separation" in its place; and

(4) in the item relating to section 327, by striking "severance" and inserting "separation" in its place.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) shall take effect four years after the date of enactment of this Act, except that subsection (d) of section 286 of title 14, United States Code, as amended by paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this section shall take effect on enactment of this Act and shall apply with respect to conduct on or after that date. The amendments made to the table of sections of chapter 11 of title 14, United States Code, by paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (b) of this section shall take effect four years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 417. LONG-TERM LEASE AUTHORITY FOR LIGHTHOUSE PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 17 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end a new section 672b to read as follows:

"§ 672b. Long-term lease authority for lighthouse property

"(a) The Commandant of the Coast Guard may lease to non-Federal entities, including private individuals, lighthouse property under the administrative control of the Coast Guard for terms not to exceed 30 years. Consideration for the use and occupancy of lighthouse property leased under this section, and for the value of any utilities and services furnished to a lessee of such property by the Commandant, may consist, in whole or in part, of non-pecuniary remuneration including, but not limited to, the improvement, alteration, restoration, rehabilitation, repair, and maintenance of the leased premises by the lessee. Section 321 of chapter 314 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (40 U.S.C. 303b) shall not apply to leases issued by the Commandant under this section.

"(b) Amounts received from leases made under this section, less expenses incurred, shall be deposited in the Treasury.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 672 the following:

"672b. Long-term lease authority for lighthouse property.".

(2) in subsection (c)(1)(E) by striking "United States." and inserting "United States; and"; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (c)(1)(E) the following:

"(F) a vessel located in the contiguous zone of the United States, as defined in Presidential Proclamation 7219 of September 2, 1999, and (i) is entering the United States, (ii) has departed the United States, or (iii) is a hovering vessel as defined in 19 U.S.C. 1401(k).".

(b) The second section 3 of the Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Act (46 App. U.S.C. 1904) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "Any property"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) Practices commonly recognized as smuggling tactics may provide prima facie evidence of intent to use a vessel to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, an offense under this chapter, and may support seizure and forfeiture of the vessel, even in the absence of controlled substances aboard the vessel. The following indicia, inter alia, may be considered, in the totality of the circumstances, to be prima facie evidence that a vessel is intended to be used to commit, or to facilitate the commission of an offense under this chapter:

"(1) The construction or adaptation of the vessel in a manner that facilitates smuggling, including—

"(A) the configuration of the vessel to ride low in the water or present a low hull profile to avoid being detected visually or by radar;

"(B) the presence of any compartment or equipment which is built or fitted out for smuggling, not including items such as a safe or lock-box reasonably used for the storage of personal valuables:

"(C) the presence of an auxiliary tank not installed in accordance with applicable law, or installed in such a manner as to enhance the vessel's smuggling capability;

"(D) the presence of engines that are excessively over-powered in relation to the design and size of the vessel;

"(E) the presence of materials used to reduce or alter the heat or radar signature of the vessel and avoid detection;

"(F) the presence of a camouflaging paint scheme, or of materials used to camouflage the vessel, to avoid detection; or

"(G) the display of false vessel registration numbers, false indicia of vessel nationality, false vessel name, or false vessel homeport.

"(2) The presence or absence of equipment, personnel, or cargo inconsistent with the type or declared purpose of the vessel.

"(3) The presence of excessive fuel, lube oil, food, water, or spare parts, inconsistent with legitimate vessel operation, inconsistent with the construction or equipment of the vessel, or inconsistent with the character of the vessel's stated purpose.

"(4) The operation of the vessel without lights during times lights are required to be displayed under applicable law or regulation, and in a manner of navigation consistent with smuggling tactics used to avoid detection by law enforcement authorities.

"(5) The failure of the vessel to stop or respond or heave to when hailed by government authority, especially where the vessel conducts evasive maneuvering when hailed.

"(6) The declaration to government authority of apparently false information about the vessel, crew, or voyage, or the failure to identify the vessel by name or country of registration when requested to do so by government authority.

"(7) The presence of controlled substance residue on the vessel, on an item aboard the vessel, or on a person aboard the vessel, of a quantity or other nature which reasonably indicates manufacturing or distribution activity.

"(8) The use of petroleum products or other substances on the vessel to foil the detection of controlled substance residue.

"(9) The presence of a controlled substance in the water in the vicinity of the vessel, where given the currents, weather conditions, and course and speed of the vessel, the quantity or other nature is such that it reasonably indicates manufacturing or distribution activity.".

SEC. 419. WING-IN-GROUND CRAFT.

"(g) To the extent consistent with generally recognized practices and procedures of international law, this part applies to a foreign vessel involved in a marine casualty or incident, as defined in the International Maritime Organization Code for the Investigation of Marine Casualties and Incidents, where the United States is a Substantially Interested State and is, or has the consent of, the Lead Investigating State under the Code.".

SEC. 424. CONVEYANCE OF COAST GUARD PROPERTY IN HAMPTON TOWNSHIP, MICHIGAN.

(a) Requirement To Convey.—

(1) In general.—Notwithstanding any other law, the Secretary of Transportation (in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall convey to BaySail, Inc. (a nonprofit corporation established under the laws of the State of Michigan; in this section referred to as "BaySail"), without monetary consideration, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to property adjacent to Coast Guard Station Saginaw River, located in Hampton Township, Michigan, as identified under paragraph (2). No submerged lands may be conveyed under this section.

(2) Identification of property.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Commandant of the Coast Guard, shall identify, describe, and determine the property to be conveyed under this section.

(3) Survey.—The exact acreage and legal description of the property conveyed under paragraph (1), as identified under paragraph (2), and any easements or rights-of-way reserved by the United States under subsection (b), shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of the survey shall be borne by BaySail.

(b) Terms and Conditions of Conveyance.—The conveyance of property under this section shall be made subject to any terms and conditions the Secretary considers necessary, including the reservation of easements and other rights on behalf of the United States.

(c) Reversionary Interest.—

(1) In general.—During the 5-year period beginning on the date the Secretary makes the conveyance authorized by subsection (a), the real property conveyed pursuant to this section, at the option of the Secretary, shall revert to the United States and be placed under the administrative control of the Secretary, if—

(A) BaySail sells, conveys, assigns, exchanges, or encumbers the property conveyed or any part thereof;

(B) BaySail fails to maintain the property conveyed in a manner consistent with the terms and conditions under subsection (b);

(C) BaySail conducts any commercial activity at the property conveyed, or any part thereof, without approval of the Secretary; or

(D) at least 30 days before the reversion, the Secretary provides written notice to the owner that the property or any part thereof is needed for national security purposes.

(2) Additional period.—The Secretary may, before the completion of the 5-year period described in paragraph (1), authorize an additional 5-year period during which paragraph (1) shall apply.

SEC. 425. CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY IN TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN.

SEC. 429. ICEBREAKING SERVICES.

The Commandant of the Coast Guard shall not plan, implement, or finalize any regulation or take any other action which would result in the decommissioning of any WYTL-class harbor tugs unless and until the Commandant certifies in writing to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, that sufficient replacement capability has been procured by the Coast Guard to remediate any degradation in current icebreaking services that would be caused by such decommissioning.

SEC. 430. FISHING VESSEL SAFETY TRAINING.

(a) In General.—The Commandant of the Coast Guard may provide support, with or without reimbursement, to an entity engaged in fishing vessel safety training including—

(1) assistance in developing training curricula;

(2) use of Coast Guard personnel, including active duty members, members of the Coast Guard Reserve, and members of the Coast Guard Auxiliary, as temporary or adjunct instructors;

(3) sharing of appropriate Coast Guard informational and safety publications; and

(4) participation on applicable fishing vessel safety training advisory panels.

(b) No Interference With Other Functions.—In providing support under subsection (a), the Commandant shall ensure that the support does not interfere with any Coast Guard function or operation.

SEC. 431. LIMITATION ON LIABILITY OF PILOTS AT COAST GUARD VESSEL TRAFFIC SERVICES.

"§2307. Limitation of liability for Coast Guard Vessel Traffic Service pilots

"Any pilot, acting in the course and scope of his or her duties while at a United States Coast Guard Vessel Traffic Service, who provides information, advice, or communication assistance while under the supervision of a Coast Guard officer, member, or employee shall not be liable for damages caused by or related to such assistance unless the acts or omissions of such pilot constitute gross negligence or willful misconduct.".

"2307. Limitation of liability for Coast Guard Vessel Traffic Service pilots.".

SEC. 432. ASSISTANCE FOR MARINE SAFETY STATION ON CHICAGO LAKEFRONT.

(a) Assistance Authorized.—The Secretary of Transportation may use amounts authorized under this section to provide financial assistance to the City of Chicago, Illinois, to pay the Federal share of the cost of a project to demolish the Old Coast Guard Station, located at the north end of the inner Chicago Harbor breakwater at the foot of Randolph Street, and to plan, engineer, design, and construct a new facility at that site for use as a marine safety station on the Chicago lakefront.

(b) Cost Sharing.—

(1) Federal share.—The Federal share of the cost of a project carried out with assistance under this section may not exceed one third of the total cost of the project or $2,000,000, whichever is less.

(2) Non-federal share.—There shall not be applied to the non-Federal share of a project carried out with assistance under this section—

(A) the value of land and existing facilities used for the project; and

(B) any costs incurred for site work performed before the date of the enactment of this Act, including costs for reconstruction of the east breakwater wall and associated utilities.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to the other amounts authorized by this Act, for providing financial assistance under this section there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, to remain available until expended.

TITLE V—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE COAST GUARD

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Coast Guard Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002".

SEC. 502. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Funds are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2002 for necessary expenses of the Coast Guard, as follows:

(1) For the operation and maintenance of the Coast Guard, $4,205,838,000, of which—

(A) $25,000,000 is authorized to be derived from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund to carry out the purposes of section 1012(a)(5) of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990;

(B) $5,500,000 is authorized to be available for the commercial fishing vessel safety program; and

(C) $623,000,000 is authorized to be available for domestic maritime homeland security.

(2) For the acquisition, construction, rebuilding, and improvement of aids to navigation, shore and offshore facilities, vessels, and aircraft, including equipment related thereto, $717,823,000, of which—

(A) $20,000,000 is authorized to be derived from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund to carry out the purposes of section 1012(a)(5) of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990;

(B) $58,500,000 is authorized to be available for domestic maritime homeland security vessels and detection equipment; and

(C) $338,000,000 is authorized to be available to implement the Coast Guard's Integrated Deepwater System.

(3) For research, development, test, and evaluation of technologies, materials, and human factors directly relating to improving the performance of the Coast Guard's mission in support of search and rescue, aids to navigation, marine safety, marine environmental protection, enforcement of laws and treaties, ice operations, oceanographic research, and defense readiness, $21,722,000, to remain available until expended, of which $3,500,000 is authorized to be derived each fiscal year from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund to carry out the purposes of section 1012(a)(5) of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990.

(4) For retired pay (including the payment of obligations otherwise chargeable to lapsed appropriations for this purpose), payments under the Retired Serviceman's Family Protection and Survivor Benefit Plans, and payments for medical care of retired personnel and their dependents under chapter 55 of title 10, United States Code, $876,346,000.

(5) For alteration or removal of bridges over navigable waters of the United States constituting obstructions to navigation, and for personnel and administrative costs associated with the Bridge Alteration Program, $15,466,000, to remain available until expended, of which $1,750,000 may be available for a new Chelsea Street bridge in Boston, Massachusetts.

(6) For environmental compliance and restoration at Coast Guard facilities (other than parts and equipment associated with operations and maintenance), $16,927,000, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 503. AUTHORIZED LEVELS OF MILITARY STRENGTH AND TRAINING.

(a) ACTIVE DUTY STRENGTH.—The Coast Guard is authorized an end-of-year strength for active duty personnel of 44,000 as of September 30, 2002.

(1) For recruit and special training for fiscal year 2002, 1,500 student years.

(3) For professional training in military and civilian institutions for fiscal year 2002, 300 student years.

(4) For officer acquisition for fiscal year 2002, 1,000 student years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LoBIONDO) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) each will control 20 minutes.

Mr. LoBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Maritime Transportation Anti-terrorism Act of 2002; but I would also like to rise in appreciation for the chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LoBIONDO) for the work that he has done on this legislation, to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) for her work on this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I would suggest respectfully that this is about the best we can do at this time. It is badly needed, but I would also like to suggest that we have to make sure as we pass this legislation that the intent of what we are trying to do is implemented and does not go far beyond what we are suggesting in this legislation.

It is crucially important that our ports are protected, and we must protect them without interfering with commerce, and we will do so. One of the goals of this legislation is to make sure that we will have the ability to not only look at what is on our ships, what is inside our containers, but also the crews of those ships and those that work within our ports.

I would also like to suggest that a port is a likely target and we have to accept that fact. The disruption that would occur, the damage that would happen, the interference with our commerce, lord only knows how much devastation would occur. This bill is a step in the right direction. But, again, I must suggest, Madam Speaker, that what we do here is not necessarily the end result. It is the result of what the agencies do and how they work together.

I want to suggest respectfully that those agencies that have the responsibility, TSA, Immigration, Customs, et cetera, have a responsibility to work together and to share information together so we can make sure that we have a secure port system within our Nation. I hope the American people realize that this is an attempt to make sure that no ports will suffer what happened on September 11, that we will protect our constituencies, we will protect our trade, we will protect this great United States with this legislation.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Anti-Terrorist Act of 2002.

The events of September 11, 2001 have changed America forever. Every committee in Congress is examining the programs and policies within its jurisdiction to determine what they need to do to help protect the United States from terrorist acts. I just returned from a trip with the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON). We traveled to Russia, China and Korea, and in every single country I brought up the issue of port security. We are working hard to protect our ports and waterways, but we will not be able to do that without protecting and looking into the port of origin.

Each year 95 percent of the United States' imports and exports are moved by ships. U.S. consumers are dependent upon foreign oils for their gas in their cars. U.S. manufacturers are dependent on the just-in-time delivery system of container ships to resupply their manufacturing line. Each year thousands of Americans enjoy cruises out of the ports of my home State of Florida.

On October 3, 2001, I introduced H.R. 3013, the Port and Maritime Security Act of 2001. This legislation is very similar to S.1214 which passed the Senate in December. H.R. 3983 is similar to the approach contained in H.R. 3013. They both require assessments of our Nation's ports. They both require terminal security plans, and they both establish a new grant system to help ports and terminal operators to pay for security improvements.

I believe that H.R. 3983 will lead to a significant improvement in securing the international maritime transportation system from threat of terrorists and from being used to deliver a weapon of mass destruction to the United States.

In addition, H.R. 3983 contains the text of H.R. 3507, the Coast Guard Authorization Act for fiscal year 2002. This noncontroversial legislation passed the House on December 20. The leadership has added it to H.R. 3983 in order to facilitate a conference with the Senate with these matters. I fully support the inclusion of H.R. 3507. To me, the Coast Guard is homeland security, and I am glad to see that we are getting closer to providing them the resources they need to do their job. Working together with Customs and other agencies, we can begin to move forward in protecting our ports and waterways.

I would like to thank the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for the bipartisan efforts they have used to develop this legislation. I look forward to working closely with all of them as this bill moves into conference.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3983.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Anti-Terrorism Act of 2002. This bill establishes a comprehensive national system to increase anti-terrorism security for our ports and waterways. This legislation was developed to prevent a terrorist attack along our Nation's largest and perhaps our most vulnerable border.

Consisting of 95,000 miles of coastline with hundreds of ports, the United States' maritime industry contributes in excess of $742 billion to the gross domestic product each year. The goal of H.R. 3983 is to deter terrorist attacks against ocean shipping without adversely affecting the flow of U.S. commerce through our ports.

This bill is the second transportation security bill reported by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. H.R. 3983 was developed in a bipartisan manner in close cooperation with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and their staffs in response to the terrorists' threats to our ports and waterways. I appreciate their hard work in support for this important piece of legislation and thank them for the strong cooperation we have received during this bill.

H.R. 3983 requires the Coast Guard to conduct vulnerability assessments of U.S. ports. The results of the assessments will be used to implement a national maritime transportation planning system consisting of a comprehensive national plan, specific area plans, as well as local vessel and marine facility plans, all tailored to deter a catastrophic terrorist event to the greatest extent possible.

H.R. 3983 also establishes a requirement for the Coast Guard to assess the effectiveness of security systems in certain foreign ports and to deny entry to vessels from foreign ports that do not maintain effective security.

Under H.R. 3983, individuals who enter secure areas on vessels or facilities will be required to have transportation security cards issued by the Secretary of Transportation. The Secretary may only deny transportation security cards to an individual found to be a terrorist security risk.

The Maritime Transportation Anti-Terrorism Act authorizes $83 million annually in grants for enhanced facility security at U.S. ports for the next three fiscal years. These grants will help cover the cost of port anti-terrorism improvement and fund proof-of-concept projects to determine which technologies will improve port security the best.

Shipping containers are particularly adaptable to use by terrorists, and H.R. 3983 contains several provisions to include the security of containers. The bill requires the Under Secretary of Transportation to maintain a cargo tracking identification and screening system for shipping containers shipped to and from the United States directly through a foreign port. H.R. 3983 also requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish performance standards to enhance the physical security of shipping containers, including standards for container seals and locks.

Madam Speaker, this bill contains other important security enhancements concerning vessel crew and passenger manifests, Coast Guard sea marshals, vessel transponders, to track the movement of vessels in the United States water, and some other measures.

The committee amended H.R. 3983 to contain several additional security enhancements and other Coast Guard provisions previously passed by the House. The Coast Guard, as one of the Nation's five armed services, has a key role in homeland security, particularly as it relates to port security and defense readiness. These provisions strengthen the authority of the Coast Guard and the Department of Transportation to confront the terrorist threat that is facing us today.

Strong maritime homeland security requires a strong Coast Guard with the resources it needs to protect our Nation from the terrorist attack. The Coast Guard has proven to have done a magnificent job throughout our Nation's history, but we are all particularly proud of the job they have done since September 11, starting on that fateful day where they oversaw the evacuation of over a million people from Lower Manhattan. The Coast Guard can do their job in an exceptional way if we give them the resources necessary, the manpower, the operating dollars and the assets to do this job.

This bill will help us along that way. I urge all Members to support this important piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time.

Enactment of this Maritime Transportation Security Act, otherwise known as the Port Security bill, will close another hole in the security network of the United States, and a critical one.

We have already dealt effectively with aviation security, and implementation of provisions of that legislation is well underway; but we have 95,000 miles of coastline in the United States. Ninety-five percent of the volume of U.S. international trade, both inbound and outbound, comes by the water. We have to protect that coastline and our ports.

Our ports are major cities. Most of our cities were ports before they were cities. America has grown up around the water; 75 percent of the population of this Nation lives along the water, either the inland waterways or the coastal regions of the United States, including the Great Lakes; but we have not adequately protected our ports and our major cities against terrorist acts.

This legislation will move us in the right direction. It will create the processes by which the Coast Guard is the preeminent entity in protecting America's coastline, will take the steps, the inspections, set up the processes by which we will protect America's waterways, our ports, our coastal regions. But as in aviation security, there must be a continuum of security protection that will start with the shipper, with the product that is being shipped to the United States. It must be inspected. We must know what it is before it goes into the container and before that container goes on board a ship; and after it arrives in the United States, it must be again inspected to be sure that what was put on board the ship is actually what comes off that ship.

We have learned in aviation safety that there must be redundancy and overlapping systems that protect aviation safety, that make flying as safe as we know it; and so in security there must be an interlocking web of protective measures that begin from the origin of the shipment to its destination.

That is what we must provide in this legislation here and in the conference to come, as the chairman said. When we get this bill through conference, we want to make sure that it is the strongest protective measure that we can provide for our fellow citizens, not just those in the coastal regions but those in the inland cities to which cargo is destined.

I compliment the chairman of the full committee for working together with us on the minority side, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO), the chairman of the subcommittee, and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN), our ranking member on the subcommittee. Members have worked hard. Staff have worked hard. We have worked cooperatively in the best national interest to produce the best bill that we can foresee. I urge its enactment. I urge its passage.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3983, the "Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act of 2002". Last fall, Congress enacted critical legislation to help protect the aviation industry from terrorist attacks. Today, we move forward on legislation to help secure U.S. ports, vessels, and our intermodal transportation system from terrorist attack.

There are more than 95,000 miles of coastline in the United States. Over 6 million shipping containers arrive in the United States each year from foreign ports carrying goods that are vital for consumers and manufacturers. Virtually all of the oil imported into the United States arrives by ship. We are a nation dependent upon international shipping.

Yet this transportation system can also be used as a means of delivering a weapon of mass destruction to the heartland of America. It would be far easier for a country to put a nuclear bomb in a container and ship it to the United States and have it detonated by a Global Positioning System receiver, than it would be to build a missile system to deliver a nuclear warhead.

The task of securing America's seaports and the cargo we import against terrorist attack is a daunting task. One only has to look at the volume of illegal drugs imported each year by sea to see just how porous our borders are. However, it is a challenge we must address.

H.R. 3983 is modeled on the successfully implemented Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (OPA). OPA established a strong command and control system for emergencies. It clarified that there is ultimately one person to make the decision on how to clean up an oil spill, the Coast Guard on-scene coordinator. H.R. 3983 establishes a similar system to develop and implement plans to deter terrorist attacks on our ports, and on vessels operating in and out of our ports.

However, protecting the United States must begin overseas. By the time that a weapon of mass destruction in a container is delivered to a U.S. port on a ship it is too late. We must begin profiling and screening containers overseas—before cargo is loaded on a ship. H.R. 3983 requires shippers, carriers, and freight forwarders to provide the Transportation Security Administration with information on container contents, the inland truck and rail carriers, the consignee, and other information needed to analyze whether the container may pose a risk to the United States. This information must be provided at least 24 hours before the container is loaded on a ship bound for the United States. That will give our agencies sufficient time to profile the container and work with the foreign government to screen its contents, if that is necessary.

H.R. 3983 also helps protect our marine terminals by establishing a transportation security card system for those individuals that have "unescorted access" to marine facilities. The Department of Transportation currently envisions four levels of security access that can be granted by the card. Level 1 Access simply identifies a person as someone who can have unescorted access to the unsecured areas of a terminal. A Level 4 Access means a person has had a security background check to ensure that he or she is not a "terrorist security threat" and, therefore, that person may have access to areas in a terminal that could cause a catastrophic emergency. On vessels such as a passenger vessel, the bridge and engine room areas may also be designated as a secure area, to ensure that passengers do not try to take control of the vessel.

H.R. 3983 also contains the text of H.R. 3507, the Coast Guard Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002, which was passed by the House on December 20, 2001, under Suspension of the Rules. I am hopeful that this will allow the House and Senate to reach an agreement on a current authorization bill for the Coast Guard.

I would like to commend Chairman YOUNG, Subcommittee Chairman LOBIONDO, and Subcommittee Ranking Member BROWN for the cooperative effort that they have put forth to develop bipartisan port security legislation. Together, we will succeed in having meaningful legislation enacted this session to improve the security of the marine transportation system from terrorist acts.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Ms. HARMAN. Madam Speaker, as the representative of the Port of Los Angeles, the nation's busiest container port with more than 5.183 million container shipments last year, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act.

The attacks of September 11 underscored the vulnerability of our ports to potential acts of terrorism. The sheer volume of goods shipped in containers, their unsecure ports of origin, the volatility of many of the goods stored at ports, and the wide expanses which comprise our posts present terrorists with targets and conduits for terror and local officials and law enforcement with formidable challenges.

Given this threat, I first want to say how impressed I was at the speed with which the maritime agencies of our federal, state and local governments responded following September 11.

The women and men of the Coast Guard, Customs, INS, LA and San Pedro Police, the LA County Sheriff, Port Police, National Guard, reservists and auxiliary personnel, and other emergency responders demonstrated their coolness and professionalism in securing the Port of Los Angeles.

They showed unprecedented coordination and courage and, on behalf of the community, I want to extend a "thank you for a job well done". I would also like to give a very special acknowledgement to the leadership of Coast Guard Captain John Holmes, captain of the Port of Los Angeles/Long Beach.

The bill before us provides much-needed resources to the work of these first responders.

In addition to requiring new vulnerability assessments at our ports, the bill also requires the imposition of new transportation security cards for workers with access to secure areas at ports. I compliment the chairman and ranking member for working with maritime labor to ensure that background checks used in issuing the security cards target true risks and I echo the view that any information collected on workers be used solely for security purposes.

The bill also includes several provisions designed to reduce the ability of terrorists to use cargo containers to smuggle terrorists or weapons into the US. In particular, the bill requires security assessments at foreign ports.

But I want also to highlight container security and the need for effective supply chain security measures. Though not addressed in this bill, it is increasingly evident that supply chain security is critical to ensuring that the contents of container cargo are not tampered with during shipment.

Shipment, of course, does not begin with the placing for a container aboard a vessel but, rather with it being loaded—something that often occurs in another country far from the port of embarkation to the United States.

The bill requires the Transportation Department to develop performance standards for improving the physical security of containers, which should go well beyond seals and locks and include supply chain security. Some innovative tracking and detection technologies are under development and incorporating them in containers will further secure both cargo and our ports.

Madam Speaker, I strongly support this bill. It takes important steps in helping us secure our ports in the fight against terrorism.

The key factor to improved security is the dedication and hard work of thousands of workers employed in and around our ports. From the federal agencies involved to state and local law enforcement, port officials, vessel operators and crew, shippers, dock workers and truckers—security begins with their continued vigilance and I commend them for a job well done and am proud to help provide them with more tools to continue the job.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Anti-terrorism Act.

In the wake of September 11th we must ensure that we are showing vigilance on the topic of port security. Any attacks on our ports could cripple the country economically and disrupt our nation's trade.

Ports serve our key national interests by facilitating the flow of trade and supporting the mobilization and deployment of U.S. Armed Forces. 95% of overseas international trade enters or exits through our nation's ports. In the next twenty years, the amount of trade going through our ports is expected to double. Ports must continue to update and modernize their facilities, not only to accommodate this growth but to preserve their safety and security.

While I do support this legislation, I am concerned that it does not fully address meaningful container security. I believe that H.R. 3893 should mandate that port workers who receive containers inspect the outside seal on each container and that it require mandatory inspection for "empty" containers, which regularly move on and off ships each day.

I am proud to represent the Ports of Everett and Bellingham, both of which greatly contribute to the economic vitality of my district. Their presence makes port security an especially important issue to my constituents and myself. Again, Madam Speaker, I support H.R. 3983 and look forward to its speedy passage.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, which represents the next crucial step in improving America's transportation security. This bill coordinates various federal law enforcement efforts with local port authorities, provides better communications, and helps pay for technology upgrades and other security infrastructure at our ports.

This legislation is of particular importance to the 14 publicly owned deepwater seaports in the State of Florida, including Port Everglades, Port of Palm Beach, and Port of Miami in South Florida. The challenge of protecting against potential threats to security in Florida is unique due to the state's extensive coastline, vigorous international trade, and passenger cruise activities. Our geography dictates that we must be prepared as a front-line homeland defense point against terrorism, as well as illegal immigration, and drug trafficking.

Florida seaports represent some of the busiest bulk cargo and container ports in the nation, and improved security at our seaports is critical for protection of the state's citizens and millions of visitors, as well as the state's continued economic vitality.

The threat of terrorism and other crimes to Florida seaports has already been documented by the State of Florida as well as each of the Florida seaports. A 1999 state-commissioned study found that the Florida ports are highly vulnerable and recommended comprehensive seaport security plans at each Florida seaport. In 2000, the State of Florida enacted legislation mandating that such plans be undertaken.

As the Chairman of the Florida Congressional delegation, I am pleased that this bill does not penalize the Florida ports that have been pro-active in taking the necessary steps to improve security. A shining example of such a port is Port Everglades in my district. Even before September 11, Port Everglades had laid out a comprehensive security improvement plan. Since that day, the port has expedited its efforts, turning a 48 month plan to improve security into an impressive, 12 month, $25 million plan that is now halfway completed.

As one of the first House members to introduce seaport security legislation, and the sponsor of the companion to the bill that passed the Senate, I am gratified that the House is taking up this critically important issue. I would like to thank Chairman YOUNG for all his hard work to this point and I look forward to working with him further as we begin discussions with the other chamber. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Speaker, the United States has always been fortunate in its history to have two large oceans separating it from many of the troubles that exist elsewhere in the world. This has meant that until recently, the American Homeland had been protected from foreign hostilities for the better part of two centuries. However, the rise of global commerce in combination with a new type of foreign enemy now threatens to undermine this blissful pax americana. The United States has 95,000 miles of open shoreline. Along this breadth of shoreline are located 361 ports and into them pours six million marine containers annually. The scale of the shipping industry is simply stunning. Unfortunately, on any one of these ships or in any of the containers may be unexpected stowaways with deadly plans or weapons. Representing a coastal district in southwest Florida, I know first hand that the Coast Guard does a heroic job of watching over our borders. But they need help and they need it now. H.R. 3983 is a good first step in this direction. The bill requires that the Secretary of Transportation do a comprehensive review of our vulnerabilities and prepare plans to reduce risk of attack. Further, the bill requires a plan to better coordinate Federal, state, and local efforts in the prevention of maritime terrorism.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation that will help to better protect our Nation's shoreline and ports.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act.

I also rise to thank Chairman YOUNG, Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee Chairman LOBIONDO, and the subcommittee staff for all heir hard work on this bill.

In June of 2001, they agreed to work with the U.S. Coast Guard, the State of Illinois, the City of Chicago, and me on the project to improve safety and security along Chicago's lakefront. Needless to say, this project became significantly more important after the events of September 11th.

Thanks to the committee's cooperation and assistance, this bill authorizes funding for the construction of a Marine Safety Station on Chicago's lakefront.

This new Chicago Safety Station will house resources and personnel of the U.S. Coast Guard, the Chicago Marine Police, and the Illinois Department of Natural Resources Conservation Police. With Coast Guard, state, and city resources stretched thin by the need for heighted security in Chicago and other U.S. ports, this project will signficantly improve public safety and law enforcement efforts in one of the busiest recreational areas in the country.

On behalf of the City of Chicago, the State of Illinois, and all of us who enjoy Chicago's lakefront, I again want to thank the Chairman for working with me to bring this project to fruition.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act of 2002. I commend the work of the House Transportation Committee on port security, but I also want to clearly state that much more remains to be done to secure our coastal areas from maritime threats. As a representative of a district that includes parts of the Port of Houston, the nation's 2nd largest port, I am proud that this House has set aside jurisdictional squabbles and is taking this important action.

First, H.R. 3983 directs the Department of Transportation to conduct security assessments at every one of the nation's 361 seaports. The legislation authorizes $225 million in grants through 2005 to enhance port security. I would note that the Senate has passed port security legislation with a $1.1 billion grant program, and I support increasing the House number significantly in conference committee.

Central to H.R. 3983 is the provision directing the newly created Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to develop an identification and screening system for maritime cargo entering the United States. Currently the official papers accompanying cargo manifests are rampantly inaccurate, and I believe Congress needs to remain vigilant after the passage of this legislation to ensure that the TSA does, in fact, develop an effective system. Interests do exist that desire the least amount of accountability for international cargo, and they must not be allowed to derail TSA's regulatory action directed by this legislation.

In the end, I do not believe that it makes much difference whether the development of a cargo container tracking system is undertaken by TSA or the Customs Service, but it does make a difference if those who are more concerned with jurisdiction and turf are allowed to dominate the process at the expense of those who are singly committed to long-overdue security improvements at our nation's extremely busy international ports. I understand that the conference committee on port security legislation (H.R. 398/S. 1214) will be the decisive forum for this issue, and I urge all future conferees not to delay Congressional action on port security action any longer. If House and Senate committee jurisdictional disputes are allowed to delay maritime terrorism preparedness legislation, it will be a low point in Congressional behavior post-September 11th.

In addition to potential TSA and Customs involvement in new port security measures, this legislation also contains new port security initiatives for the U.S. Coast Guard (USCG), an admirable security force that I have worked closely with on a number of security issues in my district pre- and post-September 11th. I strongly support the provisions of H.R. 3983 establishing USCG anti-terrorism teams and "sea marshals," both of which will act as preventive and first response forces for maritime security. Provisions establishing port employee identification requirements for secure port areas and improved passenger and crew manifest notification are also vitally important. I am pleased that H.R. 3983 authorizes $5.9 billion for the USCG, over $800 million more than requested by the Administration in March, as a result of these new tasks and responsibilities the American people are entrusting to their Coast Guard.

Despite the port security progress promised by H.R. 3983, much work will still remain. The security assessments at 361 seaports will certainly uncover a myriad of unanticipated, but glaring needs around the country. The House bill is providing merely $623,000 in grant authority per port, whereas the Senate bill provides a healthier, but still likely inadequate $3,047,000 in grant authority per port.

As an example of how expensive this undertaking will be, mobile cargo container scanners cost roughly $1 million. Only the larger 18 ports in America currently have these devices and most of these ports only have one. In addition to a lack of screening equipment is a lack of Customs personnel necessary to thoroughly examine incoming cargo manifests for high-risk shipments and man the equipment to scan the cargo. Our port security gap is as simple as not enough equipment, men, and inspections. Improving this security situation will cost a large amount of money, probably even more than the $1.1 billion authorized in the Senate-passed legislation.

I applaud all those that have worked hard on port security legislation this year, especially the USCG, Customs, local law enforcement, and Port of Houston Authority personnel on active security duty in the Houston-Galveston area. I also encourage TSA, Customs, USCG to set aside any disputes and work together for the imperative common good of port security. However, Congress and the American people must not forget that much remains to be done. I implore future Congresses to continue to revisit the issue of maritime security to see that Congressional improvements, once enacted, are made, and that any new necessary improvements are vigorously pursued. I thank the Speaker, and urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3983.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3983, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3983.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PORT AND MARITIME SECURITY ACT OF 2001

Mr. LOBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1214) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to establish a program to ensure greater security for United States seaports, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

S. 1214

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Sec. 208. Enhanced crewmember identification.

TITLE I—PORT AND MARITIME SECURITY

SEC. 101. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) There are 361 public ports in the United States which have a broad range of characteristics, and all of which are an integral part of our Nation's commerce.

(2) United States ports conduct over 95 percent of United States overseas trade. Over the next 20 years, the total volume of imported and exported goods at ports is expected to more than double.

(3) The variety of trade and commerce that are carried out at ports has greatly expanded. Bulk cargo, containerized cargo, passenger transport and tourism, intermodal transportation systems, and complex domestic and international trade relationships have significantly changed the nature, conduct, and complexity of port commerce.

(4) The United States is increasingly dependent on imported energy for a substantial share of supply, and a disruption of supply would seriously harm consumers and our economy.

(5) The top 50 ports in the United States account for about 90 percent of all the cargo tonnage. Twenty-five United States ports account for 98 percent of all container shipments. Cruise ships visiting foreign destinations embark from 16 ports. Ferries in the United States transport 113,000,000 passengers and 32,000,000 vehicles per year.

(6) In the larger ports, the activities can stretch along a coast for many miles, including public roads within their geographic boundaries. The facilities used to support arriving and departing cargo are sometimes miles from the coast.

(7) Ports often are a major locus of Federal crime, including drug trafficking, cargo theft, and smuggling of contraband and aliens. The criminal conspiracies often associated with these crimes can pose threats to the people and critical infrastructures of port cities. Ports that accept international cargo have a higher risk of international crimes like drug and alien smuggling and trade fraud.

(8) Ports are often very open and exposed and, by the very nature of their role in promoting the free flow of commerce, are susceptible to large scale terrorism that could pose a threat to coastal, Great Lake, or riverain populations. Port terrorism could pose a significant threat to the ability of the United States to pursue its national security objectives.

(9) United States ports are international boundaries, however, unlike United States airports and land borders, United States ports receive no Federal funds for security infrastructure.

(10) Current inspection levels of containerized cargo are insufficient to counter potential security risks. Technology is currently not adequately deployed to allow for the nonintrusive inspection of containerized cargo. Additional promising technology is in the process of being developed that could inspect cargo in a nonintrusive and efficient fashion.

(12) Effective physical security and access control in ports is fundamental to deterring

(13) Securing entry points, open storage areas, and warehouses throughout the port, controlling the movements of trucks transporting cargo through the port, and examining or inspecting containers, warehouses, and ships at berth or in the harbor are all important requirements that should be implemented.

(14) Identification procedures for arriving workers are important tools to deter and prevent port cargo crimes, smuggling, and terrorist actions.

(15) On April 27, 1999, the President established the Interagency Commission on Crime and Security in United States Ports to undertake a comprehensive study of the nature and extent of the problem of crime in our ports, as well as the ways in which governments at all levels are responding.

(16) The Commission has issued findings that indicate the following:

(A) Frequent crimes in ports include drug smuggling, illegal car exports, fraud (including Intellectual Property Rights and other trade violations), and cargo theft.

(B) Data about crime in ports has been very difficult to collect.

(C) Internal conspiracies are an issue at many ports, and contribute to Federal crime.

(D) Intelligence and information sharing among law enforcement agencies needs to be improved and coordinated at many ports.

(E) Many ports do not have any idea about the threats they face from crime, terrorism, and other security-related activities because of a lack of credible threat information.

(F) A lack of minimum physical, procedural, and personnel security standards at ports and at terminals, warehouses, trucking firms, and related facilities leaves many ports and port users vulnerable to theft, pilferage, and unauthorized access by criminals.

(G) Access to ports and operations within ports is often uncontrolled.

(H) Coordination and cooperation between law enforcement agencies in the field is often fragmented.

(I) Meetings between law enforcement personnel, carriers, marine terminal operators, and port authorities regarding security are not being held routinely in the ports. These meetings could increase coordination and cooperation at the local level.

(J) Security-related equipment such as small boats, cameras, and vessel tracking devices is lacking at many ports.

(K) Detection equipment such as large-scale x-ray machines is lacking at many high-risk ports.

(L) A lack of timely, accurate, and complete manifest (including in-bond) and trade (entry, importer, etc.) data negatively impacts law enforcement's ability to function effectively.

(M) Criminal organizations are exploiting weak security in ports and related intermodal connections to commit a wide range of cargo crimes. Levels of containerized cargo volumes are forecasted to increase significantly, which will create more opportunities for crime while lowering the statistical risk of detection and interdiction.

(17) United States ports are international boundaries that—

(A) are particularly vulnerable to threats of drug smuggling, illegal alien smuggling, cargo theft, illegal entry of cargo and contraband;

(B) may present weaknesses in the ability of the United States to realize its national security objectives; and

(C) may serve as a vector or target for terrorist attacks aimed at the population of the United States.

(18) It is in the best interests of the United States—

(A) to be mindful that United States ports are international ports of entry and that the primary obligation for the security of international ports of entry lies with the Federal government;

(B) to be mindful of the need for the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce and the need to ensure the efficient movement of cargo in interstate and foreign commerce and the need for increased efficiencies to address trade gains;

(C) to increase United States port security by establishing a better method of communication amongst law enforcement officials responsible for port boundary, security, and trade issues;

(D) to formulate requirements for physical port security, recognizing the different character and nature of United States ports, and to require the establishment of security programs at ports;

(E) to provide financial incentives to help the States and private sector to increase physical security of United States ports;

(F) to invest in long-term technology to facilitate the private sector development of technology that will assist in the nonintrusive timely detection of crime or potential crime;

(G) to harmonize data collection on port-related and other cargo theft, in order to address areas of potential threat to safety and security;

(H) to create shared inspection facilities to help facilitate the timely and efficient inspection of people and cargo in United States ports;

(I) to improve Customs reporting procedures to enhance the potential detection of crime in advance of arrival or departure of cargoes; and

(J) to promote private sector procedures that provide for in-transit visibility and support law enforcement efforts directed at managing the security risks of cargo shipments.

SEC. 102. NATIONAL MARITIME SECURITY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

"(d) NATIONAL MARITIME SECURITY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a National Maritime Security Advisory Committee, comprised of not more than 21 members appointed by the Secretary. The Secretary may require that a prospective member undergo a background check or obtain an appropriate security clearance before appointment.

"(2) ORGANIZATION.—The Secretary—

"(A) shall designate a chairperson of the Advisory Committee;

"(B) shall approve a charter, including such procedures and rules as the Secretary deems necessary for the operation of the Advisory Committee;

"(C) shall establish a law enforcement subcommittee and, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, respectively, include as members of the subcommittee representatives from the Customs Service and the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

"(D) may establish other subcommittees to facilitate consideration of specific issues, including maritime and port security, border protection, and maritime domain awareness issues, the potential effects on national energy security, the United States economy, and the environment of disruptions of crude oil, refined petroleum products, liquified natural gas, and other energy sources; and

"(E) may invite the participation of other Federal agencies and of State and local government agencies of State, including law enforcement agencies, with an interest or expertise in anti-terrorism or maritime and port security and safety related issues.

"(3) MATERIAL AND MISSION SUPPORT.—In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary may accept contributions of funds, material, services, and the use of personnel and facilities from public or private entities, by contract or other arrangement, if the confidentiality of security-sensitive information is maintained and access to such information is limited appropriately. The Secretary shall deposit any funds accepted under this paragraph as miscellaneous receipts in the general fund of the Treasury.

"(4) FUNCTIONS.—The Advisory Committee shall—

"(A) advise, consult with, report to, and make recommendations to the Secretary on ways to enhance the security and safety of United States ports; and

"(B) provide advice and recommendations to the Secretary on matters related to maritime and port security and safety, including—

"(i) longterm solutions for maritime and port security issues;

"(ii) coordination of security and safety operations and information between and among Federal, State, and local governments and area and local port security committees and harbor safety committees;

"(iii) conditions for maritime security and safety loan guarantees and grants;

"(iv) development of a National Maritime Transportation Security Plan;

"(v) development and implementation of area and local maritime security plans;

"(vi) protection of port energy transportation facilities; and

"(vii) helping to ensure that the public and area and local port security committees are kept informed about maritime security enhancement developments.

"(5) TERMINATION.—The Advisory Committee shall terminate on September 30, 2005.".

(b) FUNDING FOR FYS 2003–2005.—Of the amounts made available under section 122(b) there may be made available to the Secretary of Transportation for activities of the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee established under section 7(d) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(d)) $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2005, such sums to remain available until expended.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FY 2002.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation $1,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 for activities of the Advisory Committee, such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 103. INITIAL SECURITY EVALUATIONS AND PORT VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENTS.

"(e) INITIAL SECURITY EVALUATIONS AND PORT VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) DEVELOPMENT OF STANDARDS.—The Secretary, in consultation with appropriate public and private sector officials and organizations, shall develop standards and procedures for conducting initial security evaluations and port vulnerability assessments.

“(2) INITIAL SECURITY EVALUATIONS.—The Secretary shall conduct an initial security evaluation of all port authorities, waterfront facilities, and public or commercial structures located within or adjacent to the marine environment. The Secretary shall consult the local port security committee while developing the initial security evaluation, and may require each port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment to submit security information for review by the local port security committee.

“(3) PORT VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENTS.—The Secretary shall review initial security evaluations and conduct a port vulnerability assessment for each port for which the Secretary determines such an assessment is appropriate. If a port vulnerability assessment has been conducted within 5 years by or on behalf of a port authority or marine terminal operator, and the Secretary determines that it was conducted in a manner that is generally consistent with the standards and procedures specified under this subsection, the Secretary may accept that assessment rather than conducting another port vulnerability assessment for that port.

“(4) REVIEW AND COMMENT OPPORTUNITY.—The Secretary shall make each initial security evaluation and port vulnerability assessment for a port available for review and comment by the local port security committee, officials of the port authority, marine terminal operator representatives, and representatives of other entities connected to or affiliated with maritime commerce or port security as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, based on the recommendations of the local port security committee.

“(5) UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE.—The Secretary shall ensure that all initial security evaluations, port vulnerability assessments, and any associated materials are properly safeguarded from unauthorized disclosure.

“(6) MATERIAL AND MISSION SUPPORT.—In carrying out responsibilities under this Act, the Secretary may accept contributions of funds, material, services, and the use of personnel and facilities from public and private entities by contract or other arrangement if the confidentiality of security-sensitive information is maintained and access to such information is limited appropriately. The Secretary shall deposit any funds accepted under this section as miscellaneous receipts in the general fund of the Treasury.”.

(b) FUNDING.—Of the amounts made available under section 122(b) there may be made available to the Secretary $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006 to carry out section 7(e) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(e)), such sums to remain available until expended.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $20,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 to carry out section 7(e) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(e)), such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 104. ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL PORT SECURITY COMMITTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7 of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226), as amended by section 103, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

“(f) LOCAL PORT SECURITY COMMITTEES.—

“(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish local port security committees.

“(2) FUNCTIONS.—A local port security committees established under this subsection shall—

“(A) help coordinate planning and other port security activities;

“(B) help make use of, and disseminate the information made available under this section;

“(C) make recommendations concerning initial security evaluations and port vulnerability assessments by identifying the unique characteristics of each port;

“(F) annually review maritime security plans for each local port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment; and

“(G) assist the Captain-of-the-Port in conducting a field security exercise at least once every 3 years to verify the effectiveness of one or more maritime security plans for a local port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment.

“(3) USE OF EXISTING COMMITTEES.—In establishing these local port security committees, the Secretary may use or augment any existing port or harbor safety committee or port readiness committee, if the membership of the port security committee includes representatives of—

“(A) the port authority or authorities;

“(B) Federal, State and local government;

“(C) Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies;

“(D) longshore labor organizations or transportation workers;

“(E) local port-related business officials or management organizations;

“(F) shipping companies, vessel owners, terminal owners and operators, truck, rail and pipeline operators, where such are in operation; and

“(G) other persons or organizations whose inclusion is deemed beneficial by the Captain of the Port or the Secretary.

“(4) CHAIR.—Each local port security committee shall be chaired by the Captain-of-the-Port.

“(5) JURISDICTION.—Each port may have a separate port security committee or, at the discretion of the Captain-of-the-Port, a Captain-of-the-Port zone may have a single port security committee covering all ports within that zone.

“(6) QUARTERLY MEETINGS.—The port security committee shall meet at least 4 times each year at the call of the Chairperson.

“(7) FACA NOT APPLICABLE.—The Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) does not apply to a port security committee established under this subsection.

“(8) MATERIAL AND MISSION SUPPORT.—In carrying out responsibilities under this Act, the Secretary may accept contributions of funds, material, services, and the use of personnel and facilities from public and private entities by contract or other arrangement if the confidentiality of security-sensitive information is maintained and access to such information is limited appropriately. The Secretary shall deposit any funds accepted under this section as miscellaneous receipts in the general fund of the United States Treasury.”.

(b) FUNDING.—Of the amounts made available under section 122(b) there may be made available to the Secretary $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006 to carry out section 7(f) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(f)), such sums to remain available until expended.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $5,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 and 2003 to carry out section 7(f) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(f)), such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 105. MARITIME FACILITY SECURITY PLANS.

“(g) MARITIME FACILITY SECURITY PLANS.—

“(1) REGULATIONS TO ESTABLISH REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, shall issue regulations establishing requirements for submission of a maritime facility security plan, as the Secretary determines necessary, by each port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment (as defined in section 2101(15) of title 46, United States Code). The Secretary shall ensure that the local port security committee is consulted in the development of a maritime facility security plan under those regulations.

“(2) PURPOSE; SPECIFICITY; CONTENT.—

“(A) PURPOSE.—A maritime facility security plan shall provide a law enforcement program and capability at the port that is adequate to safeguard the public and to improve the response to threats of crime and terrorism.

“(B) SPECIFICITY.—Notwithstanding other provisions of this Act, the Secretary may impose specific, or different requirements on individual ports, port authorities, marine terminal operators or other entities required to submit a maritime facility security plan under regulations promulgated under this subsection.

“(C) CONTENT.—A maritime facility security plan shall include—

“(i) provisions for establishing and maintaining physical security for port areas and approaches, including establishing, as necessary, controlled access areas and secure perimeters within waterfront facilities and other public or commercial structures located within or adjacent to the marine environment;

“(ii) provisions for establishing and maintaining procedural security for processing passengers, cargo, and crewmembers, and security for employees and service providers;

“(iii) a credentialing requirement to limit access to waterfront facilities and other public or commercial structures located within or adjacent to the marine environment, designed to ensure that only authorized individuals and service providers gain admittance;

“(iv) a credentialing requirement to limit access to controlled areas and security-sensitive information;

“(v) provisions for restricting vehicular access, as necessary, to designated port areas or facilities;

“(vi) provisions for restricting the introduction of firearms and other dangerous weapons, as necessary, to designated port areas or facilities;

“(vii) provisions for the use of appropriately qualified private security officers or qualified State, local, or private law enforcement personnel;

"(viii) procedures for evacuation of people from port areas in the event of a terrorist attack or other emergency;

"(ix) a process for assessment and evaluation of the safety and security of port areas before port operations are resumed after a terrorist attack or other emergency; and

"(x) any other information the Secretary requires.

"(3) INCORPORATION OF EXISTING SECURITY PLANS.—The Secretary may approve a maritime facility security plan, or an amendment to an existing program or plan, that incorporates—

"(A) a security program of a marine terminal operator tenant with access to a secured area of the port, under such conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate; or

"(B) a maritime facility security plan of a port authority that incorporates a State or local security program, policy, or law.

"(4) APPROVAL PROCESS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall review and approve or disapprove each maritime facility security plan submitted under regulations promulgated under this subsection.

"(B) RESUBMISSION OF DISAPPROVED PLANS.—If the Secretary disapproves a maritime facility security plan—

"(i) the Secretary shall notify the plan submitter in writing of the reasons for the disapproval; and

"(ii) the submitter shall submit a revised maritime facility security plan within 180 days after receiving the notification of disapproval.

"(5) PERIODIC REVIEW AND RESUBMISSION.—Whenever appropriate, but no less frequently than once every 5 years, each port authority, marine terminal operator or other entity required to submit a maritime facility security plan under regulations promulgated under this subsection shall review its plan, make necessary or appropriate revisions, and submit the results of its review and revised plan to the Secretary.

"(6) INTERIM SECURITY MEASURES.—The Secretary shall require each port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment, to implement any necessary security measures, including the establishment of a secure perimeter and positive access controls, until the maritime facility security plan for that port authority, waterfront facility operator, or operator of a public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment is approved.".

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $3,500,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to carry out section 7(g) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(g)), such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 106. EMPLOYMENT INVESTIGATIONS AND RESTRICTIONS FOR SECURITY-SENSITIVE POSITIONS.

Section 7 of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act, (33 U.S.C. 1226), as amended by section 105, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h) DESIGNATION OF CONTROLLED ACCESS AREAS; PROTECTION OF SECURITY-SENSITIVE INFORMATION; EMPLOYMENT INVESTIGATIONS AND CRIMINAL HISTORY RECORD CHECKS.—

"(1) ACCESS AREAS; RESTRICTED INFORMATION REGULATIONS.—The Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, shall prescribe regulations to—

"(A) require, as necessary, the designation of controlled access areas in the maritime facility security plan for each waterfront facility and other public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment; and

"(B) limit access to security-sensitive information, such as passenger and cargo manifests.

"(2) SCREENING; BACKGROUND CHECKS.—In prescribing access limitations under this section, the Secretary may—

"(A) require that persons entering or exiting secure, restricted, or controlled access areas undergo physical screening;

"(B) require appropriate escorts for persons without proper clearances or credentials; and

"(C) require employment investigations and criminal history record checks to ensure that individuals who have unrestricted access to controlled areas or have access to security-sensitive information do not pose a threat to national security or to the safety and security of maritime commerce.

"(3) DISQUALIFICATION FROM NEW OR CONTINUED EMPLOYMENT.—An individual may not be employed in a security-sensitive position at any waterfront facility or other public or commercial structure located within or adjacent to the marine environment if—

"(A) the individual does not meet other criteria established by the Secretary; or

"(B) a background investigation or criminal records check reveals that—

"(i) within the previous 7 years the individual was convicted, or found not guilty by reason of insanity of an offense described in paragraph (4); or

"(ii) within the previous 5 years was released from incarceration for committing an offense described in paragraph (4).

"(4) DISQUALIFYING OFFENSES.—The offenses referred to in paragraph (3)(B) are the following:

"(A) Murder.

"(B) Assault with intent to murder.

"(C) Espionage.

"(D) Sedition.

"(E) Treason.

"(F) Rape.

"(G) Kidnaping.

"(H) Unlawful possession, sale, distribution, importation, or manufacture of an explosive or weapon.

"(I) Extortion.

"(J) Armed or felony unarmed robbery.

"(K) Importation, manufacture, or distribution of, or intent to distribute, a controlled substance.

"(L) A felony involving a threat.

"(M) A felony involving willful destruction of property.

"(N) Smuggling.

"(O) Theft of property in the custody of the United States Customs Service.

"(P) Attempt to commit, or conspiracy to commit any of the offenses referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (O).

"(5) ALTERNATIVE ARRANGEMENTS.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), an individual may be employed in a security-sensitive position although that individual would otherwise be disqualified from such employment if the employer establishes alternate security arrangements acceptable to the Secretary.

"(6) APPEALS PROCESS.—The Secretary shall establish an appeals process under this section for individuals found to be ineligible for employment under paragraph (3) that includes notice and an opportunity for a hearing.

"(7) ACCESS TO DATABASES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary, but subject to existing or new procedural safeguards imposed by the Attorney General, the Secretary is authorized to access the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Integrated Automatic Fingerprinting Identification System, the Fingerprint Identification Record System, the Interstate Identification Index, the National Crime Identification System, and the Integrated Entry and Exit Data System for the purpose of conducting or verifying the results of any background investigation or criminal records check required by this subsection.

"(8) RESTRICTIONS ON USE AND MAINTENANCE OF INFORMATION.—

"(A) SECRETARY MAY GIVE RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION TO EMPLOYERS.—The Secretary may transmit the results of a background check or criminal records check to a port authority, marine terminal operator, or other entity the Secretary determines necessary for carrying out the requirements of this subsection.

"(B) FOIA NOT TO APPLY.—Information obtained by the Secretary under this subsection may not be made available to the public under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(C) CONFIDENTIALITY.—Except to the extent necessary to carry out this subsection, any information other than criminal acts or offenses constituting grounds for ineligibility for employment under paragraph (3) shall be maintained confidentially by the Secretary and may be used only for making determinations under this section.

"(9) EFFECTIVENESS AUDITS.—The Secretary shall provide for the periodic audit of the effectiveness of employment investigations and criminal history record checks required by this subsection.

"(10) USER FEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the Attorney General shall establish and collect reasonable fees to pay expenses incurred by the Federal government in carrying out any investigation, criminal history record check, fingerprinting, or identification verification services provided for under this subsection.

"(B) DEPOSIT OF AMOUNT RECEIVED.—Amounts received by the Attorney General or Secretary under this section shall be credited to the account in the Treasury from which the expenses were incurred as offsetting collections and shall be available to the Attorney General and the Secretary upon the approval of Congress.

"(11) SUBSECTION NOT IN DEROGATION OF OTHER AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this subsection restricts any agency, instrumentality, or department of the United States from exercising, or limits its authority to exercise, any other statutory or regulatory authority to initiate or enforce port security standards.".

SEC. 107. MARITIME DOMAIN AWARENESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a study on ways to enhance maritime domain awareness through improved collection and coordination of maritime intelligence and submit a report on the findings of that study to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

(b) SPECIFIC MATTERS TO BE ADDRESSED.—In the study, the Secretary shall—

(1) identify actions and resources necessary for multi-agency cooperative efforts to improve the maritime security of the United States;

(2) specifically address measures necessary to ensure the effective collection, dissemination, and interpretation of maritime intelligence and data, information resource management and database requirements, architectural measures for cross-agency integration, data sharing, correlation and safeguarding of data, and cooperative analysis to identify and effectively respond to threats to maritime security;

(3) estimate the potential costs of establishing and operating such a new or linked database and provides recommendations on what agencies should contribute to the cost of its operation;

(4) evaluate the feasibility of establishing a joint interagency task force on maritime intelligence;

(5) estimate of potential costs and benefits of utilizing commercial supercomputing platforms and data bases to enhance information collection and analysis capabilities across multiple Federal agencies; and

(6) provide a suggested time frame for the development of such a system or database.

(c) Participation of Other Agencies.—The Secretary shall consult with the Director of Central Intelligence, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Energy, the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and the heads of other departments and agencies as necessary and invite their participation in the preparation of the study and report required by subsection (a).

(d) Deadline.—The Secretary shall submit the report required by subsection (a) within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(e) Authorization of Appropriations.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $500,000 in fiscal year 2002 to carry out this section.

SEC. 108. INTERNATIONAL PORT SECURITY.

“CHAPTER 25. INTERNATIONAL PORT SECURITY.

“Sec.
“2502. Notifying foreign authorities.
“2503. Actions when ports not maintaining and carrying out effective security measures.
“2505. Suspensions.

“§ 2501. Assessment

“(a) In General.—At intervals the Secretary of Transportation considers necessary, the Secretary shall assess the effectiveness of the security measures maintained at—

“(1) a foreign port—

“(A) served by vessels of the United States;

“(B) from which foreign vessels serve the United States; or

“(C) that poses a high risk of introducing danger to United States ports and waterways, United States citizens, vessels of the United States or any other United States interests; and

“(2) any other foreign port the Secretary considers appropriate.

“(b) Procedures and Standards.—The Secretary shall conduct an assessment under subsection (a) of this section—

“(1) in consultation with appropriate authorities of the government of the foreign country concerned and operators of vessels of the United States serving the foreign port for which the Secretary is conducting the assessment;

“(2) to establish the extent to which a foreign port effectively maintains and carries out internationally recognized security measures; and

“(3) by using a standard based on the standards for port security and recommended practices of the International Maritime Organization and other appropriate international organizations.

“(1) the Secretary of State—

“(A) on the terrorist or relevant criminal threat that exists in each country involved; and

“(B) identify foreign ports that—

“(i) are not under the de facto control of the government of the foreign country in which they are located; and

“(ii) pose a high risk of introducing danger to international maritime commerce; and

“(2) the Secretary of the Treasury and coordinate any such assessment with the United States Customs Service.

“(a) Dissemination of Information About the Program.—The Secretary shall work with the Secretary of State to facilitate the dissemination of port security program information to port authorities and marine terminal operators in other countries.

“(b) Specific Notifications.—If the Secretary of Transportation, after conducting an assessment under section 2501, finds that a port does not maintain and carry out effective security measures, the Secretary, through the Secretary of State, shall notify the appropriate authorities of the government of the foreign country of the finding and recommend the steps necessary to bring the security measures in use at the port up to the standard used by the Secretary of Transportation in making the assessment.

“§ 2503. Actions when ports not maintaining and carrying out effective security measures

“(a) In General.—If the Secretary of Transportation finds that a port does not maintain and carry out effective security measures—

“(1) the Secretary shall—

“(A) in consultation with the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Agriculture, and the Attorney General, develop measures to protect the safety and security of United States ports from risks related to vessels arriving from a foreign port that does not maintain an acceptable level of security;

“(B) publish the identity of the port in the Federal Register;

“(C) have the identity of the port posted and displayed prominently at all United States ports at which scheduled passenger carriage is provided regularly to that port; and

“(D) require each United States and foreign vessel providing transportation between the United States and the port to provide written notice of the decision, on or with the ticket, to each passenger buying a ticket for transportation between the United States and the port;

“(2) the Secretary may, after consultation with the Secretaries of State and of the Treasury, prescribe conditions of port entry into the United States for any vessel arriving from a port determined under this subsection to maintain ineffective security measures, or any vessel carrying cargo originating from or transshipped through such a port, including refusing entry, inspection, or any other condition as the Secretary determines may be necessary to ensure the safety of United States ports and waterways; and

“(3) the Secretary may prohibit a United States or foreign vessel from providing transportation between the United States and any other foreign port that is served by vessels navigating to or from a port found not to maintain and carry out effective security measures.

“(b) Effective Date for Sanctions.—Any action taken by the Secretary under subsection (a) for a particular port shall take effect—

“(1) 90 days after the government of the foreign country with jurisdiction or control of that port is notified under section 2502 unless the Secretary finds that the government has brought the security measures at the port up to the standard the Secretary used in making an assessment under section 2501 before the end of that 90-day period; or

“(2) immediately upon the determination of the Secretary under subsection (a) if the Secretary finds, after consulting with the Secretary of State, that a condition exists that threatens the safety or security of passengers, vessels, or crew traveling to or from the port.

“(c) State Department To Be Notified.—The Secretary immediately shall notify the Secretary of State of a finding that a port does not maintain and carry out effective security measures so that the Secretary of State may issue a travel advisory.

“(d) Congressional Notification Required.—The Secretary promptly shall submit to Congress a report (and classified annex if necessary) identifying any port that the Secretary finds does not maintain and carry out effective security measures and describe any action taken under this section with regard to that port.

“(e) Action Canceled.—An action required under this section is no longer required if the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, decides that effective security measures are maintained and carried out at the port. The Secretary shall notify Congress when the action is no longer required.

“(a) In General.—Upon being notified by the Secretary of Transportation that the Secretary has determined that a condition exists that threatens the safety or security of passengers, passenger vessels, or crew traveling to or from a foreign port which the Secretary has determined under this chapter to be a port which does not maintain and administer effective security measures, the Secretary of State shall immediately issue a travel advisory with respect to the port. The Secretary of State shall take the necessary steps to publicize the travel advisory widely.

“(b) When Travel Advisory May Be Canceled.—The travel advisory required to be issued under subsection (a) of this section may be lifted only if the Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the Secretary of State, has determined that effective security measures are maintained and administered at the port with respect to which the Secretary of Transportation had made the determination.

"§ 2505. Suspensions

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The President, without prior notice or a hearing, shall suspend the right of any vessel of the United States, and the right of a person to trade with the United States, to provide foreign sea transportation, and the right of a person to operate vessels in foreign sea commerce, to or from a foreign port, if the President finds that—

"(1) a condition exists that threatens the safety or security of passengers, vessels, or crew traveling to or from that port; and

"(2) the public interest requires an immediate suspension of trade between the United States and that port.

"(b) DENIAL OF ENTRY.—If a person operates a vessel in violation of this section, the President may deny the vessels of that person entry to United States ports.

"(c) PENALTY FOR VIOLATION.—A person violating this section is liable to the United States Government for a civil penalty of not more than $50,000. Each day a vessel utilizes a prohibited port shall be a separate violation of this section.

"§ 2506. Acceptance of contributions; joint venture arrangements

"In carrying out responsibilities under this chapter, the Secretary may accept contributions of funds, material, services, and the use of personnel and facilities from public and private entities by contract or other arrangement if the confidentiality of security-sensitive information is maintained and access to such information is limited appropriately. The Secretary shall deposit any funds accepted under this section as miscellaneous receipts in the general fund of the United States Treasury.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle II of title 46, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following new item in part A after the item for chapter 23:

"25. International Port Security .... 2501".

(c) REPEALS.—Sections 902, 905, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, and 913 of the International Maritime and Port Security Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808, and 1809), are repealed.

(d) FOREIGN-FLAG VESSELS.—Within 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act and every year thereafter, the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall provide a report to the Committees on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and Foreign Relations of the Senate, and the Committees on Transportation and Infrastructure and International Relations of the House of Representatives that lists the following information:

(1) A list of all nations whose flag vessels have entered United States ports in the previous year.

(2) Of the nations on that list, a separate list of those nations—

(A) whose registered flag vessels appear as Priority III or higher on the Boarding Priority Matrix maintained by the Coast Guard;

(B) that have presented, or whose flag vessels have presented, false, intentionally incomplete, or fraudulent information to the United States concerning passenger or cargo manifests, crew identity or qualifications, or registration or classification of their flag vessels;

(C) whose vessel registration or classification procedures have been found by the Secretary to be noncompliant with international classifications or do not exercise adequate control over safety and security concerns; or

(D) whose laws or regulations are not sufficient to allow tracking of ownership and registration histories of registered flag vessels.

(3) Actions taken by the United States, whether through domestic action or international negotiation, including agreements at the International Maritime Organization under section 902 of the International Maritime and Port Security Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1801), to improve transparency and security of vessel registration procedures in nations on the list under paragraph (2).

(4) Recommendations for legislative or other actions needed to improve security of United States ports against potential threats posed by flag vessels of nations named in paragraph (2).

SEC. 109. COUNTER-TERRORISM AND INCIDENT CONTINGENCY PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in coordination with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, shall ensure that all area maritime counter-terrorism and incident contingency plans are reviewed, revised, and updated no less frequently than once every 3 years.

(b) LOCAL PORT SECURITY COMMITTEES.—The Secretary shall ensure that port security committees established under section 7(f) of the Ports and Maritime Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 2116(f)) are involved in the review, revision, and updating of the plans.

(c) SIMULATION EXERCISES.—The Secretary shall ensure that—

(1) simulation exercises are conducted annually for all such plans; and

(2) actual practice drills and exercises are conducted at least once every 3 years.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to carry out this section, such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 110. MARITIME SECURITY PROFESSIONAL TRAINING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) DEVELOPMENT OF STANDARDS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall develop standards and curriculum to allow for the training and certification of maritime security professionals. In developing these standards and curriculum, the Secretary shall consult with the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee established under section 7(d) of the Ports and Maritime Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 2116(d)).

(2) SECRETARY TO CONSULT ON STANDARDS.—In developing standards under this section, the Secretary may, without regard to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.), consult with the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, the United States Merchant Marine Academy's Global Maritime and Transportation School, the Maritime Security Council, the International Association of Airport and Port Police, the National Cargo Security Council, and any other Federal, State, or local government or law enforcement agency or private organization or individual determined by the Secretary to have pertinent expertise.

(b) MINIMUM STANDARDS.—The standards established by the Secretary under subsection (a) shall include the following elements:

(1) The training and certification of maritime security professionals in accordance with accepted law enforcement and security guidelines, policies, and procedures, including, as appropriate, recommendations for incorporating a background check process for personnel trained and certified in foreign ports.

(2) The training of students and instructors in all aspects of prevention, detection, investigation, and reporting of criminal activities in the international maritime environment.

(3) The provision of off-site training and certification courses and certified personnel at United States and foreign ports used by United States-flagged vessels, or by foreign-flagged vessels with United States citizens as passengers or crewmembers, to develop and enhance security awareness and practices.

(c) TRAINING PROVIDED TO LAW ENFORCEMENT AND SECURITY PERSONNEL.—The Secretary is authorized to make the training opportunities provided under this section available to any Federal, State, local, and private law enforcement or maritime security personnel in the United States or in foreign ports used by United States-flagged vessels with United States citizens as passengers or crewmembers.

(d) USE OF CONTRACT RESOURCES.—The Secretary shall employ existing Federal and contract resources to train and certify maritime security professionals in accordance with the standards and curriculum developed under this Act.

(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall transmit an annual report to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the expenditure of appropriated funds and the training under this section.

(f) FUNDING.—Of the amounts made available under section 122(b), there may be made available to the Secretary to carry out this section—

(1) $2,500,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004, and

(2) $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 and 2006,

such sums to remain available until expended.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this section—

(1) $5,500,000 for fiscal year 2002;

(2) $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004; and

(3) $2,500,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 and 2006.

SEC. 111. PORT SECURITY INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENT.

"TITLE XIV—PORT SECURITY INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENT

"SEC. 1401. LOAN GUARANTEES FOR PORT SECURITY INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation, subject to the terms the Secretary shall prescribe and after consultation with the United States Coast Guard, the United States Customs Service, and the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee established under section 102 of the Port and Maritime Security Act of 2001, may guarantee or make a commitment to guarantee the payment of the principal of, and the interest on, an obligation for port security infrastructure improvements for an eligible project at any United States port.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—Guarantees or commitments to guarantee under this section are subject to the extent applicable to all the laws, requirements, regulations, and procedures that apply to guarantees or commitments to guarantee made under title XI, except that—

"(1) guarantees or commitments to guarantee made under this section are eligible for not more than 87.5 percent of the actual cost of the security infrastructure improvement;

"(2) notwithstanding section 1104A(d), determination of economic soundness for a security infrastructure project shall be based upon the economic soundness of the applicant and not the project;

"(3) guarantees or commitments to guarantee may be made under this section to persons who are not citizens of the United States as defined in section 2 of the Shipping Act, 1916 (46 U.S.C. App. 802).

"(c) Transfer of Funds.—The Secretary may accept the transfer of funds from any other department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government and may use those funds to cover the cost (as defined in section 502 of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990 (2 U.S.C. 661a)) of making guarantees or commitments to guarantee loans entered into under this section.

"(d) Eligible Projects.—A project is eligible for a loan guarantee or commitment under subsection (a) if it is for the construction or acquisition of new security infrastructure that is—

"(1) equipment or facilities to be used for port security monitoring and recording;

"(2) security gates and fencing;

"(3) security-related lighting systems;

"(4) remote surveillance systems;

"(5) concealed video systems; or

"(6) other security infrastructure or equipment that contributes to the overall security of passengers, cargo, or crewmembers.

"SEC. 1402. GRANTS.

"(a) Financial Assistance.—The Secretary may provide financial assistance for eligible projects (within the meaning of section 1401(d)).

"(b) Matching Requirements.—

"(1) 75-percent federal funding.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), Federal funds for any eligible project under this section shall not exceed 75 percent of the total cost of such project.

"(2) Exceptions.—

"(A) Small projects.—There are no matching requirements for grants under subsection (a) for projects costing not more than $25,000.

"(B) Higher level of support required.—If the Secretary determines that a proposed project merits support and cannot be undertaken without a higher rate of Federal support, then the Secretary may approve grants under this section with a matching requirement other than that specified in paragraph (1).

"(c) Allocation.—The Secretary shall ensure that financial assistance provided under subsection (a) during a fiscal year is distributed so that funds are awarded for eligible projects that address emerging priorities or threats identified by the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee established under section 7(d) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(d)).

"(1) The name of the individual or entity responsible for conducting the project.

"(2) A comprehensive description of the need for the project, and a statement of the project's relationship to the security plan.

"(3) A description of the qualifications of the individuals who will conduct the project.

"(4) An estimate of the funds and time required to complete the project.

"(5) Evidence of support of the project by appropriate representatives of States or territories of the United States or other government jurisdictions in which the project will be conducted.

"(6) Information regarding the source and amount of matching funding available to the applicant, as appropriate.

"(7) Any other information the Secretary considers to be necessary for evaluating the eligibility of the project for funding under this title.

"SEC. 1403. ALLOCATION OF RESOURCES.

"In carrying out this title, the Secretary may ensure that not less than $2,000,000 in loans and loan guarantees under section 1401, and not less than $6,000,000 in grants under section 1402, are made available for eligible projects (as defined in section 1401(d)) located in any State to which reference is made by name in section 607 of this Act during each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006.".

(b) Annual Accounting.—The Secretary of Transportation shall submit an annual summary of loan guarantees and commitments to make loan guarantees under section 1401 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and grants made under section 1402 of that Act, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure and the Advisory Committee through appropriate media of communication, including the Internet.

(c) Funding.—Of amounts made available under section 122(b), there may be made available to the Secretary of Transportation—

(1) $9,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003, 2004, 2005, and 2006 as guaranteed loan costs (as defined in section 502(5) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990; 2 U.S.C. 661a(5)) under section 1401 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936,

(2) $10,000,000 for each of such fiscal years for grants under section 1402 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and

(3) $1,000,000 for each such fiscal year to cover administrative expenses related to loan guarantees under section 1401 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and grants under section 1402 of that Act, such amounts to remain available until expended.

(d) Additional Appropriations Authorized.—In addition to the amounts made available under subsection (c)(2), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation—

(1) $26,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to the Secretary as guaranteed loan costs (as defined in section 502(5) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990; 2 U.S.C. 661a(5)) under section 1401 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936;

(2) $70,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to the Secretary for grants under section 1402 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936; and

(3) $4,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to the Secretary to cover administrative expenses related to loan guarantees and grants under paragraphs (8) and (9),

SEC. 112. SCREENING AND DETECTION EQUIPMENT.

(a) Funding.—Of amounts made available under section 122(b), there may be made available to the Commissioner of Customs for the purchase of nonintrusive screening and detection equipment for use at United States ports—

(1) $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2003,

(2) $16,000,000 for fiscal year 2004,

(3) $18,000,000 for fiscal year 2005, and

(4) $19,000,000 for fiscal year 2006,

(b) Authorization of Appropriations.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commissioner $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to the Commissioner of Customs for the purchase of non-intrusive screening and detection equipment for use at United States ports, such sums to remain available until expended.

(c) Funding for Fiscal Year 2002.—There are authorized to be appropriated $145,000,000 for the United States Customs Service for fiscal year 2002 for 1,200 new customs inspector positions, 300 new customs agent positions, and other necessary port security positions, and for purchase and support of equipment (including camera systems for docks and vehicle-mounted computers), canine enforcement for port security, and to update computer systems to help improve customs reporting procedures.

SEC. 113. REVISION OF PORT SECURITY PLANNING GUIDE.

The Secretary of Transportation, acting through the Maritime Administration and after consultation with the Advisory Committee and the United States Coast Guard, shall publish a revised version of the document entitled "Port Security: A National Planning Guide", incorporating the requirements promulgated under section 7(g) of the Ports and Waterways Security Act (33 U.S.C. 2116(g)), within 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and make that revised document available on the Internet.

SEC. 114. SHARED DOCKSIDE INSPECTION FACILITIES.

(a) In General.—The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Transportation, the Attorney General, and the Administrator of the General Services Administration shall work with each other, the Advisory Committee, and the States to establish shared dockside inspection facilities at United States ports for Federal and State agencies.

(b) Funding.—Of the amounts made available under section 122(b), there may be made available to the Secretary of the Transportation, $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003, 2004, 2005, and 2006, such sums to remain available until expended, to establish shared dockside inspection facilities at United States ports in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Attorney General.

(c) Authorization of Appropriations.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation $1,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 to establish shared dockside inspection facilities at United States ports in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Attorney General.

SEC. 115. MANDATORY ADVANCED ELECTRONIC INFORMATION FOR CARGO AND PASSENGERS AND OTHER IMPROVED CUSTOMS REPORTING PROCEDURES.

(1) In general.—Section 431(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1431(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking "Any manifest" and inserting "(1) Any manifest"; and

"(2)(A) In addition to any other requirement under this section, for every land, air, or vessel carrier required to make entry or obtain clearance under the customs laws of the United States, the pilot, master, operator, or owner of such carrier (or the authorized agent of such owner or operator) shall provide by electronic transmission cargo manifest information described in subparagraph (B) in advance of such entry or clearance in such manner, time, and form as the Secretary shall prescribe. The Secretary may exclude any class of land, aircraft, or vessel for which he concludes the requirements of this subparagraph are not necessary.

"(i) The port of arrival or departure, whichever is applicable.

"(ii) The carrier code, prefix code, or both.

"(iii) The flight, voyage, or trip number.

"(iv) The date of scheduled arrival or date of scheduled departure, as the case may be.

"(v) The request for permit to proceed to the destination, if applicable.

"(vi) The numbers and quantities from the carrier's master air waybill, bills of lading, or ocean bills of lading.

"(viii) A description and weight of the cargo or, for a sealed container, the shipper's declared description and weight of the cargo.

"(ix) The shippers name and address from all air waybills and bills of lading.

"(x) The consignee's name and address from all air waybills and bills of lading.

"(xi) Notice that actual boarded quantities are not equal to air waybill or bills of lading quantities, except that a carrier is not required by this clause to verify boarded quantities of cargo in sealed containers.

"(xii) Transfer or transit information for the cargo while it has been under the control of the carrier.

"(xiii) Warehouse or other location of the cargo while it has been under the control of the carrier.

"(xiv) Any additional information that the Secretary by regulation determines is reasonably necessary to ensure aviation, maritime, and surface transportation safety pursuant to those laws enforced and administered by the Customs Service.

"(3) The Secretary by regulation shall require nonvessel operating common carriers to meet the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B).".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Subparagraphs (A) and (C) of section 431(d)(1) of such Act are each amended by inserting "or subsection (b)(2)" before the semicolon.

(b) DOCUMENTATION OF CARGO.—Part II of title IV of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after section 431 the following new section:

"SEC. 431A. DOCUMENTATION OF WATERBORNE CARGO.

"(a) APPLICABILITY.—This section shall apply to all cargo to be exported moving by a vessel common carrier from a port in the United States.

"(b) DOCUMENTATION REQUIRED.—(1) No shipper of cargo subject to this section (including an ocean transportation intermediary that is a nonvessel-operating common carrier (as defined in section 3(17)(B) of the Shipping Act of 1984 (46 U.S.C. App. 1702(17)(B)) may tender or cause to be tendered to a vessel common carrier cargo subject to this section for loading on a vessel in a United States port, unless such cargo is properly documented pursuant to this subsection.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, cargo shall be considered properly documented if the shipper submits to the vessel common carrier or its agent a complete set of shipping documents no later than 24 hours after the cargo is delivered to the marine terminal operator.

"(3) A complete set of shipping documents shall include—

"(A) for shipments for which a shipper's export declaration is required a copy of the export declaration or, if the shipper files such declarations electronically in the Automated Export system, the complete bill of lading, and the master or equivalent shipping instructions including the shipper's Automated Export System instructions; or

"(B) for those shipments for which a shipper's export declaration is not required, such other documents or information as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(4) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe the time, manner, and form by which shippers shall transmit documents or information required under this subsection to the Customs Service.

"(c) LOADING UNDOCUMENTED CARGO PROHIBITED.—

"(1) No marine terminal operator (as defined in section 3(14) of the Shipping Act of 1984 (46 U.S.C. App. 1702(14))) may load, or cause to be loaded, any cargo subject to this section on a vessel unless instructed by the vessel common carrier operating the vessel that such cargo has been properly documented in accordance with this section.

"(2) When cargo is booked by one vessel common carrier to be transported on the vessel of another vessel common carrier, the booking carrier shall notify the operator of the vessel that the cargo has been properly documented in accordance with this section. The operator of the vessel may rely on such notification in releasing the cargo for loading aboard the vessel.

"(d) REPORTING OF UNDOCUMENTED CARGO.—A vessel common carrier shall notify the United States Customs Service of any cargo tendered to such carrier that is not properly documented pursuant to this section and that has remained in the marine terminal for more than 48 hours after being delivered to the marine terminal, and the location of the cargo in the marine terminal. For vessel common carriers that are members of vessel sharing agreements (or any other arrangement whereby a carrier moves cargo on another carrier's vessel), the vessel common carrier accepting the booking shall be responsible for reporting undocumented cargo, without regard to whether it operates the vessel on which the transportation is to be made.

"(e) ASSESSMENT OF PENALTIES.—Whoever violates subsection (b) of this section shall be liable to the United States for civil penalties in a monetary amount up to the value of the cargo, or the actual cost of the transportation, whichever is greater.

"(f) SEIZURE OF UNDOCUMENTED CARGO.—

"(1) Any cargo that is not properly documented pursuant to this section and has remained in the marine terminal for more than 48 hours after being delivered to the marine terminal operator shall be subject to search, seizure, and forfeiture.

"(2) The shipper of any such cargo is liable to the marine terminal operator and to the ocean carrier for demurrage and other applicable charges for any undocumented cargo which has been notified to or searched or seized by the Customs Service for the entire period the cargo remains under the order and direction of the Customs Service. The marine terminal operator and the ocean carrier shall have a lien on the cargo for the amount of the demurrage and other charges.

"(g) EFFECT ON OTHER PROVISIONS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed, interpreted, or applied to relieve or excuse any party from compliance with any obligation or requirement arising under any other law, regulation, or order with regard to the documentation or carriage of cargo.".

(c) PASSENGER INFORMATION.—Part II of title IV of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by subsection (b), is further amended by inserting after section 431A the following new section:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For each person arriving or departing on an air or land carrier or vessel required to make entry or obtain clearance under the customs laws of the United States, the pilot, master, operator, or owner of such carrier (or the authorized agent of such owner or operator) shall provide by electronic transmission manifest information described in subsection (b) in advance of such entry or clearance in such manner, time, and form as the Secretary shall prescribe.

"(b) INFORMATION DESCRIBED.—The information described in this subsection shall include for each person:

"(1) Full name.

"(2) Date of birth and citizenship.

"(3) Gender.

"(4) Passport number and country of issuance.

"(5) United States visa number or resident alien card number, as applicable.

"(6) Passenger name record.

"(7) Such additional information that the Secretary, by regulation, determines is reasonably necessary to ensure aviation and maritime safety pursuant to the laws enforced or administered by the Customs Service.".

(d) DEFINITION.—Section 401 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(t) LAND, AIR, AND VESSEL CARRIER.—The terms 'land carrier', 'air carrier', and 'vessel carrier' mean a carrier that transports by land, air, or water, respectively, goods or passengers for payment or other consideration, including money or services rendered.

"(u) VESSEL COMMON CARRIER.—The term 'vessel common carrier' has the meaning given the term 'ocean common carrier' in section 3(16) of the Shipping Act of 1984 (46 U.S.C. App. 1702(16)) and the term 'common carrier by water in interstate commerce' as defined in section 1 of the Shipping Act, 1916 (46 U.S.C. App. 801).".

(e) OTHER REQUIREMENTS FOR IMPROVED REPORTING PROCEDURES.—In addition to the promulgation of manifesting information, the United States Customs Service shall improve reporting of goods arriving at United States ports—

(1) by promulgating regulations to require, notwithstanding sections 552 and 553 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1552 and 1553), at such times as Customs may require prior to the arrival of an in-bond movement of goods at the initial port of unlading, that—

(A) information shall be filed electronically identifying the consignor, consignee, country of origin, and the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States 6-digit classification of the goods; and

(B) such information shall be to the best of the filer's knowledge, and shall not be considered the entry for the goods under section 484 of that Act (19 U.S.C. 1484) or subject to section 592 or 595a of that Act (19 U.S.C. 1592 or 1595a); and

(2) by distributing the information reported under the regulations promulgated under paragraph (1) or section 431(b)(2), 431A, or 431B of the Tariff Act of 1930 on a real-time basis to any Federal, State, or local government agency that has a regulatory or law-enforcement interest in the goods.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) through (d) of this section shall take effect 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(g) PILOT PROGRAM FOR PRECLEARING INBOUND SHIPMENTS OF WATERBORNE CARGO.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Commissioner of Customs determines that information from a pilot program for inspecting, monitoring, tracking, and preclearing inbound shipments of waterborne cargo would improve the security and safety of ports, the Commissioner may develop and implement such a pilot program.

(2) PROGRAM CHARACTERISTICS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any such pilot program shall—

(i) take into account, and may be organized on the basis of, prearrival information that commercial vessels entering the territorial waters of the United States or destined for United States ports are required to transmit under section 431 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1431) and the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1221 et seq.); and

(ii) be designed to meet the requirements of United States customs laws and other laws regulating the importation of goods into the United States and to accommodate mechanisms for the collection of applicable duties upon entry or removal from warehouse of such goods.

(B) CUSTOMS CLEARANCE WAIVER.—The Commissioner may grant a waiver of any United States Customs Service post-arrival clearance requirement for goods inspected, monitored for security and integrity in transit, tracked, and precleared under any such pilot program.

(3) CONSULTATION WITH OTHER INTERESTED AGENCIES.—In developing and implementing a pilot program under paragraph (1) the Commissioner of Customs shall consult with representatives of other Federal agencies with responsibilities related to the entry of commercial goods into the United States to ensure that those agencies' missions are not compromised by the preclearance.

(4) PILOT PROGRAM TO BE TESTED AT MULTIPLE PORTS.—Any such pilot program developed and implemented by the Commissioner may be conducted at several different ports in a manner that permits analysis and evaluation of different technologies and takes into account different kinds of goods and ports with different harbor, infrastructure, climatic, geographical, and other characteristics.

(5) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS.—Within a year after a pilot program is implemented under paragraph (1), the Commissioner of Customs shall transmit a report to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure that—

(A) evaluates the pilot program and its components;

(B) states the Commissioner's view as to whether any procedure, system, or technology evaluated as part of the program offers a higher level of security than requiring imported goods to clear customs under existing procedures;

(C) states the Commissioner's view as to the integrity of the procedures, technology, or systems evaluated as part of the pilot program;

(D) makes a recommendation with respect to whether the pilot program, or any procedure, system, or technology should be incorporated in a nationwide system for preclearance of imports of waterborne goods;

(E) describes the impact of the pilot program on staffing levels at the Customs Service and the potential effect full implementation of the program on a nationwide basis would have on Customs Service staffing level; and

(F) states the Commissioner's views as to whether there is a method by which the United States could validate foreign ports so that cargo from those ports is preapproved for United States Custom Service purposes on arrival at United States ports.

SEC. 116. PREARRIVAL MESSAGES FROM VESSELS DESTINED TO UNITED STATES PORTS.

(1) by striking "environment" in section 2(a) (33 U.S.C. 1221(a)) and inserting "environment, and the safety and security of United States ports and waterways,";

(2) by striking paragraph (5) of section 4(a) (33 U.S.C. 1223(a)) and inserting the following:

"(5) require—

"(A) the receipt of pre-arrival messages from any vessel destined for a port or place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(B) the message to include any information the Secretary determines to be necessary for the control of the vessel and the safety and security of the port, waterways, facilities, vessels, and marine environment; and

"(C) the message to be transmitted in electronic form, or otherwise as determined by the Secretary, in sufficient time to permit review before the vessel's entry into port, and deny port entry to any vessel that fails to comply with the requirements of this paragraph.";

(3) by striking "environment" in section 5(a) (33 U.S.C. 1224(a)) and inserting "environment, and the safety and security of United States ports and waterways,"; and

"Nothing in this section interferes with the Secretary's authority to require information under section 4(a)(5) before a vessel's arrival in a port or place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.".

SEC. 117. MARITIME SAFETY AND SECURITY TEAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To enhance the domestic maritime security capability of the United States, the Secretary shall establish such maritime safety and security teams as are needed to safeguard the public and protect vessels, harbors, ports, waterfront facilities, and cargo in waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States from destruction, loss or injury from crime, or sabotage due to terrorist activity, and to respond to such activity in accordance with security plans developed under section 7 of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 2116).

(b) MISSION.—Each maritime safety and security team shall be trained, equipped and capable of being employed to—

(1) deter, protect against, and rapidly respond to threats of maritime terrorism;

(2) enforce moving or fixed safety or security zones established pursuant to law;

(3) conduct high speed intercepts;

(4) board, search, and seize any article or thing on a vessel or waterfront facility found to present a risk to the vessel, facility or port;

(5) rapidly deploy to supplement United States armed forces domestically or overseas;

(6) respond to criminal or terrorist acts within the port so as to minimize, insofar as possible, the disruption caused by such acts;

(7) assist with port vulnerability assessments required under this Act; and

(8) carry out other such missions as are assigned to it in support of the goals of this Act.

(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES.—To the maximum extent feasible, each maritime safety and security team shall coordinate its activities with other Federal, State, and local law enforcement and emergency response agencies.

SEC. 118. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT FOR CRIME AND TERRORISM PREVENTION AND DETECTION TECHNOLOGY.

(a) GRANT PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Advisory Committee, shall establish a grant program to fund eligible projects for the development, testing, and transfer of technology to enhance security at United States ports with respect to security risks, including—

(A) explosives or firearms;

(B) weapons of mass destruction;

(C) chemical and biological weapons;

(D) drug and illegal alien smuggling;

(E) trade fraud; and

(F) other criminal activity.

(2) MATCHING FUNDS REQUIRED.—The maximum amount of any grant of funds made available under the program to a participant other than a department or agency of the United States for a technology development project may not exceed 75 percent of costs of that project.

(b) ELIGIBLE PROJECTS.—A project is eligible for a grant under subsection (a) if it is for the construction, acquisition, testing, or deployment of surveillance equipment and technology capable of preventing or detecting terrorist or other criminal activity as determined by the Secretary.

(c) ANNUAL ACCOUNTING; DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall submit an annual summary of grants under subsection (a), together with a general description of the tests and any technology transfers under the program, to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

SEC. 119. EXTENSION OF SEAWARD JURISDICTION.

(1) by striking "The term 'United States' as used in this Act includes" and inserting the following:

"In this Act:

"(a) UNITED STATES.—The term 'United States' includes"; and

"(b) TERRITORIAL WATERS.—The term "territorial waters of the United States" includes all waters of the territorial sea of the United States as described in Presidential Proclamation 5928 of December 27, 1988.".

(b) CIVIL PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF ACT OF JUNE 15, 1917.—Section 2 of title II of the Act of June 15, 1917 (50 U.S.C. 192), is amended—

(1) by striking "IMPRISONMENT" in the section heading and inserting "IMPRISONMENT; CIVIL PENALTIES";

(2) by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—" before "If" in the first undesignated paragraph;

(3) by striking "(a) If any other" and inserting "(b) APPLICATION TO OTHERS.—If any other"; and

"(c) CIVIL PENALTY.—

"(1) IMPOSITION.—A person who is found, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, to have violated any rule, regulation or order issued under this Act, or found to have knowingly obstructed or interfered with the exercise of any power conferred by this Act, shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $25,000 for each violation. Each day of a continuing violation shall constitute a separate violation. The amount of such civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary, or the Secretary's designee, by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require.

"(2) COMPROMISE, ETC.—The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this subsection.

"(3) COLLECTION.—If a person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General of the United States, for collection in any appropriate district court of the United States.".

SEC. 120. SUSPENSION OF LIMITATION ON STRENGTH OF COAST GUARD.

(a) PERSONNEL END STRENGTHS.—Section 661(a) of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: "If at the end of any fiscal year there is in effect a declaration of war or national emergency, the President may defer the effectiveness of any end-strength and grade distribution limitation with respect to that fiscal year prescribed by law for any military or civilian component of the Coast Guard, for a period not to exceed 6 months after the end of the war or termination of the national emergency.".

"(c) DEFERRAL OF LIMITATION.—If at the end of any fiscal year there is in effect a declaration of war or national emergency, the President may defer the effectiveness of any end-strength and grade distribution limitation with respect to that fiscal year prescribed by law for any military or civilian component of the Coast Guard Reserve, for a period not to exceed 6 months after the end of the war or termination of the national emergency.".

SEC. 121. ADDITIONAL REPORTS.

(a) ADDITIONAL SECURITY NEEDS.—Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit a report to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the need for any additional security requirements or measures under this title in order to provide for national security and protect the flow of commerce.

(b) ANNUAL STATUS REPORT TO CONGRESS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 7(c) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(c)), the Secretary shall report annually to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the status of port security in a form that does not compromise, or present a threat to the disclosure of security-sensitive information about, the port security vulnerability assessments conducted under this Act. The report may include recommendations for further improvements in port security measures and for any additional enforcement measures necessary to ensure compliance with the port security plan requirements of this title.

(2) SPECIFIC PORT EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall select a port for the purpose of evaluating security plans and enhancements and, in the first annual report under this subsection, the Secretary shall report on the progress and enhancements of security plans at that port and on how this Act has improved security at that port. The Secretary shall provide annual updates for that port in subsequent annual reports.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT ON MARITIME SECURITY AND TERRORISM.—Section 905 of the International Maritime and Port Security Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1802) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Beginning with the first report submitted under this section after the date of enactment of the Port and Maritime Security Act of 2001, the Secretary shall include a description of activities undertaken under title I of that Act and an analysis of the effect of those activities on port security against acts of terrorism.".

(d) ANNUAL REPORT OF EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS FOR TRAINING OF MARITIME SECURITY PROFESSIONALS.—The Secretary shall transmit an annual report to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the expenditure of appropriated funds and the development of training and certification programs under section 111 of this title.

(e) ACCOUNTING.—The Commissioner of Customs shall submit a report for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the expenditure of funds appropriated pursuant to section 113 of this title.

(f) REPORT ON TRAINING CENTER.—The Commandant of the United States Coast Guard, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Navy, shall submit to Congress a report, at the time they submit their fiscal year 2004 budget, on the life cycle costs and benefits of creating a Center for Coastal and Maritime Security. The purpose of the Center would be to provide an integrated training complex to prevent and mitigate terrorist threats against coastal and maritime assets of the United States, including ports, harbors, ships, dams, reservoirs, and transport nodes.

(1) EXTENSION OF DUTIES.—Section 36 of the Act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 111; 46 U.S.C. App. 121), is amended by striking "through 2002," each place it appears and inserting "through 2006,".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The Act entitled "An Act concerning tonnage duties on vessels entering otherwise than by sea", approved March 8, 1910 (36 Stat 234; 46 U.S.C. App. 132), is amended by striking "through 2002," and inserting "through 2006,".

(b) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as receipts of tonnage charges collected as a result of the amendments made by subsection (a) shall be made available, only to the extent provided in advance in appropriations Act, in each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006 to carry out this title, as provided in sections 102(b), 103(b), 104(b), 110(f), 111(c), 112(a) and 114(b) of this title.

(c) RECEIPTS CREDITED AS OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS.—Notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31, United States Code, duties collected under section 36 of the Act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 111; 46 U.S.C. App. 121) as amended by subsection (a)(1) of this section—

(1) shall be credited as offsetting collections to the account that finances the activities and services authorized by sections 110, 112, and 114 of this Act, section 7(d), (e), and (f) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 2116(d), (e), and (f)) (as added by sections 102, 103, and 104 of this Act), and sections 1401 and 1402 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (as added by section 111 of this Act);

(2) shall be available for expenditure only to pay the costs of such activities and services; and

(3) shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 123. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) CAPTAIN-OF-THE-PORT.—The term "Captain-of-the-Port" means the United States Coast Guard's Captain-of-the-Port.

(2) SECRETARY.—Except as otherwise provided, the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation.

(4) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The term "Advisory Committee" means the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee established under section 7(d) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(d)).

(5) MARINE TERMINAL OPERATOR.—The term "marine terminal operator" has the meaning given that term in section 1702(14) of title 46, United States Code.

TITLE II—ADDITIONAL MARITIME SAFETY AND SECURITY RELATED MEASURES

SEC. 201. EXTENSION OF DEEPWATER PORT ACT TO NATURAL GAS.

The following provisions of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.) are each amended by inserting "or natural gas" after "oil" each place it appears:

(4) Section 5(c)(2)(G) and (H) (33 U.S.C. 1504(c)(2)(G) and (H)).

(5) Section 5(i)(2)(B) (33 U.S.C. 1504(i)(2)(B)).

(6) Section 5(i)(3)(C) (33 U.S.C. 1504 (i)(3)(C)).

SEC. 202. ASSIGNMENT OF COAST GUARD PERSONNEL AS SEA MARSHALS AND ENHANCED USE OF OTHER SECURITY PERSONNEL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7(b) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after the semicolon in paragraph (1);

(2) by striking "terrorism." in paragraph (2) and inserting "terrorism;" and

"(3) dispatch properly trained and qualified armed Coast Guard personnel aboard government, private, and commercial structures and vessels to deter, prevent, or respond to acts of terrorism or otherwise provide for the safety and security of the port, waterways, facilities, marine environment, and personnel; and

"(4) require the owner and operator of a commercial structure or the owner, operator, charterer, master, or person in charge of a vessel to provide the appropriate level of security as necessary, including armed security.".

(b) REPORT ON USE OF NON-COAST GUARD PERSONNEL.—The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall evaluate and report to the Congress on—

(1) the potential use of Federal, State, or local government personnel, and documented United States Merchant Marine personnel, to supplement Coast Guard personnel under section 7(b)(3) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(b)(3));

(2) the possibility of using personnel other than Coast Guard personnel to carry out Coast Guard personnel functions under that section and whether additional legal authority would be necessary to use such personnel for such functions; and

(3) the possibility of utilizing the United States Merchant Marine Academy or State maritime academies to provide training carrying out duties under that section.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating $13,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 2002–2006 to carry out section 7(b) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(b)), all such funds to remain available until expended.

SEC. 203. NATIONAL MARITIME TRANSPORTATION SECURITY PLAN.

Section 7 of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226), as amended by section 106 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i) NATIONAL MARITIME TRANSPORTATION SECURITY PLAN.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies, shall prepare and publish a National Maritime Transportation Security Plan for prevention and response to maritime crime and terrorism. The Secretary shall consult with the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee in preparation of the National Maritime Transportation Security Plan.

"(2) CONTENTS OF PLAN.—The Plan shall provide for efficient, coordinated, and effective action to prevent and respond to acts of maritime crime or terrorism, and shall include—

"(A) allocation of duties and responsibilities among Federal departments and agencies in coordination with State and local agencies and port authorities;

"(B) identification, procurement, maintenance, and storage of equipment and supplies;

"(C) procedures and techniques to be employed in preventing and responding to acts of crime or terrorism;

"(D) establishment of procedures for effective liaison with State and local governments and emergency responders including law enforcement and fire response;

"(E) establishment of criteria and procedures to ensure immediate and effective Federal identification of, and response to, acts of maritime crime or terrorism, that result in a substantial threat to the welfare of the United States;

"(F) designation of a Federal official to be the Federal maritime security coordinator for each area for which an area maritime security plan is required to be prepared;

"(G) establishment of procedures for the coordination of activities of—

"(i) Coast Guard maritime safety and security teams established under this section;

"(ii) Federal maritime security coordinators;

"(iii) area maritime security committees;

"(iv) local port security committees; and

"(v) the National Maritime Security Advisory Committee.

"(3) REVISION AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may, from time to time, as the Secretary deems advisable, revise or otherwise amend the National Maritime Transportation Security Plan.

"(4) PLAN TO BE FOLLOWED.—After publication of the Plan, the planning and response to acts of maritime crime and terrorism shall, to the greatest extent possible, be in accordance with the Plan.

"(5) COPY TO THE CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall furnish a copy of the Plan to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.".

"(j) AREA MARITIME SECURITY COMMITTEES AND AREA MARITIME SECURITY PLANS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established for each area designated by the Secretary an area maritime security committee comprised of members appointed by the Secretary. The Secretary may designate any existing local port security committee as an area maritime security committee for the purposes of this subsection. The Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) does not apply to an area maritime security committee.

"(2) FUNCTION.—Each area maritime security committee, under the direction of the Federal maritime security coordinator for its area, shall—

"(A) prepare an area maritime security plan for its area; and

"(B) work with State and local officials to enhance the contingency planning of those officials and to assure pre-planning of joint response efforts, including appropriate procedures for prevention and response to acts of maritime crime or terrorism.

"(3) AREA MARITIME SECURITY PLAN REQUIREMENT.—Each area maritime security committee shall prepare an area maritime security plan for its area and submit it to the Secretary for approval. The area maritime security plan shall—

"(A) when implemented in conjunction with the national maritime transportation security plan, be adequate to prevent or rapidly and effectively respond to an act of maritime crime or terrorism in or near the area;

"(B) describe the area covered by the plan, including the areas of population or special economic, environmental or national security importance that might be damaged by an act of maritime crime or terrorism;

"(C) describe in detail how the plan is integrated with other area maritime security plans, facility security plans, and vessel security plans under this section;

"(D) include any other information the Secretary requires; and

"(E) be updated periodically by the area maritime security committee.

"(4) REVIEW BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall—

"(A) review and approve area maritime security plans under this subsection; and

"(B) periodically review previously approved area maritime security plans.".

SEC. 205. VESSEL SECURITY PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4(a) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1223(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after the semicolon in paragraph (4);

(2) by striking "environment." in paragraph (5) and inserting "environment; and"; and

"(6) may issue regulations establishing requirements for vessel security plans and programs for vessels calling on United States ports.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 to carry out section 4(a)(6) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1223(a)(6)), such sums to remain available until expended.

SEC. 206. PROTECTION OF SECURITY-RELATED INFORMATION.

Section 7(c) of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act (33 U.S.C. 1226(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) NONDISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, information developed under this section, and vessel security plan information developed under section 4(a)(6) of this Act (33 USC 1223(a)(6)), is not required to be disclosed to the public. This includes information related to security plans, procedures, or programs for passenger vessels or passenger terminals authorized under this Act, and any other information, including maritime facility security plans, vessel security plans and port vulnerability assessments.".

SEC. 207. ENHANCED CARGO IDENTIFICATION AND TRACKING.

(a) TRACKING PROGRAM.—The Secretaries of the Treasury and Transportation shall establish a joint task force to work with ocean shippers and ocean carriers in the development of performance standards for systems to track data for shipments, containers, and contents—

(1) to improve the capacity of shippers and others to limit cargo theft and tampering; and

(2) to track the movement of cargo, through the Global Positioning System or other systems, within the United States, particularly for in-bond shipments.

(b) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS FOR ANTI-TAMPERING DEVICES.—The Secretaries of the Treasury and Transportation shall work with the National Institutes of Standards and Technology to develop enhanced performance standards for in-bond seals and locks for use on or in containers used for water-borne cargo shipments.

SEC. 208. ENHANCED CREWMEMBER IDENTIFICATION.

The Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the Attorney General, may require crewmembers aboard vessels calling on United States ports to carry and present upon demand such identification as the Secretary determines.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. LOBIONDO

Mr. LoBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

> Mr. LoBiondo moves that that House strike all after the enacting clause of S. 1214, and insert the text of the bill H.R. 3983, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 3983) was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 1214, PORT AND MARITIME SECURITY ACT OF 2001

Mr. LoBIONDO. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendment and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? The Chair hears none, and without objection, appoints the following conferees:

From the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, for consideration of the Senate bill and the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. Young of Alaska, Kolbe, LoBiondo, Oberstar and Ms. Brown of Florida.

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of sections 112 and 115 of the Senate bill, and section 108 of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. Thomas, Crane and Rangel.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Osborne). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

13TH ANNIVERSARY OF TIANANMEN SQUARE MASSACRE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Pelosi) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, today we mark the 13th anniversary of one of this century's most brutal attempts to silence the voices of freedom and liberty. Thirteen years ago today, the Chinese regime shocked the world as it rolled out the tanks and crushed the pro-democracy movement taking shape in Tiananmen Square.

The authoritarian leaders of China still do not acknowledge the massacre of those brave young souls. We have not forgotten those who lost their lives for the cause of freedom. We must not forget those who are still imprisoned. Imagine that, people are still in prison 13 years later for speaking out for freedom. They have lost their liberty and the pursuit of basic human rights.

Today, we renew our call for the Chinese Government to acknowledge the massacre, free all of those who are in prison because of peaceful expression of their political and religious beliefs.

China must also allow the return and free expression of those who have been forced into exile. Mr. Speaker, in China if one speaks out for freedom, they are either imprisoned or in exile. One of those imprisoned, Wenli, founder of the China Democracy Party, is serving a 13-year sentence in a Chinese prison. Mr. Xu is one of China's bravest, most eloquent and most measured advocates of democracy. He is not calling for the downfall of the Communist Party; he is just asking for the establishment of a democratic party in China. Yet he remains behind bars, despite being gravely ill from hepatitis contracted in prison.

Mr. Speaker, the brave men and women who demonstrated for democracy in Tiananmen Square are the legitimate heirs to the legacy of our Founding Fathers. They quoted Thomas Jefferson. They built a monument fashioned after our Statue of Liberty. They looked to the United States as a beacon of hope and freedom. We looked, and still look, to them for their courage, their idealism, and their dedication to the establishment of basic human rights.

The spirit of Tiananmen Square lives on. The seeds of democracy sown in 1989 have taken root, and they will inevitably burst forth in full flowering. I really wish that we could help them.

In 1989, when many of us were concerned about the plight of those who were killed or arrested at the time of Tiananmen Square and a couple of years after that, we tried to have the U.S. weigh in. We were told at the time that we could not weigh in in favor of human rights because trade was going to improve human rights in China. Part of our complaint was indeed China's blocking of our products going into China.

At that time, the trade deficit with China was about $2 billion a year. We thought that gave us great leverage to free the prisoners. Today, it is nearly $2 billion a week. So for all of those who said trade was going to improve human rights in China, sadly it has not; but we really have given away the store when it comes to trade with China because they have now a nearly $100 billion trade deficit. Think of the leverage that would have given us.

In addition to that, one of our other concerns was China's proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Our main concern was China's proliferation of nuclear technology to Pakistan and China's transfer of missile technology for the delivery of such a weapon to Pakistan. The administration, Democrats and Republicans alike, told us that China was going to be helpful in defusing the nuclear issue in south Asia; but, indeed, that was not the case.

Indeed, China helped build Pakistan's nuclear program. China has contributed to the explosive situation that exists in south Asia today; but at the time when we were asking for the U.S. to use its leverage to promote democratic values, to promote our exports by having fair trade policy and to use our leverage to stop China's proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, we were told that the status quo would make everything right. Certainly it has not.

I want to get back to those who are in prison, some still because of Tiananmen Square and others for their activities since. As we look to those people in China and we talk about the promotion of democratic values being a pillar of our foreign policy, they have to wonder what it means about being a pillar of our foreign policy when it comes to China. I know that there are many people in our country who, despite the policy of our government, still believe that we are a great country and that we want to promote democratic values.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could tell my colleagues human rights in China have gotten better since 1989, but the sad fact is they have not. According to our own State Department report, authorities are still quick to suppress any person or group, whether religious, political or social, that they perceive to be a threat to government or to national stability, that is what they always say; and the citizens who sought to express openly dissenting political and religious views continue to live in an environment filled with repression.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell my colleagues that, call attention of our colleagues, to the lone man before the tank. The world will long remember the lone man before the tank, but I want to say here tonight that as much as the Chinese authorities may say to those in prison that they have not been forgotten, we know that in the Congress of the United States and that this country of ours, those prisoners are long remembered, and they are remembered by name, and we will mention those names as long as they are being repressed by the Chinese regime.

So again, Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for the opportunity to observe the June 4 massacre in China.

JUNE 13 HEARING ON FILIPINO WORLD WAR II VETERANS' BENEFITS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Members of this House that on Thursday, June 13, at 3 p.m. in the afternoon, there will be a hearing before the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, conducted by the honorable gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN), who happens to be in the room tonight, who is the chairman of that subcommittee, on the issue of health care for Filipino World War II veterans within the Department of Veterans Affairs.

This is not a normal hearing, Mr. Speaker, but it is the culmination of almost 60 years, 60 years, of a struggle for justice and honor. During World War II, the brave Filipino soldiers were drafted into our Armed Forces by President Franklin Roosevelt. After being called into service, the soldiers served side by side with forces from the United States mainland, exhibited great courage at the epic battles of Bataan and Corregidor, and were instrumental in contributing to the successful outcome of the war. They held up the Japanese advance far beyond their calendar so we were able to prepare and harass the Japanese with guerrilla warfare during the whole time of the Japanese occupation. And what did we do after we won the war in the Pacific and in Europe? We unceremoniously deprived these soldiers of the veterans' benefits due them by the Congressional Rescissions Act passed in 1946.

Whereas there was almost a quarter of a million soldiers involved in that war from the Philippines, today there are only 60,000 who are still alive. Their last wish, Mr. Speaker, is to have the honor and dignity of being recognized by the United States as a veteran of World War II.

At this hearing on Thursday, June 13, literally a living American history will be presented to the American public. We will have testimony, both oral and written, from Filipino World War II veterans, some of whom are survivors of the infamous Death March of Bataan. We will hear testimony from Filipino veterans' organizations and from veterans' service organizations, like the American Legion, the Vietnam Veterans of America, and the Disabled American Veterans. The ambassador from the Philippines, the Honorable Albert Del Rosario, will be a witness, as will several Members of Congress from both sides of the aisle.

A special guest witness will be Lou Diamond Phillips, born in the Philippines, and an international star, with roles in movies, television and theater. Phillips is most well-known for his role in "La Bamba," for which he received great critical acclaim. He has also starred in "Stand and Deliver," "Young Guns," and "Courage Under Fire." We welcome him and all the others who will be testifying to the need to provide Filipino World War II veterans with the recognition that is their due.

Mr. Speaker, let us recognize the bravery and gallantry of Filipino veterans. Let us give them equity, because their bravery helped us win World War II.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN), for having this hearing, and I invite all the Members of this House to attend the historic June 13 meeting.

FORT HAYS STATE UNIVERSITY CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) for his long-term commitment and his firm dedication to the recognition of the veterans of the Philippines and look forward to that June 13 hearing in which we hope to address the issues that the gentleman from California has fought to have addressed in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, tonight we are approaching a significant event in the history of my State and in my hometown community. Later this month, Fort Hays State University, located in Hays, Kansas, will celebrate its centennial. I wish to recognize this milestone and honor those who have contributed to the university's success over the past century.

One hundred years ago, 34 students and two faculty members gathered on the grounds of an abandoned military post to undertake an endeavor that would have consequences for generations to come. Unaware of the historical significance of their meeting, or the thousands of students that would follow in their footsteps, these early Kansans met to form the first class of what today is known as Fort Hays State University.

Years before this first class met, industrious Kansans committed themselves to the idea of transforming the former frontier fort into an educational institution. This required the passage of legislation, which was introduced by the Kansas congressional delegation and signed into law by President William McKinley, which then transferred the ownership of the former military post to the State of Kansas and paved the way for the birth of this university.

From these simple beginnings, the university has flourished, growing to 6,000 students and 300 faculty members. Today, students learn and live in a technology-rich environment that retains a heritage of close and collegial relationships. They come to the university for a multitude of reasons, but none more compelling than the university's reputation for academic excellence and a caring faculty and staff.

Throughout the university's history, students and faculty have distinguished themselves through academic achievement. This year, students claimed national championships in debate and financial planning competitions. The university is also home to one of the most successful intercollegiate athletic programs of any school its size, boasting numerous all-American athletes and national championships.

Culturally, Fort Hays State University serves the region by offering an array of fine and performing arts and is home to the nationally renowned Sternberg Museum of Natural History.

For the past century, graduates have served the needs of Kansas, as well as influenced the Nation and the world through significant achievements, compassion, and dedication. The university has improved the lives of many by enlightening minds, serving, in the words of former University President Rarick, as a lighthouse to the people of the Great Plains.

As Fort Hays State University begins its second hundred years, I am confident that it will continue to produce graduates who, like its founders, will help society achieve its best in Kansas and beyond. Congratulations, Fort Hays State University.

TRADING AWAY OUR FUTURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for five minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to highlight the flaws in the Bush administration's trade policy, a plan to trade away even more of America's jobs, our national security, and even our sovereignty.

Word came today that the administration will once again try to bring back to this House an irresponsible fast track bill and seek its passage. This proposal obviously is not the road to a prosperous future for working families in our country, because throughout our country we see the fruits of NAFTA: Closed factories, a jobless recovery, and downward pressure on wages.

From Iowa to New Hampshire to the Carolinas and everywhere in between, NAFTA has killed thousands of jobs and left working families without hope. For a multinational corporation with the ability to move production to low-wage countries like Mexico and China, NAFTA and fast track are made to order. For a textile worker in the Carolinas, a farmer in Florida or California, or an auto worker in the Great Lakes, NAFTA and fast track can spell disaster.

NAFTA passed almost eight years ago. Ask any American worker standing in an unemployment line, "How has NAFTA affected you?" It has been almost two years since Congress passed permanent normal trade relations with China. Ask any American worker standing in an unemployment line, "How has trade with China affected you?" The answer to both questions is the same: More layoffs, more factory shutdowns, and more plants being moved to China and Mexico.

If the fast track conference bill passes the House, President Bush will push Congress to pass a whole new NAFTA: NAFTA for the Americas. Basically this would mean a free trade region encompassing 34 nations in our hemisphere. To the produce-producing States like Florida and California, instead of just Mexico they will have to face an onslaught from more countries, 31 to be exact, with low wages and no environmental regulations. To our beef producers, imagine beef from Argentina imported tariff-free. Grains, citrus fruits, cut flowers, and just about every other good available in the world will be flooding our markets tariff-free.

The Founding Fathers gave Congress the power to regulate all international commerce. It is right in our Constitution. Some of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle may not know this, or worse, may not care. Our constituents did not send us here to sign over our constitutional duties to the executive branch. That is not why we were elected. They elected us to represent their interests, not only those of multinational corporations hoping to report another penny or two on their quarterly profits at the expense of America's workers.

Pick up a paper in just about any city on any given day and the report reads, "IBM to Cut 1,500 Jobs in Microelectronics Unit." Or how about this one: "Hewlett Packard CEO Carly Fiorina Sees 15,000 Job Cuts," or "Williamson-Dickie Becomes Latest Textile Employer to Close Factory." How will America defend herself without any manufacturing infrastructure? Do you really believe we should import the goods from China, Pakistan or Indonesia as substitutes for our own?

The other body fiercely debated something called Chapter 11 of the NAFTA agreement as it considered its bill. That little clause would allow a corporation from another country to sue a city, a State, or even the United States Government in an attempt to undermine our environmental, food safety, and consumer protection laws.

Take the case of a Canadian company that recently sued the State of California over a State environmental law. California banned MTBE because it was contaminating groundwater. Federalism at work; right? Not under NAFTA. Using chapter 11, the Canadian company sued the State. Not in court, but before a secret NAFTA tribunal, claiming the law was trade-restrictive.

If we cannot protect our own health and safety, we give our rights to multinational corporations. What kind of sovereignty is that? It is ridiculous that the Bush administration wants to give more power to just a few foreign companies and ignore our local communities. What kind of a trade policy is it that leads to more unemployment, more pollution, and a deterioration of our constitutional rights of sovereignty?

I would ask my colleagues to say no to more fast tracks, say no to NAFTA for the Americas, say yes to a future for working families and jobs in our own communities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 2(a)(2) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I hereby submit the rules of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for the 107th Congress for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR THE PERMANENT SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

1. SUBCOMMITTEES

(1) Creation of subcommittees shall be by majority vote of the Committee.

(2) Subcommittees shall deal with such legislation and oversight of programs and policies as the Committee may direct.

(3) Subcommittees shall be governed by these rules.

For purposes of these rules, any reference herein to the "Committee" shall be interpreted to include subcommittees and the working group, unless otherwise specifically provided.

The Committee establishes the following subcommittees:

(1) Subcommittee on Human intelligence, Analysis, and Counterintelligence;

(2) Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence;

(3) Subcommittee on Intelligence Policy and National Security; and,

(4) Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security.

For purposes of these rules, any reference herein to the "Committee" shall be interpreted to include subcommittees, unless otherwise specifically provided.

(d) Subcommittee Membership.

(1) Generally. Each Member of the Committee may be assigned to at least one of the four subcommittees.

(2) Ex Officio Membership. In the event that the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the full Committee do not choose to sit as regular voting members of one or more of the subcommittees, each is authorized to sit as an ex officio Member of the subcommittees and participate in the work of the subcommittees. When sitting ex officio, however, they—

(A) shall not have a vote in the subcommittees; and

(B) shall not be counted for purposes of determining a quorum.

2. MEETING DAY

(a) Regular Meeting Day for the Full Committee.

(1) Generally. The regular meeting day of the Committee for the transaction of Committee business shall be the first Wednesday of each month, unless otherwise directed by the Chairman.

(2) Notice Required. Such regular business meetings shall not occur, unless Members are provided reasonable notice under these rules.

(b) Regular Meeting Day for Subcommittees.

There is no regular meeting day for subcommittees.

3. NOTICE OF MEETINGS

(a) Generally.

In the case of any meeting of the Committee, the Chief Clerk of the Committee shall provide reasonable notice to every Member of the Committee. Such notice shall provide the time and place of the meeting.

(b) Definition.

For purposes of this rule, "reasonable notice" means:

(1) written notification;

(2) delivered by facsimile transmission or regular mail, which is

(A) delivered no less than 24 hours prior to the event for which notice is being given, if the event is to be held in Washington, DC; or

(B) delivered no less than 48 hours prior to the event for which notice is being given, if the event is to be held outside Washington, DC.

(C) Exception.

In extraordinary circumstances only, the Chairman may, after consulting with the Ranking Minority Member, call a meeting of the Committee without providing notice, as defined in subparagraph (b), to Members of the Committee.

4. PREPARATIONS FOR COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Designated Committee Staff, as directed by the Chairman, shall brief Members of the Committee at a time sufficiently prior to any Committee meeting in order to:

(1) assist Committee Members in preparation for such meeting; and

(2) determine which matters Members wish considered during any meeting.

(b) Briefing Materials.

(1) Such a briefing shall, at the request of a Member, include a list of all pertinent papers, and such other materials, that have been obtained by the Committee that bear on matters to be considered at the meeting; and

(2) The staff director shall also recommend to the Chairman any testimony, papers, or other materials to be presented to the Committee at any meeting of the Committee.

5. OPEN MEETINGS

Pursuant to Rule XI of the House, but subject to the limitations of subsection (b), Committee meetings held for the transaction of business, and Committee hearings, shall be open to the public.

(b) Exceptions.

Any meeting or portion thereof, for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, or any hearing or portion thereof, shall be closed to the public, if:

(1) the Committee determines by record vote, in open session with a majority of the Committee present, that disclosure of the matters to be discussed may:

(A) endanger national security;

(B) compromise sensitive law enforcement information;

(C) tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; or

(D) otherwise violate any law or Rule of the House.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a vote to close a Committee hearing, pursuant to this subsection and House Rule XI shall be taken in open session—

(A) with a majority of the Committee being present; or

(B) pursuant to House Rule X, clause 11(d)(2), regardless of whether a majority is present, so long as at least two Members of the Committee are present, one of whom is a member of the Minority, and votes upon the motion.

(c) Briefings.

All Committee briefings shall be closed to the public.

6. QUORUM

(a) Hearings.

For purposes of taking testimony, or receiving evidence, a quorum shall consist of two Committee Members.

(b) Other Committee Proceedings.

For purposes of the transaction of all other Committee business, other than the consideration of a motion to close a hearing as described in rule 5(b)(2)(B), a quorum shall consist of a majority of Members.

7. REPORTING RECORD VOTES

Whenever the Committee reports any measure or matter by record vote, the report of the Committee upon such measure or matter shall include a tabulation of the votes cast in favor of, and the votes cast in opposition to, such measure or matter.

8. PROCEDURES FOR TAKING TESTIMONY OR RECEIVING EVIDENCE

(a) Notice.

Adequate notice shall be given to all witnesses appearing before the Committee.

(b) Oath or Affirmation.

The Chairman may require testimony of witnesses to be given under oath or affirmation.

(c) Administration of Oath or Affirmation.

Upon the determination that a witness shall testify under oath or affirmation, any Member of the Committee designated by the Chairman may administer the oath or affirmation.

(1) Generally. Interrogation of witnesses before the Committee shall be conducted by Members of the Committee.

(2) Exceptions.

(A) The Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, may determine that Committee Staff will be authorized to question witnesses at a hearing in accordance with clause (2)(j) of House Rule XI.

(B) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are each authorized to designate Committee Staff to conduct such questioning.

(1) Generally. Witnesses before the Committee may be accompanied by counsel, subject to the requirements of paragraph (2).

(2) Counsel Clearances Required. In the event that a meeting of the Committee has been closed because the subject to be discussed deals with classified information, counsel accompanying a witness before the Committee must possess the requisite security clearance and provide proof of such clearance to the Committee at least 24 hours prior to the meeting at which the counsel intends to be present.

(3) Failure to Obtain Counsel. Any witness who is unable to obtain counsel should notify the Committee. If such notification occurs at least 24 hours prior to the witness' appearance before the Committee, the Committee shall then endeavor to obtain voluntary counsel for the witness. Failure to obtain counsel, however, will not excuse the witness from appearing and testifying.

(4) Conduct of Counsel for Witnesses. Counsel for witnesses appearing before the Committee shall conduct themselves ethically and professionally at all times in their dealings with the Committee.

(A) A majority of Members of the Committee may, should circumstances warrant, find that counsel for a witness before the Committee failed to conduct himself or herself in an ethical or professional manner.

(B) Upon such finding, counsel may be subject to appropriate disciplinary action.

(5) Temporary Removal of Counsel. The Chairman may remove counsel during any proceeding before the Committee for failure to act in an ethical and professional manner.

(6) Committee Reversal. A majority of the Members of the Committee may vote to overturn the decision of the Chairman to remove counsel for a witness.

(7) Role of Counsel for Witness.

(A) Counsel for a witness:

(i) shall not be allowed to examine witnesses before the Committee, either directly or through cross-examination; but

(ii) may submit questions in writing to the Committee that counsel wishes propounded to a witness; or

(iii) may suggest, in writing to the Committee the presentation of other evidence or the calling of other witnesses.

(B) The Committee may make such use of any such questions, or suggestions, as the Committee deems appropriate.

(f) Statements by Witnesses.

(1) Generally. A witness may make a statement, which shall be brief and relevant, at the beginning and at the conclusion of the witness' testimony.

(2) Length. Each such statements shall not exceed five minutes in length, unless otherwise determined by the Chairman.

(3) Submission to the Committee. Any witness desiring to submit a written statement for the record of the proceedings shall submit a copy of the statement to the Chief Clerk of the Committee.

(A) Such statements shall ordinarily be submitted no less than 48 hours in advance of the witness' appearance before the Committee.

(B) In the event that the hearing was called with less than 24 hours notice, written statements should be submitted as soon as practicable prior to the hearing.

(g) Objections and Ruling.

(1) Generally. Any objection raised by a witness, or counsel for the witness, shall be ruled upon by the Chairman, and such ruling shall be the ruling of the Committee.

(2) Committee Action. A ruling by the Chairman may be overturned upon a majority vote of the Committee.

(h) Transcripts.

(1) Transcript Required. A transcript shall be made of the testimony of each witness appearing before the Committee during any hearing of the Committee.

(2) Opportunity to Inspect. Any witness testifying before the Committee shall be given a reasonable opportunity to inspect the transcript of the hearing, and may be accompanied by counsel to determine whether such testimony was correctly transcribed. Such counsel:

(A) shall have the appropriate clearance necessary to review any classified aspect of the transcript; and

(B) should, to the extent possible, be the same counsel that was present for such classified testimony.

(3) Corrections.

(A) Pursuant to Rule XI of the House Rules, any corrections the witness desires to make in a transcript shall be limited to technical, grammatical, and typographical.

(B) Corrections may not be made to change the substance of the testimony.

(C) Such corrections shall be submitted in writing to the Committee within 7 days after the transcript is made available to the witness.

(D) Any questions arising with respect to such corrections shall be decided by the Chairman.

(4) Copy for the Witness. At the request of the witness, any portion of the witness' testimony given in executive session shall be made available to that witness if that testimony is subsequently quoted or intended to be made part of a public record. Such testimony shall be made available to the witness at the witness' expense.

(i) Requests to Testify.

(1) Generally. The Committee will consider requests to testify on any matter or measure pending before the Committee.

(2) Recommendations for Additional Evidence. Any person who believes that testimony, other evidence, or commentary, presented at a public hearing may tend to affect adversely that person's reputation may submit to the Committee, in writing:

(A) a request to appear personally before the Committee;

(B) a sworn statement of facts relevant to the testimony, evidence, or commentary; or

(C) proposed questions for the cross-examination of other witnesses.

(3) Committee's Discretion. The Committee may take those actions it deems appropriate with respect to such requests.

(j) Contempt Procedures. Citations for contempt of Congress shall be forwarded to the House, only if:

(1) reasonable notice is provided to all Members of the Committee of a meeting to be held to consider any such contempt recommendations;

(2) the Committee has met and considered the contempt allegations;

(3) the subject to the allegations was afforded an opportunity to state, either in writing or in person, why he or she should not be held in contempt; and

(4) the Committee agreed by majority vote to forward the citation recommendations to the House.

(k) Release of Name of Witness.

(1) Generally. At the request of a witness scheduled to be heard by the Committee, the name of that witness shall not be released publicly prior to, or after, the witness' appearance before the Committee.

(2) Exceptions. Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the Chairman may authorize the release to the public of the name of any witness scheduled to appear before the Committee.

9. INVESTIGATIONS

(a) Commencing Investigations.

(1) Generally. The Committee shall conduct investigations only if approved by the full Committee. An investigation may be initiated either:

(A) by a vote of the full Committee;

(B) at the direction of the Chairman of the full Committee, with notice to the Ranking Minority Member; or

(C) by written request of at least five Members of the full Committee, which is submitted to the Chairman.

(2) Full Committee Ratification Required. Any investigation initiated by the Chairman pursuant to paragraphs (B) and (C) must be brought to the attention of the full Committee for approval, at the next regular meeting of the full Committee.

(b) Conducting Investigations.

An authorized investigation may be conducted by Members of the Committee or Committee Staff members designated by the Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, to undertake any such investigation.

10. SUBPOENAS

(a) Generally. All subpoenas shall be authorized by the Chairman of the full Committee, upon consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, or by vote of the Committee.

(b) Subpoena Contents. Any subpoena authorized by the Chairman of the full Committee, or the Committee, may compel:

(1) the attendance of witnesses and testimony before the Committee; or

(2) the production of memoranda, documents, records, or any other tangible item.

(c) Signing of Subpoenas. A subpoena authorized by the Chairman of the full Committee, or the Committee, may be signed by the Chairman, or by any Member of the Committee designated to do so by the Committee.

(d) Subpoena Service. A subpoena authorized by the Chairman of the full Committee, or the Committee, may be served by any person designated to do so by the Chairman.

(e) Other Requirements. Each subpoena shall have attached thereto a copy of these rules.

11. COMMITTEE STAFF

For the purpose of these rules, "Committee Staff" or "staff of the Committee" means:

(1) employees of the Committee;

(2) consultants to the Committee;

(3) employees of other Government agencies detailed to the Committee; or

(4) any other person engaged by contract, or otherwise, to perform services for, or at the request of, the Committee.

(b) Appointment of Committee Staff.

(1) Chairman's Authority. The appointment of Committee Staff shall be by the Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member. The Chairman shall certify Committee Staff appointments to the Clerk of the House in writing.

(2) Security Clearance Required. All offers of employment for prospective Committee Staff positions shall be contingent upon:

(A) the results of a background investigation; and

(B) a determination by the Chairman that requirements for the appropriate security clearances have been met.

(c) Responsibilities of Committee Staff.

(1) Generally. The Committee Staff works for the Committee as a whole, under the supervision and direction of the Chairman of the Committee.

(2) Authority of the Staff Director.

(B) Committee Staff personnel affairs and day-to-day Committee Staff administrative matters, including the security and control of classified documents and material, shall be administered under the direct supervision and control of the staff director.

(3) Staff Assistance to Minority Membership. The Committee Staff shall assist the Minority as fully as the Majority of the Committee in all matters of Committee business, and in the preparation and filing of supplemental, minority, or additional views, to the end that all points of view may be fully considered by the Committee and the House.

12. LIMIT ON DISCUSSION OF CLASSIFIED WORK OF THE COMMITTEE

(1) Generally. Except as otherwise provided by these rules and the Rules of the House of Representatives, Members and Committee Staff shall not at any time, either during that person's tenure as a Member of the Committee or as Committee Staff, or anytime thereafter, discuss or disclose:

(A) the classified substance of the work of the Committee;

(B) any information received by the Committee in executive session;

(C) any classified information received by the Committee from any source; or

(D) the substance of any hearing that was closed to the public pursuant to these rules or the Rules of the House.

(2) Non-Disclosure in Proceedings.

(A) Members of the Committee and the Committee Staff shall not discuss either the substance or procedure of the work of the Committee with any person not a Member of the Committee or the Committee Staff in connection with any proceeding, judicial or otherwise, either during the person's tenure as a Member of the Committee, or of the Committee Staff, or at any time thereafter, except as directed by the Committee in accordance with the Rules of the House and these rules.

(B) In the event of the termination of the Committee, Members and Committee Staff shall be governed in these matters in a manner determined by the House concerning discussions of the classified work of the Committee.

(3) Exceptions.

(A) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)(1), Members of the Committee and the Committee Staff may discuss and disclose those matters described in subsection (a)(1) with—

(i) Members and staff of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence designated by the chairman of that committee;

(ii) the chairmen and ranking minority members of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations and staff of those committees designated by the chairmen of those committees; and

(iii) the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Defense of the House Committee on Appropriations and staff of that subcommittee as designated by the chairman of that subcommittee.

(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)(1), Members of the Committee and the Committee Staff may discuss and disclose only that budget-related information necessary to facilitate the enactment of the annual defense authorization bill with the chairmen and ranking minority members of the House and Senate Committees on Armed Services and the staff of those committees designated by the chairmen of those committees.

(C) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)(1), Members of the Committee and the Committee staff may discuss with and disclose to the chairman and ranking minority member of a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee with jurisdiction over an agency or program within the National Foreign Intelligence Program (NFIP), and staff of that subcommittee as designated by the chairman of that subcommittee, only that budget-related information necessary to facilitate the enactment of an appropriations bill within which is included an appropriation for an agency or program within the NFIP.

(D) The Chairman may, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, upon the written request to the Chairman from the Inspector General of an element of the Intelligence Committee, grant access to Committee transcripts or documents that are relevant to an investigation of an allegation of possible false testimony or other inappropriate conduct before the Committee, or that are otherwise relevant to the Inspector General's investigation.

(E) Upon the written request of the head of an Intelligence Community element, the Chairman may, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, make available Committee briefing or hearing transcripts to that element for review by that element if a representative of that element testified, presented information to the Committee, or was present at the briefing or hearing the transcript of which is requested for review.

(F) Members and Committee Staff may discuss and disclose such matters as otherwise directed by that Committee.

(b) Non-Disclosure Agreement.

(1) Generally. All Committee Staff must, before joining the Committee, agree in writing, as a condition of employment, not to divulge any classified information, which comes into such person's possession while a member of the Committee Staff, to any person not a Member of the Committee or the Committee Staff, except as authorized by the Committee in accordance with the Rules of the House and these rules.

(2) Other Requirements. In the event of the termination of the Committee, Members and Committee Staff must follow any determination by the House of Representatives, with respect to the protection of classified information received while a Member of the Committee or as Committee Staff.

(3) Requests for Testimony of Staff.

(A) All Committee Staff must, as a condition of employment, agree in writing to notify the Committee immediately of any request for testimony received while a member of the Committee Staff, or at any time thereafter, concerning any classified information received by such person while a member of the Committee staff.

(B) Committee Staff shall not disclose, in response to any such request for testimony, any such classified information, except as authorized by the Committee in accordance with the Rules of the House and these rules.

(C) In the event of the termination of the Committee, Committee Staff will be subject to any determination made by the House of Representatives with respect to any requests for testimony involving classified information received while a member of the Committee staff.

13. CLASSIFIED MATERIAL

(a) Receipt of Classified Information.

(1) Generally. In the case of any information that has been classified under established security procedures and submitted to the Committee by any source, the Committee shall receive such classified information as executive session material.

(2) Staff Receipt of Classified Materials. For purposes classified information, the

(b) Non-Disclosure of Classified Information.

Generally. Any classified information received by the Committee, from any source, shall not be disclosed to any person not a Member of the Committee or the Committee Staff, or otherwise released, except as authorized by the Committee in accord with the Rules of the House and these rules.

14. PROCEDURES RELATED TO HANDLING OF CLASSIFIED INFORMATION

(a) Security Measures.

(1) Strict Security. The Committee's offices shall operate under strict security procedures administered by the Director of Security and Registry of the Committee under the direct supervision of the staff director.

(2) U.S. Capitol Police Presence Required. At least one U.S. Capitol Police officer shall be on duty at all times outside the entrance of Committee offices to control entry of all persons to such offices.

(3) Identification Required. Before entering the Commission's office all persons shall identify themselves to the U.S. Capitol Police officer described in paragraph (2) and to a Member of the Committee, or Committee Staff.

(4) Maintenance of Classified Materials. Classified documents shall be segregated and maintained in approved security storage locations.

(5) Examination of Classified Materials. Classified documents in the Committee's possession shall be examined in an appropriately secure manner.

(6) Prohibition on Removal of Classified Materials. Removal of any classified document from the Committee's offices is strictly prohibited, except as provided by these rules.

(7) Exception. Notwithstanding the prohibition set forth in paragraph (6), a classified document, or copy thereof, maybe removed from the Committee's offices in furtherance of official Committee business. Appropriate security procedures shall govern the handling of any classified documents removed from the Committees' offices.

(b) Access to Classified Information by Members.

All Members of the Committee shall at all times have access to all classified papers and other material received by the Committee from any source.

(c) Need-to-know.

(1) Generally. Committee Staff shall have access to any classified information provided to the Committee on a strict "need-to-know" basis, as determined by the Committee, and under the Committee's direction by the staff director.

(2) Appropriate Clearances Required. Committee Staff must have the appropriate clearance prior to any access to compartmented information.

(d) Oath.

(1) Requirement. Before any Member of the Committee, or the Committee Staff, shall have access to classified information, the following oath shall be executed:

I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will not disclose any classified information received in the course of my service on the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, except when authorized to do so by the Committee or the House of Representatives.

(2) Copy. A copy of such executed oath shall be retained in the files of the Committee.

(2) Registry.

(1) Generally. The Committee shall maintain a registry that:

(A) provides a brief description of the content of all classified documents provided to the Committee by the executive branch that remain in the possession of the Committee; and

(B) lists by number all such documents.

(2) Designation by the Staff Director. The staff director shall designate a member of the Committee Staff to be responsible for the organization and daily maintenance of such registry.

(3) Availability. Such registry shall be available to all Members of the Committee and Committee Staff.

(f) Requests by Members of Other Committees. Pursuant to the Rules of the House, Members who are not Members of the Committee may be granted access to such classified transcripts, records, data, charts, or files of the Committee, and be admitted on a non-participatory basis to classified hearings of the Committee involving discussions of classified material in the following manner:

(1) Written Notification Required. Members who desire to examine classified materials in the possession of the Committee, or to attend Committee hearings or briefings on a non-participatory basis, must notify the Chief Clerk of the Committee in writing.

(2) Committee Consideration. The Committee shall consider each such request by non-Committee Members at the earliest practicable opportunity. The Committee shall determine, by roll call vote, what action it deems appropriate in light of all of the circumstances of each request. In its determination, the Committee shall consider.

(A) the sensitivity to the national defense or the confidential conduct of the foreign relations of the United States of the information sought;

(B) the likelihood of its being directly or indirectly disclosed;

(C) the jurisdictional interest of the Member making the request; and

(D) such other concerns, constitutional or otherwise, as may affect the public interest of the United States.

(3) Committee Action. After consideration of the Member's request, the Committee may take any action it may deem appropriate under the circumstances, including but not limited to:

(2) approving the request, in whole or part;

(3) denying the request; or

(A) providing the requested information or material in a different form than that sought by the Member.

(4) Requirements for Access by Non-Committee Members.

Prior to a non-Committee Member being given access to classified information pursuant to this subsection, the requesting Member shall—

(A) provide the Committee a copy of the oath executed by such Member pursuant to House Rule XXIII, clause 13; and

(B) agree in writing not to divulge any classified information provided to the Member pursuant to this subsection to any person not a Member of the Committee or the Committee Staff, except as otherwise authorized by the Committee in accordance with the Rules of the House and these rules.

(5) Consultation Authorized. When considering a Member's request, the Committee may consult the Director of Central Intelligence and such other officials it considers necessary.

(6) Finality of Committee Decisions.

(A) Should the Member making such a request disagree with the Committee's determination with respect to that request, or any part thereof, that Member must notify the Committee in writing of such disagreement.

(B) The Committee shall subsequently consider the matter and decide, by record vote, what further action or recommendation, if any, the Committee will take.

(g) Advising the House or Other Committees.

Pursuant to Section 501 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. §413), and to the Rules of the House, the Committee shall call to the attention of the House, or to any other appropriate committee of the House, those matters requiring the attention of the House, or such other committee, on the basis of the following provisions:

(1) By Request of Committee Member. At the request of any Member of the Committee to call to the attention of the House, or any other committee, executive session material in the Committee's possession, the Committee shall meet at the earliest practicable opportunity to consider that request.

(2) Committee Consideration of Request. The Committee shall consider the following factors, among any others it deems appropriate:

(A) the effect of the matter in question on the national defense or the foreign relations of the United States.

(B) whether the matter in question involves sensitive intelligence sources and methods;

(C) whether the matter in question otherwise raises serious questions affecting the national interest; and

(D) whether the matter in question affects manners within the jurisdiction of another Committee of the House.

(3) Views of Other Committees. In examining such factors, the Committee may seek the opinion of Members of the Committee appointed from standing committees of the House with jurisdiction over the matter in question, or submissions from such other committees.

(4) Other Advice. The Committee may, during its deliberations on such requests, seek the advice of any executive branch official.

(h) Reasonable Opportunity to Examine Materials.

Before the Committee makes any decision regarding any request for access to any classified information in its possession, or a proposal to bring any matter to the attention of the House or another committee, Members of the Committee shall have a reasonable opportunity to examine all pertinent testimony, documents, or other materials in the Committee's possession that may inform their decision on the question.

(i) Notification to the House.

The Committee may bring a matter to the attention of the House when, after consideration of the factors set forth in this rule, it considers the matter in question so grave that it requires the attention of all Members of the House, and time is of the essence, or for any reason the committee finds compelling.

(j) Method of Disclosure to the House.

(1) Should the Committee decide by roll call vote that a matter requires the attention of the House as described in subsection (i), it shall make arrangements to notify the House promptly.

(2) In such cases, the Committee shall consider whether:

(A) to request an immediate secret session of the House (with time equally divided between the Majority and the Minority); or

(B) to publicly disclose the matter in question pursuant to clause 11(g) of House Rule X.

(k) Requirement to Protect Sources and Methods.

In bringing a matter to the attention of the House, or another committee, the Committee, with due regard for the protection of intelligence sources and methods, shall take all necessary steps to safeguard materials or information relating to the matter in question.

(l) Availability of Information to Other Committees.

The Committee, having determined that a matter shall be brought to the attention of another committee, shall ensure that such matter, including all classified information related to that matter, is promptly made available to the chairman and ranking minority member of such other committee.

(m) Provision of Materials.

The director of Security and Registry for the Committee shall provide a copy of these rules, and the applicable portions of the Rules of the House of Representatives governing the handling of classified information, along with those materials determined by the Committee to be made available to such other committee of the House or Member (not a Member of the Committee).

(n) Ensuring Clearances and Secure Storage.

The Director of Security and Registry shall ensure that such other committee or Member (not a Member of the Committee) receiving such classified materials may properly store classified materials in a manner consistent with all governing rules, regulations, policies, procedures, and statutes.

(o) Log.

The Director of Security and Registry for the Committee shall maintain a written record identifying the particular classified document or material provided to such other committee or Member (not a Member of the Committee), the reasons agreed upon by the Committee for approving such transmission, and the name of the committee or Member (not a Member of the Committee) receiving such document or material.

(p) Miscellaneous Requirements.

(1) Staff Director's Additional Authority. The staff director is further empowered to provide for such additional measures, which he or she deems necessary, to protect such classified information authorized by the Committee to be provided to such other committee or Member (not a Member of the Committee).

(2) Notice to Originating Agency. In the event that the Committee authorizes the disclosure of classified information provided to the Committee by an agency of the executive branch to a Member (not a Member of the Committee) or to another committee, the Chairman may notify the providing agency of the Committee's action prior to the transmission of such classified information.

15. Legislative Calendar

(1) the legislative measures introduced and referred to the Committee;

(2) the status of such measures; and

(3) such other matters that the Committee may require.

(b) Revisions to the Calendar.

The calendar shall be revised from time to time to show pertinent changes.

(c) Availability.

(d) Consultation with Appropriate Government Entities.

Unless otherwise directed by the committee, legislative measures referred to the Committee shall be referred by the Chief Clerk to the appropriate department or agency of the Government for reports thereon.

16. Committee Travel

The Chairman may authorize Members and Committee Staff to travel on Committee business.

(b) Requests.

(1) Member Requests. Members requesting authorization for such travel shall state the purpose and length of the trip, and shall submit such request directly to the Chairman.

(2) Committee Staff Requests. Committee Staff requesting authorization for such travel shall state the purpose and length of the trip, and shall submit such request through their supervisors to the staff director and the Chairman.

(c) Notification to Members.

(1) Generally. Members shall be notified of all foreign travel of Committee Staff not accompanying a Member.

(2) Content. All Members are to be advised, prior to the commencement of such travel, of its length, nature, and purpose.

(d) Trip Reports.

(1) Generally. A full report of all issues discussed during any Committee travel shall be submitted to the Chief Clerk of the Committee within a reasonable period of time following the completion of such trip.

(2) Availability of Reports. Such report shall be:

(A) available for the review of any Member or Committee Staff; and

(B) considered executive session material for purposes of these rules.

(e) Limitations on Travel.

(1) Generally. The Chairman is not authorized to permit travel on Committee business of Committee Staff who have not satisfied the requirements of subsection (d) of this rule.

(2) Exception. The Chairman may authorize Committee Staff to travel on Committee business, notwithstanding the requirements of subsections (d) and (e) of this rule—

(B) in the event there are circumstances beyond the control of the Committee Staff hindering compliance with such requirements.

(f) Definitions.

For purposes of this rule the term "reasonable period of time" means:

(1) no later than 60 days after returning from a foreign trip; and

(2) no later than 30 days after returning from a domestic trip.

(C) Disciplinary Actions

The Committee shall immediately consider whether disciplinary action shall be taken in the case of any member of the Committee Staff alleged to have failed to conform to any Rule of the House of Representatives or to these rules.

(b) Exception.

In the event the House of Representatives is:

(1) in the recess period in excess of 3 days; or the Chairman of the full Committee, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, may take such immediate disciplinary actions deemed necessary.

(2) has adjourned sine die;

(c) Available Actions.

Such disciplinary action may include immediate dismissal from the Committee Staff.

(d) Notice to Members.

All Members shall be notified as soon as practicable, either by facsimile transmission or regular mail, of any disciplinary action taken by the Chairman pursuant to subsection (b).

(e) Reconsideration of Chairman's Actions.

A majority of the Members of the full Committee may vote to overturn the decision of the Chairman to take disciplinary action pursuant to subsection (b).

18. Broadcasting Committee Meetings

Whenever any hearing or meeting conducted by the Committee is open to the public, a majority of the Committee may permit that hearing or meeting to be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, subject to the provisions and in accordance with the spirit of the purposes enumerated in the Rules of the House.

19. Committee Records Transferred to the National Archives

The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(b) Notice of withholding.

The Chairman shall notify the Ranking Minority Member of any decision, pursuant to the Rules of the House of Representatives, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the full Committee for a determination of the question of public availability on the written request of any Member of the Committee.

20. Changes in Rules

These rules may be modified, amended, or repealed by vote of the full Committee.

(b) Notice of Proposed Changes.

A notice, in writing, of the proposed change shall be given to each Member at least 48 hours prior to any meeting at which action on the proposed rule change is to be taken.

LOW VOTER TURNOUT AMONG THE YOUTH OF AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, one of the untold and unspoken-about crises facing this country is that in many respects we are losing our democratic traditions. As you know, France recently had an election, and 80 percent of the people voted in that election. We are going to have an election in November, and the estimate is that 35, 36 percent of the American people are going to vote in our election. And, in fact, we end up having by far the lowest voter turnout of any industrialized and major nation on earth.

What makes the situation even scarier is that as low as the voter turnout in general is, it is especially low among young people, people 25 years of age or younger. And the estimates are that about 80 percent of those people do not vote. And what sociologists tell us that as these people get older, they are less likely to vote, which means the voter turnout will go down and down and down. And it is not just voter turnout, Mr. Speaker, it is that poll after poll shows that millions of Americans do not know how government functions, do not know anything about the major issues facing our country, and I think that this is a very scary situation.

With these concerns in mind, Mr. Speaker, on April 8, 2002, I held a town meeting geared toward young people, high school students. I wanted these high school students to understand that as citizens of the United States of America, they have the right to ask their Member of Congress questions and they have the right to voice their opinions about some of the most important issues facing our State and our country. And I am proud to tell you that we had about 14 different schools and youth organizations participate in that process.

I think the American people would have been extremely proud to have heard the intelligent comments and analysis and questions that these young people asked. I am very grateful that the University of Vermont allowed us to use their facilities. I am very grateful that we had many faculty members at high schools throughout the State helping us in this project.

Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do now is provide for the RECORD some of the very excellent testimony that we heard on that occasion.

Is NATO Necessary?

(On behalf of Hailey Davis)

HAILEY DAVIS: America is a great nation. It is a great nation with great abilities. Fighting distant wars just happens to be one of them. When it comes to equipment and technology needed to fight its wars, America has it all. The United States has become so independent and self-sufficient militarily and intellectually speaking, that it can put up a great fight alone. So the question arises: Do we need NATO anymore?

The fact that the United States is so much more technologically advanced than any of its NATO allies brings about an answer of: No. Frankly, we don't. We have increasingly lost every and any need for the NATO alliance, due not only to our technology but to the unilateralism of the Bush administration. He and his team tend to dislike fighting with aid from allies who might get in the way or limit America's room for military exercises.

Will the NATO nations ever fight together again? I'm quoting New York Times journalist Thomas L. Friedman here when I say that "to fight a modern war today you need four key issues: Many large transport aircraft to deploy troops to far-flung battlefields; precision-guided bombs and missiles that can hit enemy targets with a high degree of certitude, hence lowering number of civilian casualties; a large amount of special teams that can operate at night with the proper equipment; and secure and cryptic communications, so that ground and air troops can be connected in a high-tech war without the enemy listening in."

Now, America has all four of these Assets. No other nation does. Although Britain comes close, with Germany, France and Italy right behind it, the United States stands alone in its military stature. The fact that the European defense industries are not nearly as sophisticated as America's today, constitutes primarily for their dependence on the NATO alliance. Adding to this is the idea Europeans don't really feel threatened by the U.S.'s enemies, such as Bush's Axis of Evil, which includes Iraq, Iran, and North Korea, and therefore don't have much interest in spending a lot on defense. So if the Europeans really want NATO to last, perhaps they should invest more in military technology so that they can potentially fight a war alone, much like the U.S. can.

If the NATO alliance deals with countries helping each other fight wars, and America doesn't need this help, then I ask you to consider the question: Is NATO really necessary for the United States?

Change of Leadership in Middle East

(On behalf of Timothy Plante)

TIMOTHY PLANTE: Okay. The current aggression in Israel and its occupied territories represent a clash between two people, the Palestinians and the Israelis, and the leadership of these two states or people represent a clash of values, and the leaders of the two people—that would be Arafat and Sharon—are both very radical in their views, and they are opposing. In order to come to an agreement and to peace, something has to change, and that is what I'm going to deal with.

Ariel Sharon epitomizes the political views of his Likud party. This party's motto is: Don't give an inch. Negotiations with the Palestinians will never happen as long as Ariel Sharon is in power. He has no intention to negotiate for peace. Sharon has actually used violence as a campaign to get into his position.

One thing that he did during the run for the election of prime minister was that he went to the Temple Mount, and he basically did it to provoke violence from the Palestinians, to make Ehud Barak look like he didn't have control over the situation in Israel. As soon as we went up there, he—although he didn't do anything, he just went up there and looked around, he did that because he knew it would tick off the Palestinians. And they started a campaign of violence in retaliation, and this made Barak look bad, and therefore Ariel Sharon came into power.

In order for Arafat to continue his campaign against the Palestinians, he has now started to be extremely aggressive against the Palestinians. The Palestinians have many martyrs, as they call them, which have been—they have been killed by the Israeli army as collateral damage, and these are women and children and men, and these people didn't intend any violence to the Israelis, but they died because the Israelis were being aggressors.

And then the Palestinians take these martyrs, and they say: Look what happens to us. We want to retaliate. So they retaliate with suicide bombers, and then Ariel Sharon wants to retaliate against the suicide bombers, and this creates a cycle of violence and destruction.

I believe the only way to end this cycle is through our allies the Israelis. Not many people know the U.S. gives, as Tim said earlier, the .1 percent—or whatever the number was, one-third of that money goes directly to the Israelis. So one-third of our foreign aid goes to the Israelis, and of that figure, $2.04 billion is in military aid, and $720 million is in economic aid. This is obviously showing that we are as belligerent as Sharon is, and as the Israeli Likud party is.

The only way to stop the aggression is by us altering the funding that we give to the Israeli people. If we tell Sharon that he needs to stop being violent and belligerent, he needs to stop invading these territories and stop killing people, and have his army stop doing all the negative things he is doing, he might laugh. But if we say, We are funding your country, and threaten to take away the funding, he won't have an army anymore. He will have nothing to attack with. So if we play hardball with Sharon, we will be able to influence him into bringing along peace.

Now, on the other side is Yasar Arafat. And this guy is a waffle. He picks one side that is the most popular, to stay in power. He has been in power for a very long time. He started out as a terrorist or as a freedom fighter, he did terrorist acts, and he gained popularity. And he has changed his views on the position several times. But he does this to stay in power.

And the popular thing right now is to go against the Israelis and the Americans. So what Yasar Arafat says to the American press in English is not what he says to his own people in his language. It is completely different. and he is sending mixed messages to the world. He and his people are using the international media as a way of showing their side of the story, to gain sympathy in the international field, and this is creating problems for Israel, making them look bad, and this is creating problems for America, which has been referred to as "the big Satan."

To recap, if we force the Israelis to come to a peace agreement with the Palestinians by either giving up the occupied territories or coming to some sort of agreement, a cease-fire, the Palestinian people will find peace, they won't have as many martyrs. This will be a good thing. Because Yasar Arafat goes on popular opinion, and as popular opinion will turn towards peace instead of violence, that will bring an end to the problem in Israel.

Bettering Education

(On behalf of Elizabeth Christolini)

ELIZABETH CHRISTOLINI: Middle East conflict. Just as I wish that someday there will be peace between the Israelis and Arabs, I wish also that there were peace in the workings of the education system within the United States. The question, then, which I propose, perhaps foolishly, is how to go about achieving this peace.

By traveling 45 minutes twice a day, five days a week to a parochial high school in Burlington. I am going to school not so much for the religious faith but rather because my parents and I felt that my local high school was not a place from which I could create a solid future.

Our assessment of both schools was done much in the same way that one's college choices may be established, by research concerning a wide variety of things, the most important of which was teacher accountability or lack thereof, the lack of accountability—by that, I mean the disregard on behalf of a teacher for his or her student, or where a student is passed through a grade despite the fact that he or she has not truly completed work satisfactorily enough to be granted admission to the next grade.

While the school I currently attend is a far cry from perfect, I feel that I have learned more than I would have had I attended my local high school. As pleased as I am to say that my education has done something to me and will enable me to do more in the future, I, at the same time, find myself thinking of the students who do attend my local high school, who are, as I am, nearly finished with their high school careers, and who may be wishing their own education had been better or different.

My belief is that, if education is to work as it ought to, there should be no need for private and public schools. There should, instead, be the same form of education available in each and every institution. In saying this, I do not mean for the creation of a flat-out equality where what is right for one is right for all, but, rather, the kind of education that I received in my high school should be given to all of the students; and vice versa, those classes and options which are not available today in my school should be maintained.

Such a sharing could be done through the creation of a new institution where a public school is interconnected or combined, whether a private or parochial school, while still retaining the government funds, as well as the right of separation of church and state. In essence, such an institution would provide students everywhere for a better and cheaper education, thus enabling more families to have the funds needed to pay for cost of college tuition.

Within the shared schools, advanced placement, honors, remedial and other classes which catered towards a person's strengths and weaknesses would not only be available, but, as well, each would hold to a strictly followed set of prerequisites such as tests, shared recommendation for prior classes, on which admission to such a class could be based, allowing for the classes to be taught at a level specified to students who truly meet this level.

Payment of teachers would be increased, in conjunction with the more demanding set of stipulations on which these teachers would be hired. Rather than giving the position to a person simply for the fact that he or she showed up for the interview and had achieved a minimal degree, a teacher's performance in achieving this degree, as well as to their overall talent and work ethic, would be considered.

With the hiring of these qualified as well as motivated people—and I know there are some out there, as I have had the privilege to work with a few of them—there would not be the need for the constant testing as is proposed by President Bush's No Child Left Behind Act, where each child from the third to eight grade would be tested every year in areas of math, science and English. If a teacher does his or her job not just adeptly, but, as well, enthusiastically, it stands to reason that, in combination with up-to-date facilities, the testing of students each year to ensure the continued progression of the student body would not be needed. It would be an accurate assumption to say that both teaching and learning are occurring at or above the standard level.

This new institution should be formed through the right kind of slow but effective change. The place at which to start these changes is in our current schools, public and parochial as well as private. Reform should be made to encompass a strict non-toleration rule concerning drugs and alcohol. This action should include suggestions toward rehabilitation centers as well as the intervention programs. The following of this rule will alleviate the various student behavioral problems, and leave within each school only those truly willing to learn.

From this point, the reevaluation and decisions concerning positions held and ability of each teacher should be tested in a manner similar to the no-tolerance rule for students, whereas those teachers who do not wish to, should not, and, consequently, would not be teaching. Lastly, evaluation for the remaining teachers as well as students should be made concerning classes. A decision should be informed not only by those classes which are had and not needed, but as well as by those needed and not had.

With these changes put into effect, it is my belief that the creation of a quality high school education for each and every student in each and every institution would be on its way.

MULTINATIONAL IMPACT

(On behalf of Rebecca Lee Marquis)

REBECCA LEE MARQUIS: I would like to speak today on the subject of fast food and how it is permeating our society, promoting an unhealthy way of life, costing a tremendous amount of money in healthcare, and the immoral way in which it targets young children around the world in its advertising. Ray Crock, the founder of McDonald's, said, "A child who loves our television commercials and brings her grandparents to a McDonald's gives us two more customers."

We are a nation of instant gratification. We live in a time when everyone moves at a fast pace. The act of eating, whether it is breakfast, lunch or dinner, is no longer a social time for families. Our society used to be much more aware of what it was eating and where the food came from. As we become more isolated from food production, we become ignorant of how it is grown, processed and marketed.

Many people today consider themselves too busy to take the time to think about and prepare healthy meals. For breakfast, lunch or dinner, we quickly pull into variously shaped but strategically located buildings and emerge with breakfast sandwiches, hamburgers, fish sandwiches, fried chicken, tacos, pizza, fries, shakes, soda, and all the promotional gadgets that accompany this food. Seesaws, slides, and rainbow-colored balls are attractive, but when it gets down to brass tacks, a brand new article on fast food notes, the key to attracting kids is toys, toys, toys.

But what do we get for this trade-off of time for convenience? We get overly priced, highly processed, high-calorie, high-fat, low-nutritional food. We get food with manufactured flavors that will taste exactly the same from Boston to San Francisco to Tokyo. These types of eating habits have led us to our national problem of obesity, which translates into countless related health problems, costing millions of dollars in healthcare.

The original Ronald McDonald was a man by the name of Willard Scott. He was later deemed too overweight; McDonald's wanted someone thinner to sell it burgers, shakes and fries. These facts are well-known, and, as adults, we have the ability to make informed decisions. What is appalling is that we allow these massive corporations to direct huge national advertising campaigns at our youth.

Three billion dollars a year is spent on just television advertising. That number does not include the countless other ways that advertisements are ingrained into our minds. These corporations bribe our school systems with cash payments so that they can market products to captive audiences. Instead of schools being places of exploration and learning, they risk becoming warehouses for corporations to sell products and brainwash future consumers.

We allow the same corporations to develop movies and cartoons that are nothing more than continuous advertisements. The corporation's goal is to hook its customers at younger ages so that they can create consumers for life. The chains often distribute numerous versions of a toy, encouraging repeat visits by small children.

What can we do to counter these less-than-admirable situations? We can begin to slow down and take time to learn where our food comes from and how it is processed. We can become better educated about nutrition and try to buy only foods that are grown, processed and marketed responsibly. We can learn to grow small gardens, to become better acquainted with our own health. We can lobby our government leaders to outlaw the marketing in schools and the marketing to young children. We need to stop being passive consumers or we risk becoming captive consumers.

U.S. AID TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

(On behalf of Tim Fitzgerald)

TIM FITZGERALD: Foreign aid, began by the United States starting in 1941 and continued after the Second World War. This plan for rebuilding war-torn nations became known as the Marshall Plan. About $12 billion dollars was distributed under this plan, and it was responsible for helping the nations of Europe regain some financial stability.

Longer-reaching reconstruction was funded by the World Bank. Later, aid was given to strengthen countries' militaries, and less humanitarian aid was provided. In the late 1990s, less than one percent of the gross national product of the United States of America was used for foreign aid.

A simple analogy can be used to understand this percentage. Imagine a man who possesses 100 ears of corn, each with 100 kernels. Now, the man has many neighbors who are starving to death on a yearly basis, but the man gives away only a total of twelve kernels of corn in 1998. Not only is the percent minuscule, but part of this amount never reaches these people doe to the corruption in their governments.

This may seem ridiculous, but it is what is happening with U.S. foreign aid. Instead of giving military aid to nations, it would be much more conducive to provide food and supplies to developing nations. Especially those in sub-Saharan Africa, with the AIDS epidemic continuing to plague this part of the world, this minuscule amount of financial support being given seems ludicrous.

Even with President Bush' s provmise of $5 billion extra in foreign aid, there are problems. Distribution of funds and aid is a major problem. Giving aid directly to the unstable regimes which govern the poorer states is not a good policy. Work of this kind should be done directly with the population. This would be more efficient for governments that are unable to distribute aid and prevent corrupt ones from stealing it.

An important part of foreign aid is healthcare. Many African nations are unable to take care of giving children basic inoculations, let alone the staggering number of individuals living with HIV AIDS. In some places, about 35 percent of the adult population has contracted the disease. Education is also needed to help these developing nations.

But the key to healthcare is efficiency. Private healthcare organizations are leading the way with this. Vaccines often go bad while on route to those who need them, so a new type of indicator was developed to tell those containers that still retain potency from those that are past their prime. This development helps to waste as little as possible of supplies that are often in short supply anyway.

Education is an important part of foreign aid, which is often ignored. This includes people from all sections of society—men, women, children, and all ethnicities. An example of this is the amount of children being born in sub-Saharan Africa. Traditionally, families in Africa has many children, as a sign of prestige and help with work. If these families were informed how having more children is both a strain on family and country, they might have less children, thus freeing more aid and bettering the chances for survival of their child. With resources being strained less, there might be a better chance for the development of a strong body of workers who would in turn improve the economy, and ultimately the government.

Foreign aid is an important part of foreign policy and must be utilized in order to truly secure the United States of America. States in poverty are often unstable and this can translate into a hatred of the United States. For example, the average income of an individual in certain states could be under $500. That is not to say it is the only factor involved, in certain situations. Far from it. But perhaps, if the standard of living was increased, there would be less of a sense of unrest.

Aid must, however, be reformed in two main ways. First, more must be spent by the United States on foreign aid in general. Secondly, distribution must be looked at. It is not helpful to send aid to a foreign country which does not have the means to distribute it or withholds it for some other reason. A $5 billion increase will help, but so will increasing efficiency so that money goes further.

So, Congressman Sanders, I would ask you that, when and if legislation on foreign aid reform comes up, you work for and vote for foreign aid reform.

Arab-Israel Conflict

(On behalf of Pierson Booher)

PIERSON BOOHER: The increasing violence in the Middle East led many people to question our nation's policy in the region. Since the creation of the state of Israel in 1948, the United States has had fluctuating relations with Middle Eastern countries.

It took heavy convincing by President Jimmy Carter to persuade Anwar Sadat to recognize Israel and form good relations with the country and Prime Minister Menachem Begin. The Camp David accords of 1979 stirred up the Arab world, eventually resulting in the assassination of Sadat in 1981.

The Middle East is not a liberal region, but rather a land of Islamic extremists ready to defend their faith to block the spread of westernization. Back in time before the Gulf War, before Lebanon, before the Six Day War, and even before the creation of Israel, the world has been saturated with the Middle East, not because of their culture or the beauty of the land, but rather because of a prosperous natural product that floods the region: Oil.

Our nation's dependency on oil has led us to base our relations in the region solely on the influence of oil in regards to a particular problem. President Bush has attempted to find alternative sources of oil by improving relations with Russian President Vladimir Putin, and pushing for drilling in the Alaskan wildlife refuge.

The increasing numbers of suicide bombings in Israel has led many to question the definition of the word "terrorism." Terrorism can be defined as an act of violence done to a group of persons. Although there are many similarities between President Bush's terrorists and Ariel Sharon's terrorists, Bush has shifted his stance.

He recently sent envoy Anthony Zinney back to the region to help ease tensions and push for peace. Bush also sent Secretary of State Colin Powell to Israel last Thursday to bid an end to the conflict. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon recently declared war on Yasar Arafat and the PLO. Unwilling to resume peace talks until Arafat helps put an end to terrorism existing in Israel. In response Arab leaders have said that ending occupation will lead to the end of terrorism.

President Bush's war on terrorism came as a result of the September 11th tragedies, while Sharon's war on terrorism stems from the suicide bombings that have taken place for a few years, the bombings being a result of the 35-year occupation of Palestinian territories. Diplomats have said that the Arab world is looking to the United States to draw red lines for Israel, for it to withdraw its forces from Palestinian territories. In response, columnist Friedman has said, if Arab leaders have only the moral courage to draw lines around Israel's behavior, but no moral courage to decry the utterly corrupt and inept Palestinian leadership for the depravity of suicide bombers in the name of Islam, then we're going nowhere.

Sharon probably wishes he had dealt with Arafat in Beirut when he had the chance. But he did not do anything more than allow the PLO to regroup and regain momentum. In order for the United States to have an impact on the current Arab-Israeli conflict, the country must begin working from the bottom up. We have from the Iran Contra issue that there are other anti-Israeli countries supplying Palestinian militant groups with weapons.

Unlike the Israel army, the U.S. must seek to cut off the suppliers, such as Iran. In doing so, the U.S. will destroy the lifelines of the militant groups in the region, most notably Hamas, Islamic Jihad, the Al Aqsa Brigade and another group. After the militant group's suicide bombings, all that is left is the heart of the people. Yes, no one will be able to destroy the foundation of the Palestinian struggle (inaudible) nationalism. But the destruction of those who facilitate the cause would be a decisive and crushing blow.

At a meeting with British Prime Minister Tony Blair over the weekend, the President said that Iraq would be a better place without Saddham Hussein. The same can be said about Palestine and Israel with regards to Yasar Arafat. One could also say the same about the world with regard to Osama bin Laden. But what President Bush needs to understand is that there could very well be an even more persuasive, powerful Napoleonic man looming in the background waiting for his moment to take over in a coupless revolution.

If Hussein refuses to meet the demands of the U.N. weapons inspectors, there could very well be a U.S. return to Iraq and a more dangerous successor. The United States needs to understand that our nation has become too reliant on the Middle East oil. We live in a country that is enormously dependent on a natural resource that is found in a hostile region. The U.S. must reduce their dependence on the region's oil and look elsewhere, something Bush has already begun to do.

Because of our new relations with Russia and the access of oil that is in circulation, gas prices have fallen 7.1 cents since last year, to an average of $1.32 per gallon. A decrease in dependency on the Middle East oil reserves will help give the country more confidence and less to lose.

In the past we have based many of our diplomatic relations and war strategies around the impact it would have on our ability to obtain oil. Along with the exporting of oil, Russia could serve as a possible coalition member down the road. As a result of this retraction, the United States gives itself more leeway in the Arab world and begins to lose the title of taker.

There may never be a conclusion to the conflict between Israelis and Palestinians. The fighting has gone for so long, there does not seem to be an end in sight. The second Intifada has proven many wrong when they said that the Palestinians had no chance against the might of the Israeli defense forces.

The disciplined Israeli army is scared to work in the occupied territories, fearful that they will be killed by a suicidal Palestinian. The Massad, Israel's renowned intelligence bureau, and arguably the best in the world, has failed in providing pivotal information.

The United States' success in the Middle East begins with the successful defense of the Israeli policy of withdrawal of dependency on the region's oil. But our diplomacy in the region has been suspect in the past. We cannot handle relations in Iran. We give foreign aid to Turkey, who turns around and uses the money to oppress the Kurds. And we have angered many of the Muslims who live in the world.

The United States needs to sit down and decide exactly what stance it wants to take in the region, and deal with the problems that result from their decision. The question now is, can the United States step up to the plate and prove that we are the most powerful country in the world?

Alternate Energy Vehicles

(On behalf of Jack Fleisher and Elden Kelly)

JACK FLEISHER: We are going to be talking about alternative energy vehicles today.

Motor vehicle transportation is invaluable to people across the globe. In Vermont alone, fossil fuel comprises 65 percent of total petroleum energy use. In today's industrial society, the lifestyles of most humans depend on automotive transportation.

Unfortunately, the operation of such vehicles requires the combustion of fossil fuels that release greenhouse gases as carbon dioxide. Acting essentially as a heat-trapping gas when released into the atmosphere, carbon dioxide could potentially contribute to a rise in the global temperature. The global warming is a serious environmental concern that will significantly impact the entire world's ecology. That is why we must begin to act now by taking advantage of currently available alternative energy vehicles in Vermont as a step toward a mode of transportation that is at once environmentally sound as well as readily accessible.

ELDEN KELLY: I am going to discuss three types of alternative energy vehicles, that being electric, hybrid, and biodiesel.

First, we will direct your attention to electric vehicles. For a motor vehicle that runs on gasoline, approximately 85 cents of every dollar are consumed by smoke and heat alone, which leaves only 15 cents out of every dollar to be used in actual operation. But for the electric car, with the efficiency of a battery, 55 cents are used at the actual driving wheels.

Batteries are only getting more efficient for electric vehicles. Lithium batteries have increased the mileage capacity from 120 miles from each charge to over 300 miles. an electric car can be 97 percent cleaner than a car that runs on fossil fuels if the pollution of the electric power plants are eliminated. Electric cars will meet this efficiency standard as Vermont moved towards utilizing more alternative energy sources, such as wind and geothermal power, which Dean has mentioned as possible litigation. Over 90 percent of the daily trips made in the U.S. are under 50 miles. This is well within the range of most electric vehicles, that are about 40 to 60 miles.

JACK FLEISHER: A second type of alternative energy transportation are hybrid vehicles, which is a combination of electricity and gasoline. There are primarily two hydrocars available in the U.S., the Honda Insight and Toyota Prias. The power source of the Insight is called a parallel hybrid system. The car possesses a fuel tank that supplies gasoline to an engine, as well as batteries that supplies power to an electrical energy motor. Both the engine and the motor can activate the transmission at the same time, setting the wheels in motion.

As opposed to an electric vehicle, these two hybrid models never have to recharge from an external electrical power source. Instead, a set of batteries harnesses the energy dispelled from the engine, as well as the energy released from braking. The Insight, on the other hand is capable of fuel efficiency at 70 miles per gallon. The Toyota Prias is slightly different. It is comprised of a series hybrid system. In this case, a gasoline engine is used to power a generator that supplies energy to the battery's electric motor.

The Prias is equipped with a gear box that allows the vehicle to run solely on the electric motor, the gas engine, or both simultaneously. Both hybrid cars exceed the fuel efficiency of all vehicles that run solely on gasoline, and cut greenhouse-gas emissions in half.

This ingenious concept springs from the fact that the oils used in modern day petroleum come from the same plants that are still around today, such as soy and palm oil. The essential oils that, after much time, produce petroleum are available immediately from nearly any vegetable substance. The oils obtained can only be used as a fuel source for diesel vehicles, due to a fundamental difference between the operation of diesel- and gasoline-powered engines.

A diesel system uses high heat and pressure for combustion, which a gasoline-powered engine cannot provide. Biodiesel requires conditions of high heat and pressure in order to burn effectively. Fortunately, in order to use biodiesel, no modification is necessary for the working diesel engine.

The production of biodiesel is incredibly simple compared to the complex process of refining petroleum. Biodiesel is composed of only a simple mixture of vegetable oil, lye and methanol. The transglycerides present in the acids of the vegetable oil are combined with sodium and potassium hydroxide of the lye and methanol, which produces the compound methyloxide. The triglycerides react with methyloxides resulting in the formation of methyl esters, which is burnable by biodiesel, and also a by-product, glycerin.

Using biodiesel in vehicles is probably the single most inexpensive manner of operating a fuel-burning vehicle, in that its sources, vegetable oils, can be reused. Used soybean oil, for example, from a fast-food restaurant that is throwing away millions of gallons daily can be recycled in the engine of the car burning clear of greenhouse-gas emissions.

The little carbon dioxide that is released from the combusion of biodiesel is reduced by the plants in respiration. So the very sources of biodiesel plants have what help to reduce these minor emissions. A plant by-product in this way completes the natural role that plants already play in a cycle of conservation. Unlike petroleum fuel, biodiesel originates from the renewable sources that ensure a supply of energy for vehicles in the future.

Moreover, the oils used in biodiesel are available right now for usage in vehicles. 3.5 billion gallons of vegetable oil are used in the U.S. every day, and already, biodiesel companies are receiving soybean oil free, because of the current surplus of soybean oil. Excitingly, this wasted resource can be utilized in the vehicles that are now unreasonably inefficient.

No longer will we have to worry about the dwindling supply of petroleum resources, taking advantage of the more easily produced and more readily available biodiesel.

JACK FLEISHER: In conclusion, we must assert that alternative energy vehicles are not merely a scientist's gadget or a new gimmick. As responsible human beings, we must look towards ways in which we can better our actions, in order to make the world a better place for future generations. One of the ways in which we can do that is by reducing our reliance on fossil fuels, which, when consumed, result in various hazardous effects.

In recent months, concern over reliance on Middle East oil has spread because of the attacks of September 11th. Many speculated that money generated from Middle Eastern oil sales to the United States has financed terrorist operations such as the attack on the World Trade Center. Unfortunately, many politicians have responded to this concern with a renewed fervor for drilling domestically, such as in Alaska.

However, we wish to refocus this issue in terms of alternative energy vehicles, which would rid our dependence on oil altogether, ensuring that gas money doesn't end up in Al Qaeda's pockets, and that the Earth is a cleaner, cooler place for years to come.

This takes us to our next area of concern, the rise in global temperature on Earth. Throughout history, major shifts in temperature——

CONGRESSMAN SANDERS: I will ask you to try to tighten it up.

ELDEN KELLY: All right.

Lastly, we will close with possible ways to institute alternative energy vehicles in Vermont. To place emphasis on improved efficiency of such vehicles, tax incentives to be supplied for owners of biodiesel, electric and hybrid vehicles.

An active public campaign needs to be launched, with the goal in mind and educate motorists of the environmental impact of cars that run on fossil fuel, and to make them aware of the attainability of these greatly affordable, available and simple vehicles that do not impact the environment negatively.

Already, alternative energy vehicles are in promotion across the U.S. The organization E-Vermont has been testing the viability of the vehicles in colder climates, and finding great success. There was concern that the vehicles would have difficulty remaining heated, since there is no direct heat source, but space heaters have been installed to solve the problem. Right here in UVM, a bus runs on biodiesel. Isn't that a testament already to the real practicality of alternative energy?

To continue our vision as concerned citizens, we wish that the government of Vermont realizes the potential of alternative-energy vehicles by making a conscious decision to make energy efficiency a top priority in transportation, and in doing so, to help the realization of alternative-energy vehicles come to fruition.

RANDOM DRUG TESTING OF STUDENTS

(On behalf of Lindy Stetson)

LINDY STETSON: I am here to discuss random drug testing throughout high schools for students participating in extracurricular activities. This is an action being taken throughout the United States.

Even though most students prefer that it wasn't an option for school authorities, I believe this is a good idea, because, as a varsity sports participant and a band member of my high school, I think that overall performance is important in athletics and in music. Everyone should be on top of their game, so to speak, which can't happen if someone on the team is using drugs throughout the game or during the season.

But I think that, if random drug testing is going to be an option, it is important about what happens once the athlete or student who participates in extracurricular activities has tested positive. I think that, at my school, we have a school policy that addresses this issue, saying, if caught using drugs or alcohol, the student is dismissed from the team for 14 calendar days, and must go through counseling.

I think this is a good start, but there needs to be a stronger form of punishment, because if a student uses drugs, then there is obviously something wrong, and they need help, which should be more than counseling. Not only has the participant harmed himself or herself, they also could cause damage to the rest of the team.

For example, look at the recent events that have happened in this winter sports season, especially at Middlebury High School, where four varsity members were caught using alcohol during the season. They were then forced to miss ten days of the basketball season. This incident not only affected the four athletes as individuals, but it forced the team to forfeit four games, because these players were very important players on the team. But what surprised me even more was that these four athletes were still allowed to practice, but could not participate in the games.

Even though many complain random drug testing violates civil rights, I believe that you have signed a contract stating that you will not use alcohol or other drugs while participating in a sport event. I mean, look at the Olympics. Many medals have been stripped from athletes because of using drugs to enhance their performance. They have volunteered to participate in the Olympics and have been selected by their country to represent them there. And it is the same in high school athletics. You have been chosen to show your high school your ability, and other high schools throughout the state.

CIVIL RIGHTS

(On behalf of Vanessa Hinton and Thomas Lawson)

VANESSA HINTON: In the events of September 11th, we, the citizens of America, have helped expose an unsafety in America. In order to prevent any event related to terrorism, the American government has passed the Patriot's Act that allows them to take anyone into custody without reliable evidence to back up their reasons.

This is dangerous for those who criticize the government, giving the government officials the right to arrest anyone at will. The U.S. is abusing domestic liberties by detaining people suspected of terrorism and police surveillance of those who oppose government policies. The military is also holding private hearings of suspected persons without releasing information. The government is violating human rights by doing this, and are becoming terrorists themselves.

No war has been declared. So why are we going to such extreme measures as this? There has been a significant increase of law enforcement to monitor technology and the Internet. Government files have been released to lower-ranking law enforcement, but not the public. They have also been given the right to tap phone lines without probable cause. How can we trust a government who doesn't give us reasons or evidence as to why they are going to such extreme measures?

THOMAS LAWSON: For example, Sieem Al Aran (phonetic) a Muslim professor at the University of South Florida, was fired for reasons officials said was because of his speeches presented to a class on Muslim views. The superintendent of the school said that they felt a threat if Sieem stayed, and wished they had fired him sooner. Does this not go against the First Amendment of the Constitution, freedom of speech?

Another example takes place on an American flight from Baltimore to Dallas, Wendel Shattner (phonetic) was told to leave the plane for more checks because of his dark skin and the fact that he was a federal agent carrying a gun. He had previously filled out the proper form stating that he was a federal agent, and, indeed, had a weapon. Yet Shattner got off the plane, and a flight attendant found a book labeled The Crusade through Arab Eyes. This was enough evidence to take him back to headquarters, where he was further questioned.

Maybe in order for our rights not to be violated, we should, in turn, question our leaders. If we turn our heads, we are just as guilty as the condemned.

Thank you.

NATIONAL CIVIL UNIONS

(On behalf of Chastity Norris and Kim Lunna)

CHASTITY NORRIS: We are here today to talk about civil unions. We believe that there should be a national one. I know that when Vermont passed civil unions, there were a lot of people who put up signs saying "Take Back Vermont." People didn't feel it was right for homosexuals to have the same tax benefits and marriage benefits. No matter what you call it, marriage, holy union, commitment ceremony, it's about the love between two people, no matter whether heterosexual or homosexual.

KIM LUNNA: Of course, civil union marriages have the same consequences as a hetrosexual marriage. Parties to a civil union shall be responsible for the support of one another to the same degree and in the same manner as married people. The law of domestic relations, including separation and divorce, child custody, and support, and property division and maintenance, the rights of parties to a civil union with respect to a child of whom either becomes the natural parent during the term of a civil union shall be the same as those of a married couple.

CHASTITY NORRIS: From the Internet, we got summaries of talks about civil unions in other states. In November of 1998, the constitutional amendment added to Alaska's state constitution, to be valid or recognized, a marriage must exist between a man and a woman. In 1996, Arizona declared that marriage between persons of the same sex is void or prohibited, and that same-sex marriage from other states are not valid.

KIM LUNNA: According to the Declaration of Independence, we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that cannot be taken away, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. How can someone pursue happiness if they are not allowed to live their lives the same way as everyone else and show their commitment forever through marriage? We don't think that everyone is being treated equal.

CHASTITY NORRIS: Ed Flanagan is the only openly gay state auditor. His sexual orientation was not a problem five years ago, but now it is. "It is an issue in every race in Vermont," said Flanagan, a Democrat. This is about quality and fairness, and nothing more.

When people think of civil unions, they often only think of gays and lesbians. They don't think of the benefits that come from marriage, benefits such as estate, medical insurance, social security and retirement. The decision of the marriage should be up to those in the relationship, not outside people.

A solution we had was to suggest a constitutional amendment to force each state to vote on whether they believed in civil unions or not.

Thank you.

AFFORDABLE CHILDCARE

(On behalf of Amy Downs and Anissa Martin)

AMY DOWNS: We are here to make a presentation on affordable child care for everybody. We are just here to make sure that both single moms and struggling couples, whether if they're married or single, receive proper child care assistance, and for it to be a safe and educational environment.

As a person who doesn't have any kids, as opposed Anissa here, I see that some families need assistance, including those who are not on welfare and that have people working making eight dollars an hour, and that's like $800 to $900 a month they are just bringing in. That doesn't count the bills they have to pay or the food to buy for their families, and other necessities to support their kids.

People are having kids at a younger age, and in order to get proper assistance they would basically have to be on welfare to be able to afford it. And if they're not on welfare, they will have to wait just a pay off their day care bills. It is not worth it to some, and they just end up falling back on welfare, and basically the whole point of the system is to get people off of welfare. That is why it is only like a five-year agreement now.

And you can't really do that if you have kids to look out for all the time. Basically, in the long run, it isn't worth dealing with the system. It doesn't help you out. It is just a waste of time, and they don't have the time, when they have kids, to worry about just it. They would rather just stay home and collect welfare, and do nothing and get everything paid for.

ANISSA MARTIN: Before I go on, kids need to stop having kids. Thank you.

Child care cost about $468 a month in a licensed day care with no assistance. Because people are having babies at a younger age, they drop out of school and take care of them. Now, when they decide to go back to school, they are going to need help. Most get assistance, if they are single moms, to help to meet their needs. Most get assistance if they are single moms, but when you have one person that works and one person that wants to go back to school, like me, you don't get as much assistance as others would.

The system says to you, it's too much. When you are only making $8 an hour, that is not enough. We want to make sure that there is more assistance available for those who want to work and go back to school, as well as those single moms that are out there, who are struggling to get off welfare.

And it is real hard. Me and my fiance, I volunteered from New York to move down here to better my life, and when I went down to welfare, they did not help me. They said, well, it was a voluntary move. And I had to struggle on my own to go to school, finish my education and for my fiance to find a good-paying job in order for us to survive. It is just me and him; I don't have no family or no one. I expected for the welfare to help me out, which they didn't. I had to do it on my own. And I am only receiving food stamps up to this day. But now we figured out, forget them, we are going to have to do it on our own. It would be really helpful if they do help me, which I am not receiving help.

TAXATION OF MINORS

KEITH BLOW: We are here to raise the issue of tax withdrawal from minors' paychecks. We feel it is unnecessary to withdraw federal and state taxes from people under the age of 18. We, as working teens, believe there is no need for our money to be taken away from us before we are adults.

JESSICA OAKES: In today's society of high-priced items, it is difficult for us to balance schoolwork and personal possessions such as a car, school, gas, insurance, et cetera. We work hard for the little money we earn. The reality is that we only get minimum wage, and then should be able to keep the little amount of money that we do earn. We feel we should be able to keep this money to save up for higher education, motor transportation and our personal expenses.

JESSICA DAVIS: My friend works as a cashier receiving only 5.50 per hour. This is not even minimum wage. Juggling schoolwork and a social life, he is also trying to pay off a truck. It is taking him longer to make payments because of his small paycheck, not to mention the taxes being taken away from it. If the government took out less or no taxes from his paycheck until he was 18, he would be able to pay the truck off more efficiently and have more time to concentrate on other important issues, without worrying about not having enough money to pay for the truck.

SHIRLAINE MILLER: At this age, we are not old enough to vote, fight in the military, drink, or sign a legal document for ourselves. Therefore, the law still considers us children. With the government taking money out of our paychecks, they are taking money away from their children. If we aren't even allowed to vote, and if we have no say in what the government does, why should we pay taxes towards that?

RUHIN YURIDULLA: Thank you, Congressman Sanders. I am not a U.S. citizen, but as far as my experience is concerned, living in the other countries far from the United States, this thing of income taxes from a minor's check seems very unfair to me. Because if they did not take taxes out of our paychecks, it is likely they can get it from the food that we eat, from the utilities that we use, and from all the things we use in daily life.

So those taxes can be taken out and they can go to the government, but unlikely if they take that check, I mean, money from out of the paychecks of minors. That is like nothing, because minors have to save some money for their future. I mean, they are going to go to college, or they have to build their own lives. I think it should be, I mean, a low should be passed on this, in order to regard it as not to be taking money out of minors' paychecks.

Thanks.

KEITH BLOW: So in conclusion, we feel the government should not take out any taxes from people's paychecks that are under the age of 18. It is unfair how the government still considers us children if we are not 18, but it is hypocritical of them when they take the taxes away from us, because we can't even vote, so why should they take taxes away from us if we can't have a say in what they do with it.

JESSICA DAVIS: Taxation without representation, pretty much.

INVESTING IN CHILDREN

My name is Megan Sullivan. I come before you now as a representative of a group of students at Harwood Union High School, in a class called Other Voices. This is a course that focuses on the suppressed and forgotten voices of past and present. We read part of a book by Jonathan Kozol entitled Savage Inequalities.

In this book, Mr. Kozol addresses the issues of the lack of responsibility that we as a society show for other peoples' children. Children who are not even given a chance to fail, let alone to succeed, but are put in the situation because of their financial and, many times, racial backgrounds. As a class, we explored the concept of other peoples' children, and the social implications that such a concept holds.

We are here today because we reject that concept. The children of the nation are the responsibility of the nation. We should, as citizens of these United States, provide the same opportunities to succeed in education, regardless of one's ability to pay.

We live in a state that recognizes the right to equitable education regardless of the ability to pay. Vermont's solution to the problem of inequalities between schools in the state was Act 60. Though this is a very controversial issue among Vermonters, and a complicated act, the results cannot be denied: Act 60 is making significant and steady progress in reducing inequalities in student resources.

Prior to Act 60, property-rich towns spent an average of 37 percent more per pupil compared to the poorest towns. In the fiscal year of 2002, the spending gap was less than 13 percent. Bearing in mind how well this has worked in a mere few years in Vermont, we reason that setting up a system much like Act 60 on a national level could have similar effect on a much grander scale.

The right to an equitable education is not one that is promised in the United States Constitution. However, the federal government is putting mandates on schools, ranging from funding of special education to national testing. It is not ethical to make education reform without providing adequate resources. The government does appropriate money towards education, but it is not nearly enough.

The House Minority Report, Education in Crisis, notes that, nationwide, state education cuts already total $11.3 billion. The educational reforms included aim high by expecting all students to meet challenging standards and holding schools accountable when they fail. But if the federal government is going to hold states accountable for student performance, it must also provide the resources needed to meet new federal goals.

Failing schools cannot be turned around with decreasing funds. Federal funding is needed in schools where other peoples' children have been left behind as second-class citizens. Before we can expect them to succeed on national standardized testing, we need to level the playing field.

Mr. Sanders, as concerned students and current and future voters, we call on you and the U.S. Congress to appropriate a larger portion of the federal budget to education, and to use this funding to bring all our schools up to a collective and equitable higher standard.

ALEX McKENZIE: Earlier in the day, students from Proctor and Brattleboro high schools spoke of the exploitation of children throughout the world as though these children are partly our responsibility. We agree. Beyond our state, beyond our nation, we seek to extend the principle that children of the world are our responsibility. We call upon our Congress to set an example for all wealthy nations of the world, to address the inequity of the public spending on the children of the world.

The issue of where our nation draws the line on who we are responsible for is one that is argued feverishly all over the world. The Declaration of Independence closes with, "We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." And today, we make another pledge. These men felt that the people were being oppressed, so they did what they knew they must and fought back. We have come a long way since these people wrote this document, and the words they closed with should have the same meaning, purpose and dedication for everyone, but with a broader worldwide perspective.

In the past fifteen years, the world has grown significantly closer. Communication and trade is but a click of the mouse away. People are traveling more, cultures are mixing, and countries growing. Globalization, like it or not, is real and is here to stay. As our relationships with other countries grow deeper, we're creating a new community, a global community. The community is profiting a few of the larger industrialized nations, but is failing very many undeveloped countries.

Nearly half of the people in the world live on less than two dollars a day, and a few survive on one dollar or less. Most of the people in Latin America, the Middle East and central Asia are poorer than at the Cold War's close. Africans live no longer and have no higher incomes than they did 40 years ago.

These facts are very disturbing and hard to understand. Understanding is one-dimensional. It is the comprehension of the intellect; it leads to knowledge, which we all hope we have more of now. Realization, on the other hand, is three-dimensional. It is the simultaneous comprehension of the whole body—the head, heart and physical instincts. It comes only from experiences. Life requires more than knowledge, though; life demand right action if knowledge is to come alive.

So in other words, we all know these injustices now, which leads us to the question: What are we going to do about it? If we leave it alone and continue to ignore the suffering, what use is the knowledge I have shared with you? But there are caring people in the world who are disturbed by these facts, people who feel they are part of the global community and feel it is their duty to help the people in the world by pledging their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

What needs to be addressed is how we are going to relieve these people from oppression and suffering. The answer seems to point towards a global developing project for the poor nations of the world. Right now, the World Bank wants rich countries to double their foreign aid. They have linked poverty to terrorism, as well, concluding that the security of rich nations depends on a more just distribution of wealth.

Is it right to live in a community where so many people are hungry and starving in a world with enough food for all? Where so many seek a real education and only get trained in anger and hatred? Where so many are in chains but aren't given the freedom to demand it? These people live as part of our global community, neglected to say the least.

President Bush agrees that poverty and terrorism are linked, but has taken a different approach to aid. While asking for huge increases in the military budget, his administration proposes devoting far smaller amounts to combat poverty and AIDS. A World Health Organization study concluded that, by spending $27 million more each year to fight infectious diseases like AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, would save 8 million lives a year in the developing world. Washington seems more interested in stamping out terrorism, rather than solving the roots of terrorism. Smart bombs have their place, but smart development assistance can be much more effective.

Many of these issues were brought up in a world leaders meeting on March 17. Development of poor nations seems to be the right way to bring the global community to a stronger, more stable position. The main concern on a lot these richer nations' minds was wealth. Essentially, it all does come down to the issue of wealth. What is wealth if not a means to a greater end? Aren't peoples' lives worth more than building weapons? Wouldn't it be smarter to invest in the children of the world to create a stronger, more stable future for the new generations to come? I guess it all comes down to the question: Would we rather pay now or pay later?

IMPACT OF TOBACCO USE

HEIDI NEIL: We are going to start with a couple of facts first.

MARTHA MACK: Five hundred million people alive today will eventually be killed by tobacco. Another four million people died from tobacco-related illnesses in 2000. By the year 2030, ten million people will die each year of tobacco. Smoking-related diseases are responsible for one in ten adult deaths worldwide.

Tobacco will soon become the leading cause of death worldwide, causing more deaths than HIV mortality, automobile accidents, homicide and suicide combined.

HEIDI NEIL: Every day, approximately 80,000 to 100,000 young people around the world become addicted to tobacco. If this trend continues, 250 million children alive today will die from tobacco-related diseases.

We are speaking today on the impact of tobacco on Vermont, the United States, and, most importantly, teenagers. Teenagers are the most important and integral part of big tobacco's manipulation. The companies' advertising plan markets cigarettes directly towards teenage consumers. Millions and millions of dollars are spent annually by tobacco companies to convince teens that smoking is glamorous and hip and cool.

Cigarettes are a very interesting product to market. It's one of the few products which, if used correctly, is actually designed to kill the consumer. As we said before, four million people died in tobacco-related deaths in the year 2000. That is more than 10,000 dying each day. The tobacco companies would go out of business if they didn't pursue additional consumers to replace the customers who are dying each day.

In short, for each person who dies a tobacco-related death, tobacco companies have to replace the person. Why replace that person with another 40-year old who will die in a matter of 40 years or less?

MARTHA MACK: Tobacco companies are much smarter and more cunning than that. They market teenagers. If you start smoking as a teenager, become addicted and smoking for your entire life, big tobacco makes a lot of money off of your life and your health.

There is, however, another very important reason that younger and younger teens are the target group being marketed by the tobacco corporations. Studies have also found that if people do not start smoking cigarettes by the time they reach the age of 20, it is very unlikely they will ever start.

HEIDI NEIL: There are informed and concerned teens out there like us who are desperately trying to bring down tobacco companies, using knowledge as our weapon, to educate the masses. Margaret Mead said, "Never doubt a small group of thoughtful citizens can change the world; indeed it is the only thing that ever has."

We're trying to change the world and asking the help of Vermont legislature. We're looking to the legislature to pass the cigarette tax. While the 67-cent tax helps, we are sure that we here in Vermont can do much better. We are sure that we should do better. For the sake of the teens in Vermont and for the long-term health costs associated with smoking, help us change the world and Vermont.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG BENEFIT UNDER MEDICARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSBORNE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, just as I finished before the Memorial Day break talking about the need for a Medicare prescription drug benefit, and was very critical at the time about the fact that the Republican leadership in the House had failed to bring up a bill to address the need for a Medicare prescription drug benefit, I come back here today after the Memorial Day recess and the district work period believing stronger than ever that there is a need to pass such legislation.

We had during the course of the Memorial Day recess, a number of Members had forums, opportunities to be back in our respective States and talk to our constituents. When I came back to the floor of the House today for the votes this afternoon, I had so many colleagues come up to me, particularly on the Democratic side of the aisle, and point out this was the concern that was raised most by their constituents during the Memorial Day recess. I do not understand how the Republican leadership continues to delay and not address this issue and not bring legislation into committee and onto the floor of the House that provides for a prescription drug benefit.

We heard over a month ago that this was going to be addressed on the floor before the Memorial Day recess. Of course, that time passed. Now we hear today that they are going to address it next week. I frankly doubt it. I would not be surprised if they never address it. But I certainly intend to call upon them to address it, to basically lay out what their proposal is. But every indication we have had is that their proposal is not something that is going to be beneficial to perhaps anyone. It is not a Medicare benefit. It is basically premised on the idea that we are going to throw some money, almost like a voucher, to private insurance companies and hope that they will come up with some type of Medicare benefit, primarily for low-income seniors, not for the average senior.

We hear nothing on the Republican side that would address the issue of cost, which is what most of my constituents were asking about. They cannot afford the prices of prescription drugs, and something needs to be done about that. I have a number of colleagues here tonight that want to address this issue, and I will just start out by mentioning two editorials on the issue. One was in the New York Times, and the other was in the Star Ledger, which is our major daily in the State of New Jersey. The Star Ledger sums up how I feel. This was from May 21, and it talks about the Republican plan and it basically says what I feel about the Republican plan, although we do not have a plan, we hear rumors and press conferences about what they might do. We do not have a bill.

The editorial from the Star Ledger is titled, "An Unrealistic Drug Plan," and if I can read parts of it: "Prescription drug coverage for Medicare is something almost every politician agrees is absolutely necessary. From the beginning, the effort to create a drug program should have been part of a comprehensive effort to update and reform Medicare. The way medicine is practiced with drugs a greater and greater share of treatment options, it is ludicrous to continue Medicare without a prescription benefit. Providing a genuine one means offering more than what the Bush administration and the House Republican leadership have been discussing. From the start, they have looked only for solutions routed in the private sector, and have continued to side step one of the most important issues, how to demand pharmaceutical price breaks worthy of Medicare's massive bargaining power.

"If Congress had ever planned to do the job right, no one would have promised what the House Republican leaders did, a quick fix that they could vote on by Memorial Day. They will not make that unreasonable deadline because Congress cannot decide which part of Medicare will get cut to beef up another part enough to cover drugs. GOP leaders are looking for $350 billion over 10 years for their drug program, a sum that many Medicare advocates say is inadequate."

I will skip down to the end. It says: "The President took time on two occasions last week to urge congressional action on a Medicare drug plan. He reminded representatives that they face another election this November, and that their constituents will not be happy if the hottest domestic political issue, Medicare drug coverage, has not been addressed. Since the President set aside only $190 billion over 10 years in his budget for that drug benefit, his remarks sound more like political cover than a pep talk.

"There has been enough talk and enough promises. The thing that has been lacking is candid, determined leadership."

Mr. Speaker, I could not have said it better. The main goal of our Special Order, for both myself and my colleagues, tonight is to demand that the Republicans address this issue. They say they are going to, and they have not. With that I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. THURMAN), who has accompanied me many nights on this issue.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE). I accompany the gentleman on these many nights because this is an issue that I feel very strongly about, as the gentleman does; and he has invested much time in this issue. Quite frankly, it is not for us, it is for our constituents who, as the gentleman suggested, when we go home over breaks like this where we are out in the communities, and sometimes we are not even there to talk about this issue, but no matter where we go or what the issue is that we are there to talk about, this is just absolutely on people's minds, and their concerns are getting even greater.

I hope that the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) will join in with this because I think it is important to understand that we are now getting at that point where people are finding out whether or not their Medicare+Choice programs in fact are going to be staying in for the year, and there is a twofold reason that is of concern. It is the only part of Medicare+Choice right now that provides a prescription drug. How ironic that they are getting paid out of the trust fund just like traditional Medicare fee-for-service, but fee-for-service does not get a prescription drug benefit, but under Medicare+Choice they do. That is uncertainty; and quite frankly, it is my dollars as everybody else's dollars that goes into that trust fund. We need a playing field that addresses the Medicare population through Medicare, and not just so a few people in fact can have this coverage.

In fact, in "Families U.S.A." there is a special report, and I hope that people will look at this, there is a big concern out there about what potentially this bill is that I understand is kind of floating out there because we have not seen it, so we do not know all of the details of it.

Today I heard there is a good possibility this will not go through the committee; it will directly come to the floor, probably through some kind of a rule that limits our ability to debate this. It will be covered with a lot of other issues because it is going to deal with are we cutting hospitals, are we going to do anything about reimbursement to doctors, what kind of technology issues we might have in speeding up the ability for technology to meet the marketplace. There is just a widespread of issues that will be contained in this Medicare bill, but the issue that becomes most important to our constituents is the issue on prescription drugs.

What this special report basically says is that the pending bill, which is similar to what was done last year which many of us voted against because of these very reasons, was that the insurance industry, acting through the Health Insurance Association of America, made clear that it had no intention of offering drug-only policies. The industry reasoned that drug-only insurance policies would be subject to adverse risk selection, that is, they would disproportionately attract consumers who have existing health conditions, are sick or disabled, and are among the oldest of the old. The failure to attract beneficiaries with low drug costs would further drive up premium prices, and lead to an increasingly unaffordable price spiral.

It also went on to say, and something that I touched on a few minutes ago in the traditional Medicare program, beneficiaries, and one thing that all of us agree with, at least here, can count on a uniform benefit no matter where they live, as the following analysis demonstrates, rely on private insurance companies to deliver drug coverage for Medicare beneficiaries rather than incorporating a drug benefit into the Medicare program, virtually guarantees that coverage will be uneven in availability, cost and value, which is what we have right now under the Medicare+Choice program. That is just unacceptable.

I would say we have the experiences out there, look at Medigap and the costs there, most of those plans, up in the top tier are costly, and their benefits for prescription drugs are going down; they are not going not up.

Medicare+Choice, premiums are going up, benefits are going down, particularly in the area of a drug benefit and prescription drugs benefits. They are limiting them and saying we can only give generic. There may not be a generic out there because we have a problem with drug manufacturers in just being able to extend their patents. This is just a mess I think that we are in; and I think quite frankly the only reliable drug benefit that we can give to our seniors is through a Medicare plan.

Mr. Speaker, I might just say that I hope, because we are going to hear about the cost of this, I hope as we go through this week's agenda and as we start talking about the estate tax for those multimillionaires, we are going to try to figure out a way to limit it to small farmers and small businesses, make sure that they have an opportunity to continue to do business as they have been doing and to pass that business and that farm on to their families.

But let me say, if we look at the rest of the cost of that over a 10-year period of time, if it should go to repeal, pays for a drug benefit, a benefit that will help 42 million people in this country. I hope that our constituents and others will continue to look at this. I am proud to stand here with my colleagues about an issue that is probably the highest priority for Americans.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman. I think what the gentlewoman is stressing is that the whole Republican strategy of essentially privatizing a benefit, in other words saying that we will give some insurance companies some money and hopefully they will come up with a benefit, prescription drug benefit for some seniors, does not make sense. If we look at HMOs, it is essentially what we did sort of on an experimental basis a few years ago, was to say to the HMOs if they cover some prescription drugs benefits, we will give you some money to do it. But they have not been able to do it. It is not uniform. A lot of them have dropped the coverage. I think if anything, the HMO experience shows that we cannot rely on that to provide a real prescription drug benefit.

Yet we hear from the Republican leadership constantly that they want to expand HMO options, that HMOs are still the answer to provide a prescription drug benefit, or look at other means of using the private sector. We are not opposed to the private sector, but Medicare is not a private sector program; it is a government program. It works very well, and the logical thing to do is to expand Medicare to include a prescription drug benefit for everyone and address the cost by having the Health and Human Services Secretary basically negotiate to bring costs down.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, before Medicare, we had private insurance. We have Medicare because there was no coverage under private insurance.

Mr. PALLONE. Exactly.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN), who probably has drawn more attention to the cost issue than any other Member of Congress. I agree with the various proposals that he has to try to bring prices down.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding. I am pleased to be back here again with him talking about the high cost of prescription drugs and what we should do about it.

One thing that strikes me is that this is an issue that is hard to understand. This really is not a contest between the parties over the number of times we can mention the words prescription drugs, but there is a fundamental difference and the gentlewoman from Florida mentioned it. We have on the agenda this week a bill to make permanent the estate tax repeal. In other words, once again, tax cuts take a higher priority, particularly tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans, take a higher priority than providing prescription drugs at an affordable price to seniors on Medicare who simply cannot afford to take the drugs that their doctors tell them they have to take.

We saw it with the original tax cut. So much money was taken out; in fact, all of the non-Social Security surplus was taken out for the next 5 or 6 years. So when we look at which party is likely to provide real relief for prescription drugs, it will not be the party that says all the time, smaller government, lower taxes. It will be the party that says, we have a plan that will help all Medicare beneficiaries with the high cost of their prescription drugs, and that is what we are trying to do.

So here we are again revisiting a plan that the majority in this House has still not brought forward, but that we know is coming forward and we know it will be the same old, same old story. Essentially it will say, the way to provide prescription drugs for seniors is to rely on the private sector, to rely on HMOs. HMOs, Medicare managed care, otherwise known as Medicare+Choice, does not operate everywhere in the country. In fact, there are 15 States where there is no Medicare+Choice plan at all that covers prescription drugs. In another seven States, there is one Medicare+Choice plan. Where you have one of the major insurance companies providing coverage for prescription drugs to Medicare beneficiaries, every year we see that the premium goes up and the cap on coverage goes down. There is no future here. There is no future here for the same reason that Medicare was passed in 1965. The private insurance companies do not want to cover people who are old and sick and poor. If we are going to cover everybody, and I do not mean just the very poor, I mean just ordinary retirees who are living mostly on their Social Security, that group is simply not going to get covered by these private sector plans.

But what is fundamental in my mind is the Republican plan is really an assault on rural American seniors. The reason I say that is that the 15 States which are not covered tend to be rural States in this country, the places where it is not economic for the large insurance companies to go and provide Medicare+Choice, managed care, HMO coverage. They are rural States. But all those people who live in those States, like mine, in Maine, they are all part of Medicare. When it comes to part B, the physicians services, they get treated the same way as people in other States. Why should it be that people in at least certain parts of New York and Florida and California and Texas get treated one way, but people in Maine and Vermont and Montana and Wyoming, North Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Utah, and Arkansas get treated differently? There is no good reason for doing that. That is why we need a Medicare benefit.

I have advocated one thing you could do in the short term is simply pass the legislation that I have introduced which would provide about a 35 percent discount for all Medicare beneficiaries on all their prescription drugs at no cost to the Federal Government. It would essentially give Medicare the power to bargain with these large insurance companies and set rates that are no higher than the average in the rest of the industrialized countries, the six major industrialized countries.

If that is too simple for the other side, then we go to a Medicare benefit. And, sure, a Medicare benefit costs some money, but seniors are obviously going to be paying a significant amount, anyway. They need a benefit that is worth signing up for, that virtually everyone will sign up for, but we are not likely to see that. We are not likely to see that brought forward by the Republican majority in this House because it involves strengthening in a major way an important government program.

If you believe in smaller government and lower taxes and that is always the priority, there will always be another tax you want to cut before you take care of our seniors, and that is the dilemma that we are facing. I believe that what we are really looking for is a Medicare benefit which applies to all our seniors, which is voluntary but which is appealing, which people will sign up for and pay the monthly premium in order to get the benefit. That is the only way to make this work. That is what the Democratic plan would do. But it will not work to create the illusion of a plan and call it a Medicare prescription drug benefit when by its very terms seniors will not sign up for it because it does not make economic sense for them to sign up for it.

We really come back to this issue we talked about last time. It was quite a spectacle last year and will be, I suspect, quite a spectacle this year. The largest and most powerful lobby in Washington, the pharmaceutical industry, will say to the Republican majority, what we need in this country is drug-only insurance policies offered by the major insurance companies, and we should provide those companies with a subsidy to encourage them to offer that kind of policy. And the insurance companies will say, We don't like that idea. There's no way we are going to offer drug-only insurance policies.

That is why it is all smoke and mirrors. That is why it is all an illusion. They have developed a plan for private insurance, private prescription drug coverage, which will not be offered and if it were in fact offered, it would not cover everybody. Rural States would be left out. Other beneficiaries would find it ineffective. This resistance, this fear of taking Medicare, the most cost-effective health care plan we have in this country, and not simply using it as the vehicle for improving the assistance to seniors on prescription drugs, it just is staggering. But that is what we are contending with. There is no question in my mind that if we are going to have equity, if we are going to have a plan that actually works in the real world, if people are going to be able to get their prescription drugs at a cost they can afford, the Republican plan that will be presented to us will not do the trick.

I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey for organizing this Special Order and being here once again to talk through the issues, because it is not easy. Americans can often hear the words over and over again and think we are talking about the same thing, but we are not. There is a huge, fundamental difference between the two types of approaches; and what we need is to give America's seniors the same type of coverage that people working when they have prescription drug coverage get from their insurance company. American workers get their prescription drug coverage through their health insurance company. America's seniors should get their prescription drug coverage through their health care plan. It is called Medicare. It works, it is cost effective, and it is how we ought to approach this problem.

Mr. PALLONE. I want to thank the gentleman. Again, I appreciate all his efforts, particularly when he brings up the cost issue. I just wanted to say two things to comment on what he said. First of all, part of the problem that we face, and again this was happening during the Memorial Day recess, is that the drug companies start these campaigns where they pretend and try to get the public to think that what the Republicans and the President are proposing are somehow going to be beneficial to them. We have this multimillion-dollar TV ad campaign now by a front group, United Seniors Association, that basically the drug companies have been sponsoring. Ads were running during the Memorial Day recess. I was pleased to see that a couple of weeks ago some of the groups that are concerned about seniors got together to try to expose this.

I just wanted to mention, apparently some of these groups filed a formal complaint at the Federal Trade Commission over deceptive advertising. What they point out is that what you are seeing with the drug companies now is that they are using money to basically go on TV and try to tell the American public that the Republican prescription drug proposal is a good one. Then they use money to try to essentially influence Congressmen through their campaigns to support the Republican proposal, and then they do all the advertising in general with regard to the drugs. And who is paying for it? The consumer. It is just a sad thing. It is very hard, I think, as the gentleman says, to explain to our constituents the difference between what the Democrats and the Republicans, are proposing because they hear all these conflicting ads on TV.

I just wanted to say briefly and then I will yield to the gentlewoman from New York, what the Democrats have been saying is that we would like to simply add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare, to the very successful government program called Medicare that we now have that covers your hospital bills and your doctor bills. What the Democrats are proposing is very similar to what is now called part B of Medicare, which covers your doctor bills. You pay a fairly low premium, I think for your doctor bills now it is about $40 or so a month. The amount that you would probably pay for a prescription drug benefit would be even less than that under the Democratic proposal. You have a very low deductible under part B right now. It is $100 a year. Eighty percent of your costs are paid for by the Federal Government.

And there would be a fairly low catastrophic. In other words, after you spend a certain amount of money for that 20 percent copay, all the costs would be paid for by the Federal Government. So we are not reinventing the wheel here. We are basically saying we want a prescription drug benefit under Medicare very similar to what you have now under part B Medicare to pay for your doctor bills. And for those who cannot afford a premium just like part B, the premium is simply waived for those who are below a certain income. And then we have a cost containment measure which says that the Secretary of Health and Human Services is mandated to bring the cost down, to bring prices down because he has the power to negotiate for these 40 million seniors that would be part of the Medicare program.

I have no doubt that that would go far towards reducing the cost of prescription drugs. It is a very simple thing. This is what we as Democrats are proposing. It is vastly different from the privatization that the Republicans are proposing. With that, I yield to a health care professional, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. McCARTHY), who is a nurse by background and who is very familiar with the issue at hand. I thank her for being here.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. I thank my colleague from New Jersey for taking such leadership on this. As he had mentioned, I have spent over 30 years of my life as a nurse, so I would like to talk about why it is so important that we have a prescription drug benefit under Medicare. I am going to try and cover this a little bit widely why some people that are even younger, that are not on Medicare, on why it is so important to support this because they are going to be there one day, and I think that is important. Nobody talks about that.

I will say to you, I am only 58 years old. I am a healthy person. Yet, of course, once I turned 55, you start going for your physicals and I discovered that I had extremely high cholesterol. There is a drug on the market to help me reduce that. I tried exercise, did the diet; but apparently my problems with cholesterol are hereditary and there is nothing that can be done except being on this medication. I have been taking the medication faithfully, my cholesterol is down very low; but March 1 of this year, my prescription drugs went up 100 percent. Like I said, I am healthy and I am only taking one drug right now.

But the reason I talk about this, because our seniors were also hit with those increases, especially those in New York and in many parts of this country. That is why as a health care professional who happens to be in Congress, I am fighting to make sure that our seniors get the medication that they need to have a healthy life. Why? If our seniors are taking the medications mainly because it prolongs our life, makes our life more productive and, by the way, a lot of times these seniors because they are productive are continuing to work.

I think that is important to look at. But if they do not take their medications because they cannot afford it, what happens? They end up in the hospital, sicker than before, because the medications that they were taking, they choose to either take a half a dose or skip a day.

Now, people that are on medications have to follow the directions that the doctor or the health care provider tells them to do. But when it comes down to our seniors that might not be able to afford prescription drugs on a monthly basis, because I have to tell the gentleman, a year and a half ago I asked all my seniors in my district to send me their prescriptions. I wanted to see how much they were paying. I wanted to really see what was going on, just in my district alone.

I was astounded by what the majority of my seniors were paying on a monthly basis. A lot of them are on fixed incomes, and a lot of them said "I do not take my medication every day." We are not talking about one drug, two drugs, three drugs; we are talking about $700 to $800 a month just on their medications. Some of them have absolutely no choice. They could be having a reaction to a heart medication, so they are taking that, and a lot of times it takes a lot of balance.

But it comes down to this, it really, really does. I want the American people to really understand why we as Democrats are fighting for a good prescription drug plan. We will be keeping America healthier. By the way, I cannot tell you, when I was back in my district in the last couple of weeks, how many people, young people, people that are taking care of their parents, are saying to me, "I cannot afford to help my parents anymore to pay for their prescription drugs." So not only are we hurting the elderly people, we are now seeing that, because our mothers and fathers are living longer, we are also seeing now the families being affected, because they have to help chip in to pay for their medication.

This is why it is important. If we were rewriting Medicare today, I do not even think that we would think twice about whether to put a prescription drug benefit in with it. So, again, with the amount of monies that we spend here to try certainly to keep everybody healthy, why we would not be doing something with prescription drugs, I have no idea. Let us remember, our hospitals right now are under a crunch time, and the more times that they can help their patients stay out of the hospital, that is what they want to do. Prescription drugs are the answer.

I think we have to start looking also at other ways of reducing prescription drug costs. Of course, that has to do with looking at genetic medication also. Again, here we have the pharmaceutical companies fighting us on this. All they have to do is change one little molecule in a medication and it makes it a whole new drug and it stops it from getting it on to the market. We can do things to make the American people and our seniors healthier, and, in the end, we will have a more productive society in many ways.

So I am hoping to be very honest with you. Here we are in June. We might break by the end of September, maybe October, with the legislative work that we have ahead of us. I do not know whether we are going to get to this issue now. It is really a shame, because since I have been here in Congress, which is going on 6 years, we have been talking about doing something with prescription drugs, and here we are ending another session, the 107th Congress, without really doing something.

I do not want people to be fooled. If something does get passed in this House, is it going to help the American people? Is it going to help our seniors? I think that is something that people and consumers have to be smart about.

This is where, in my opinion, seniors can get involved. They should be calling their Congressperson, they should be calling their Senators, to say to get involved and to have a prescription drug policy that they can afford. I think that is the most important thing.

Again, I thank the gentleman for his leadership, who has been talking about this issue many a night by himself.

I have to say, when I talked to health care providers, when I talked to doctors, when I talked to pharmacists, they said "we make no money on these prescription drugs," because they know that they have to make sure that their seniors get their medications. A lot of times they give it to them at cost, or a lot of times they will give them an extra couple of pills, because they know the patient is not taking it.

We are in America. We are in America. We should not even be discussing this. This is a no-brainer. It is the Federal Government's job to make sure that we keep our seniors healthy as long as possible, and that is by having good medication and making sure that our seniors can afford to take it.

With that, we should be looking at Medicare, at getting a good prescription drug plan out there. As far as I am concerned, if we do not do the right thing, we have let the American people down. I mean that with all my heart.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman. She points out as a nurse and as a health care professional one thing that I think we need to stress, and maybe I have not and a lot of us have not stressed, and that is the whole preventive aspect.

In other words, here we have all these miracle drugs that have been created in the United States, and if they are available, then people are taking them and they do not have to go to a hospital, they do not have to go to a nursing home. If they are not taking the drugs, a lot of times they are going to end up sicker, and, in the long run, because the Medicare program does provide for hospital care and for doctor care, it ends up costing the Federal Government even more money.

Even if you just look at it from a monetary point of view, one of the things we never factor in when we do a cost analysis of legislation is what the long-term savings or the long-term financial implication is. I guess the way we operate with the Congressional Budget Office, they cannot look at the 10 or 20 years over the life of the program to see what the nature of the preventative nature of something is.

I forget a lot of times that prescription drugs are a preventative measure, and if people are able to take the drugs, they do not have to be institutionalized.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. If the gentleman will yield, that is something else a lot of people, especially here in Washington, do not talk about. Like I said earlier, looking at it holistically on what the cost evaluation is, I can tell the gentleman that the longer we keep someone healthier and the less time they have to spend in the hospital, overall we are going to be bringing down our costs as far as stays in the hospital go. That is the most important thing. I think it is every health care professional's dream to be put out of business. We love our job in the health care profession, but we also know that so many things can be prevented.

As the gentleman said earlier, we have these wonderful, wonderful miracle drugs out there, but if you cannot afford to take them, they are not doing anybody any good. When these drugs come on the market, our seniors that need these medications should have the right, the absolute right, to be able to get the medications that the doctor prescribes.

By the way, let us not forget, it is the doctor that is prescribing the medication to save the patient. So, again, let us let the doctors do the job that they were trained to do and not be dictated by a lot of the pharmaceutical companies.

It is amazing. When you fly down here to Washington, I only have like a 40-minute flight, it does not matter what magazine I have anymore, there are pages and pages of advertisements about new drugs.

I think people misunderstand. We, the Federal Government, give the pharmaceutical companies a lot of money for research and development. None of us that are trying to get a Medicare prescription drug plan are trying to stymie the pharmaceutical companies from research and development. We are not, because we need to have that stimulation there to keep coming up with bigger and better drugs.

But, again, I say, are we going to go into a two-class system, where only those that can actually afford to buy the best medication that is out there do, and those that cannot do not? That is wrong. That is not what America is about.

As far as health care goes, everyone should be able to be treated equally and get the same treatment. We as nurses do not care if you are rich or poor. All we want to do is make sure that you are taken care of, the same as whether you are on one side of the room or the other side of the room.

It should come down to the same thing with prescription drugs. Everyone should be able to have their medication; everyone.

Mr. PALLONE. I thank the gentlewoman. The other thing she points out is, why are we here? Why do we come here on the floor of the House after the votes and bring this up?

I think there is a sort of dual fear on my part, and I am sure the gentlewoman's and the Democrats in general, that either the Republicans are not going to bring up anything, which is a possibility, because it keeps getting postponed, or, if they do bring something up, that the danger is it is just there for political purposes. In other words, it maybe passes this House, but never passes the Senate because there is no effort to bring up something that everyone can agree on, or it is something that sounds good, but does not really help the average person. Because, as the gentlewoman points out, who is it out there that is complaining to us? Not the very wealthy; not the poor who are on Medicaid and get prescription drugs under Medicaid; but the vast middle class. Your average person, who, right now, because their income is not low enough, they are not eligible for Medicaid and they cannot afford to pay the high prices. They are like 90 percent of the seniors who need this benefit.

I have been critical of the Republicans and I have been very partisan about it, because everything I hear is that their proposals they have been airing essentially do not cover prescription drugs for most of that middle income or middle class group. It seems like they are saying, okay, we will give some money, almost like a voucher, to insurance companies, and they will cover prescription drugs for people that are just above the poverty line, or they will see if an HMO will cover it.

But, as we know, in many parts of the country, HMOs simply are not available and they have cut back on the level of prescription drugs or how much you have to pay or what kind of benefit you get. So there is a real concern on my part that if we do get a bill, that it not be just a hoax, just a sham; that it be something that is really meaningful in terms of people's lives.

So I started this evening talking about two editorials. One was the Star Ledger. But I did not mention the one from The New York Times. I am not going to read the whole thing.

If I could just conclude, this was actually on May 28 in The New York Times during the break. The title is "Paralysis in Health Care." It says, "Early this year Congress and the White House entertained dreams of passing all kinds of health care legislation. President Bush and Senator KENNEDY were working on a Patients' Bill of Rights. There was even talk of enacting a prescription drug benefit for the elderly. But such talk has vanished. Lawmakers seem to be betting that voters will not punish them for inaction. But they cannot put off the issue forever.

"A decade ago, when the cost of health care was also soaring, many experts were sure they had a solution, managed care and competition. But HMOs turned out to be no magic.

"Elderly people who came out of the last election with the impression that they would inevitably get help with the cost of prescription drugs may be in for a disappointment. The Bush administration proposed spending less than $200 billion over the next 10 years, a ridiculously low sum given the public's expectations.

"Congress Members had better take the time to listen to voters. They are likely to discover their patience is diminishing. Sooner or later the demand for health care is going to be high on the agenda, and it could happen before the election in November."

The New York Times is talking the political aspects of it because we know our constituents are demanding a prescription drug benefit. But it is, as I said, important for the Republicans, who are in charge here and have the obligation to, we as Democrats cannot, we do not have the majority, to not only bring up something, but bring up something that is going to be meaningful in terms of seniors' lives.

We will go at this every night until we see a proposal brought up and an opportunity to debate this on the House floor, which we have not had so far.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, again I would like to stress why it is so important. In my 30 years working as a nurse, I have seen so many different changes in our health care system. But one thing I do know is the same is that each and every person in our senior citizens, who certainly are some of our most vulnerable people, when it comes to their health care, we should make sure that they can get the best.

I have to say, I did not want to see this country go down the way where we have a two-class system. When the gentleman had mentioned the middle income, I would be considered middle income on Long Island, and yet I am certainly concerned, will I be able to afford the drugs that I might need to keep me healthy as I get older?

So that is why I am fighting. I am fighting as a health care provider, but I am also fighting because I am going to be a senior citizen one day.

I thank the gentleman again for his leadership.

BEING FISCALLY RESPONSIBLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, having heard the previous speakers, it is interesting that, time after time after time, we have my colleagues, like the gentlewoman from New York that stands up and talks about prescription care for all people, and I am quoting here, "everyone should be able to have their prescription needs met."

But what the gentlewoman fails to come up with, the question she fails to answer, is how are we going to pay for it? It was not 1½ weeks ago when we were talking about the supplemental appropriation bill here on this House floor, on which the Democrats were giving stalling motion after stalling motion, alleging that the Republicans were going to spend the United States Congress into oblivion.

On one hand they complain about the spending, and on the other hand they stand up in front of the cameras and promise all good things.

In my State, in the State of Colorado, I have recently seen promises from the Democratic side of the aisle that we are going to have mass transit and that we are going to have full prescription care for all people in the State of Colorado, for all people in this country.

Look, that sounds grand, but we ought to ask of every person, every Congressman or elected representative or anybody representing either of the parties that stands up in front of us and promises us the Moon, promises us the golden key: Who pays for it?

What the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) fails to bring up in her comments, and I say this with all due respect, but the fact is, business is business, and somebody has to pay for this. What she fails to bring up is right now in the United States, we are in a deficit situation. We are not creating new wealth. There is no new wealth that is being created in this country on the net bottom line for the Nation, which means that anytime we offer additional benefits to somebody, we have to transfer them from somebody else.

I would like to say to the gentlewoman that her salary as a Congresswoman does not put her in the middle class; it probably puts her in the upper middle class. The fact is that a lot of these transfer payments, and that is what has to happen, when we promise somebody that needs prescription care, and it sounds good, and I think there are cases where we have to provide prescription care, but to promise it en masse to the population, there is only one way we can pay for it: we have to take it from somebody and transfer it to somebody else.

So we cannot stand up here, and it just happened, I just saw it from the gentlewoman from New York, we cannot stand up here and on one hand promise people prescription care so that all their prescriptions are cared for, and on the other hand, talk about the middle-income taxpayer and about how the middle-income taxpayer is going to worry how they can pay for their prescription services.

Of course they are going to worry about it, because under these kinds of programs that they are proposing, which really are a type of socialism, equal treatment across the board, what happens when we make those kinds of promises is there is only one place we are going to get the money. The bulk of the money is going to come from the very class of people that they stand up here and profess to protect. That is the middle class.

Prescription care is a high priority for all of us. I do not know any Democrat or any Republican that would not like everybody in this Nation to have their prescriptions paid for. The pharmaceutical industries in this country have really done a pretty remarkable job with the assistance of the people in this country who have provided those grants and have provided research.

So now, for example, I was at some town meetings in the last week. I mentioned about how just 10 or 12 years ago, when one had diarrhea, they had to drink that Kaopectate stuff, that gray liquid in the white plastic thing, or drank that Pepto Bismol or something, and hopefully after 2 or 3 or 4 hours the diarrhea would slow down. Today if one gets that, they pop a little tiny pill not much bigger than an eraser on a pencil and it is gone in 20 minutes, so we have made progress in that regard.

But we cannot get it for free. We cannot promise the American people that all their prescription needs are going to be for free. That is exactly what happened in the preceding statement.

Then, on top of that, it is easy when people are not the ones making budget decisions, so it is easy for the Democrats in the minority party to go out and make all of these promises because they know that it is the Republicans who have to provide it. And then it is the Republicans that get put on the defensive when they show up.

For example, after the gentlewoman from New York goes into a meeting and makes all these promises, and happens to walk out the door before telling how she is going to pay for it, then we walk in the door and we are the ones that have to come up with the funds. We are the ones that have to be the bearers of bad news.

If Members want to talk about fiscal responsibility, it requires that every one of us on this floor, including Republicans and Democrats, when we propose a benefit, we ought to be able to also tell the people we are promising how we are going to pay for it.

Nothing is free, and do not let the Democratic Party tell us up here from this House floor, do not let them tell us that prescription care can be given to everyone without a very, very significant cost.

I can tell the Members who is going to end up paying that cost. Anybody that is listening, anyone who is working, the working people of this country, regardless of what their job is, they are the ones who are going to pick up the costs of these promises being made by the Democratic Party.

Now, we hope, within the confines of our budget, that there are certain benefits that we can offer to the elderly. We think that is important. But what concerns me is this just opens the door for the promise to become broader and broader and broader.

Two weeks ago, the Democrats over here were talking about prescription care for seniors only. Tonight, we see what has happened, just in a 2-week period of progression: tonight we hear the gentlewoman from New York, and again I say this respectfully, but we hear the gentlewoman from New York promising prescription care services for everyone. We cannot afford to do that.

On a typical day in my office over in the Cannon Office Building, we will have people coming in all day long, people with special interests; all day long coming in, special interests, whether it is with seniors; special interests, whether it is with education; special interests, whether it is with highway construction, or military apparatus. All day long we have people who come into my office. All of them have ideas. All of their ideas, almost without exception, cost money.

These people are not proposing to pay for the project; they are proposing to use the money for their project. Their proposal is that we pay for the project.

The problem at the end of a day, in a typical day, we will get requests on an average day I would say of $6 billion in a day is what they have requested in assistance for their new programs, day after day after day after day. At the end of the day, the difficulty with these programs is that almost without exception, again, every program that is proposed to us is a good program. It makes sense. It has some benefits to it.

So our choices down here are not choices between good and bad programs, and they are generally not choices between Republican wishes and Democratic wishes; but our choices are between good and good programs.

The key and the bottom line comes down, okay, we have a good program here, we have a good program there; but we only have enough money for one, or we can do both of them halfway. What do we do? My preference is we do the one and do it right the first time, which means we also have to say no.

There are lots of programs that are being proposed by the Democrats this year. It is of interest, I know, that in the last several weeks, the Democrats, because we are in budget time back here, the more partisan Democrats continually hammer away at the Republicans on our budget. They hammer away on one hand about spending, and on the other hand, they show up here on the House floor and promise the country prescription services for everybody.

I should add that the gentlewoman from New York did not just stop at prescription services for everyone; she also talked about health care, that there should not be a two-tiered division in this country of those who have health care and those who do not have health care; that everybody should have, notice the word, I am quoting her, everybody should have equal health care.

First of all, that is a socialized system. That is government-provided health care. That is the only way you can do it and there is no other way around it; it is a socialized type of program. Our country has continuously, continuously, time after time after time, said they will not accept or they do not want socialized medicine. They do not want the government running everything for everybody on an equal basis. That is not the concept of a democratic government.

This is not a socialist government; it is a democratic government. Yet, some of my colleagues continue to stand up here and get away with this kind of rhetoric, because it is real easy to stand up here and promise the American people, tell them we want every one of them to have prescription care services. But where leadership comes in is to say to these same people that we have to figure out how to pay for it. If we cannot figure out how to pay for it, some of us have to have enough guts to say we cannot get something for nothing. We cannot do it. It does not mean we do not want to do it; it means we cannot do it because we cannot afford to do it.

Who do we owe that obligation to, the obligation of saying that we just do not have the money, we cannot give it to you for free? We owe that obligation not just to the taxpayers of this country, to whom we have a fiduciary responsibility to represent their interests, but we also owe that obligation to the next generations that are really going to have to foot the bill for this kind of thing.

Take a look at what has been promised in the past. Take a look at how our system has broken down. I can tell the Members that when I go to town meetings in my district, which is in Colorado, I hear at town meeting after town meeting after town meeting complaints about programs that happen to be run by the Federal Government: the veterans' associations talk about problems we have with the veterans administration and the health care they deliver; problems with Social Security; problems with SSI; problems, problems, problems. The government does not run an efficient system.

I think it is high time around here that my colleagues, and I will say for the last hour I have heard this from the Democratic side of the aisle, and it is not my intent here tonight to approach this in a partisan Democrat-Republican type of approach, but the fact is that the Democrats continually, continually profess all of these benefits that sound wonderful; and the fact is the reason they sound wonderful is because they are wonderful.

Who in America would not like full prescription services, and, by the way, somebody else to pay for it? What they fail to point out to us is that if you happen to be the person sick out there, you are going to get a lot of benefit out of these prescription services; but if you are the person that is not sick, you are the person that is working out there, watch what happens to your taxes to provide for this never-ending benefit.

Now, I think the American people as a whole are willing to provide prescription care services for certain classes, for example, the elderly people. There are ways, and we have to figure out, whether it is mass buying, whether it is pooling, there are ways we can figure out to assess or assist the American people with their prescription care costs. That includes cracking down on pharmaceutical companies that are involved in antitrust actions or pharmaceutical companies which get together and make sure the generic brands never come to the market.

As far as I am concerned, if we catch a pharmaceutical company attempting to keep a generic brand off the market, we ought to take the executives of that company and put them in jail. It is wrong. They are trying to take advantage of the American people, not in the capitalistic freedom-of-market type of approach, but in a very sinister type of approach.

But that is a far cry from standing up in front of the American people on this House floor, standing up in front of our colleagues, and saying that we need equal health care for everybody. There should not be two tiers, two tiers of health care in this country, those who get it and those who do not get it. Instead, everybody should have equal, again, equal health care, and everybody should have prescription care services, so whatever prescriptions they need, they get paid for.

I will just tell the Members today, I have kind of a cold, so I use a nose spray, which was a prescription nose spray, because I have allergies. I took folic acid this morning, which was prescription. I am trying to think what else. I took some vitamins. I took a pill for my knee this morning, which was prescription.

Why should the Members or anybody else in this room pay for my prescriptions? I am able-bodied. I am capable of working. I would like it very much if you would pay for my prescription services, but the fact is simple: there is not enough money to go around. That is the reality that we have to face here.

We have to be honest with the American public. We have to look them right in the eye and say, look, we would like to give everybody prescription care services, but somebody ought to answer the question: How do we pay for it? When we promise people a rose garden, we had better figure that out. We owe it to them to say, nothing is free. I can give this to you, but this is what it is going to cost you. I can do this, but in the future, this is what is going to happen to this program.

When we start a program with the Federal Government, it never stops, it just grows and grows. It does not grow proportionately, by the way, i.e., as the population grows by 10 percent and the program would grow 10 percent. Take a look at Social Security. The population grew probably like this, and Social Security grew like this. There is a huge gap in there that has to be paid for.

What happens is I have colleagues, like the one who just spoke in the last hour, the gentlewoman from New York, who stand at the podium and make very pleasant promises, very nice rose garden promises to the American people, and then we have to come in and be the bad guys by saying, look, you know, it is a nice promise, it is a great program, but we have to pay for it.

So I would challenge, and with all due respect, I would challenge my colleague from New York (Mrs. McCarthy) to tell us how we are going to pay for it; tell me exactly what constituents in your congressional district are going to pay for it; and tell me how often you have returned to your congressional district, which you say is a 90-minute ride back to your district so it is easy to get there, tell me when the last time it was when you stood up in front of your constituents back there and told them, you will pay for these services, across-the-board prescription care services, across-the-board medical care. My guess is that what is said here is often not what is said back in the district.

The fact is you ought to be honest with these people. And I am not implying that the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) is not being honest, but I am saying directly to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY), how are we going to pay for it? I want prescription Medicare. I would like the prescription that I took today, I would love it if somebody else would have paid for it. How can I say no to that? Somebody comes up and says, here, we are going to pay for your prescriptions today for your nose spray and for your knee, to help rebuild your muscle in your knee. We will have somebody else pay for it.

It sounds great, but it does not happen that way. And we owe it to the American people to be straight with them, to say to them we do have a problem with prescription care. Prescriptions, while they have advanced tremendously, the pharmaceuticals, while they have advanced tremendously in the capability that they have, they have also advanced tremendously in cost. And I think, frankly, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) her energy would much better be exerted instead of standing on the House floor and promising the American people that we should provide prescription care for everybody across the board, that our energies would be much better expended going after the pharmaceutical companies that are trying to drive off generic drugs or trying to keep generic drugs off the drugstore market shelf. That is where we ought to focus. Promises to give everybody everything they want are empty promises. And too often, if this government has ever gotten into deficit problems, or if you can ever track how we get into budget problems, it is because not enough of us stand up here in front of the people we represent and say we cannot do it all for you. If we do do this for you, this is what it will cost you.

You cannot go down to the car dealership and get a free car with somebody else having to pay for it. The dealership does not give away free cars, and the government cannot continue to provide 300 million citizens with their prescription care costs. So I think we need to keep that in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about another issue tonight. I just came off CNN and had a very interesting discussion about "profiling," "racial profiling." The American Civil Liberties Union apparently today filed a lawsuit on behalf of five or six plaintiffs who allege that they were racially profiled by airlines in the process of going through security to get onto these aircraft of these particular airlines. And we had a discussion and, of course, the plaintiffs in this case talk about the fact that they were asked to leave the plane or they were questioned, they are convinced, because of their race or their color. And one of them said, it broke my heart and I will never be the same.

You can see the kind of language in there. I mean, in my opinion, as I said on CNN tonight, the American Civil Liberties Union goes out there and hunts for these kinds of people and then races to the court and then runs to the national TV and has national press conferences about how horrible the security system is in this country, how racial profiling should never be allowed.

I can tell you that the American Civil Liberties Union racially profiles, schools racially profile, CNN racially profiles, the Democrat party racially profiles, political parties do that. Now, what do I mean? Back it up with a little substance. The Democratic party, take a look at the discussions about Florida. Take a look at what the Democratic party does, as do all political parties, as do insurance companies, as does CNN to figure out who their viewers are. They will go in, based strictly on a person's race or color, they will go in and say, how will this person vote. If they will vote Democratic, if this particular race tends to vote Democratic, let us spend more money here to get them to vote our way, Democratic.

It is the same thing if CNN goes into an area and says, who are our viewers? What age are they? What income bracket are they? Do blacks watch more than whites? All of this is done. Now when it comes to security, I think we have to take a step back. I do not think we should have what is called and what is trying to be directed towards the ACLU or the ACLU is trying to say to society that we are trying to justify, I do not think a person should be pulled off an airplane or given any extra scrutiny for the sole reason of their race background.

I am Irish and I have got some Scottish. I do not think just because of the fact that I am Irish with no other risk factors in there, that is the key buzz word, risk factors, with no other risk factors in there, just because I am Irish, to pull me aside, to exclude me from an airplane.

Now, keep in mind that with the plaintiffs that the ACLU is representing, this happened one time. And the representative for the American Civil Liberties Union tonight on CNN said these people are not looking for money. Because I said, look, all you are trying to do is it is a rush for the courts, to take what you can get. It is like a slot machine, let us see if we can get some money out of this deal. The ACLU answers and says, we do not take any money. We are here to make these people whole.

Well, it happened one time to these people. Out of the thousands and thousands and thousands of times a day that people go through security, the ACLU goes out and somehow finds six of them that feel offended by the security and are now demanding that security not take into consideration at all a person's ethnic profile, even if it is in combination with other factors. I am here to say to you, look, we have a responsibility in this country to provide for security when you get on an airplane. I can assure you, in my opinion, that those six plaintiffs, had something gone wrong on that airplane and they had been the victim of it, they would probably have had a national news conference today, not with the American Civil Liberties Union but with a group of plaintiffs' attorneys, to sue the airline or to sue the government.

My point is this, we have to provide security on those airplanes. Our country is very dependent, our economy is very dependent on those aircraft flying. A lot of us use airplanes and we want to know when we get on that airplane that we are safe. That requires some inconvenience on our part. In my opinion, it does not violate the Constitution, but it does require you, for example, when your suitcase is going through security they may open your suitcase, they may go through your underwear, they may go through your shaving kit. That is an inconvenience. It is not an unconstitutional strike against your basic human rights. And based on a risk profile, take a look at what hit us on September 11. It was not 11 Irishmen between the age of 40 and 45 years old who had jobs and et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, of the Catholic religion. That is not what happened.

We had a profile, not just the ethnic background, but it had their ethnic background; it had their age; it had their religion; it had their past history or some of their past history. I can build what is called a risk profile. And for the ACLU or for any of the political left to advocate that we should compromise the security of our airplanes or compromise the security of the American people so that we are politically correct and we do not offend somebody, and I can tell you there are people that are offended that you lift their underwear out of a suitcase to look at things. But that does not mean that just because it is politically offensive to them that we should compromise security to make them happy, and it is the same thing here.

We do have constitutional protections that we have an obligation to recognize, that the airport people have an obligation to recognize. But the fact that they have used a person's ethnic background in combination with the other risk elements, it is not an evil attempt to be prejudiced towards a person. It is a very legitimate attempt to protect the security of the people, including that person who wants to get on that airplane.

Now, what happens if you are a police officer? I used to be a police officer. And I can tell you if they give me a call that says, hey, we just had a white man rob a bank, he just robbed a bank, this white man, I can tell you we did not go into the black neighborhood questioning black or African Americans. We did not question them whether they just robbed a bank. No. We used our profile. We knew the bank robber was white. We knew the bank robber was about 5′6″. We knew the bank robber was say between 19 and 27 years old, so there was no use going stopping Caucasian or white females that are 60 years old and questioning them to see whether they robbed a bank. We used a risk profile.

Now, I am the first one to stand up and say this has its boundaries and it can be abused. And when it is abused, we should stop the abuse. But that is not what the American Civil Liberties Union is doing. The American Civil Liberties Union is pressing so hard that what is happening at our airports, and at some time pull an airport security person aside and say, do you ever not search someone or do you ever not ask questions because you will be accused of being racially motivated. And I bet you the answer on a lot of them will be yes. That is what they said to me. I have asked one another day. I said, I do not get it. I got on an airplane. There was a lady. She was about 75 years old and her baggage was all laid out on the table and they are going through it item by item. Then there were some people ahead of me. They were of Arab descent, but the interesting thing was they had packages. I am surprised they could get them in the overhead. And the woman had a veil over her face. You could not see whether it was a female or a male. I am assuming that it was a female. And they were both, I could not tell with her because of the veil, and I guess it was a her. He was about 19 or 20 years old. They boarded the plane and that was fine.

Then they came to me and stopped me. I asked the person, I said, I do not mind being searched at all. I think it is good. I do not mind if you search everybody on this airplane, but why did you pick me out?

Well, because you are a Congressman, the person said, and people will think we have special treatment of Congressmen if we do not search you when you go through. So we picked you out just to show other people, look, just because the fact that he is a Congressman does not mean he gets searched. I said, how about that lady up there? Why would a lady like that be searched? Well, again, to show we are not focusing on a high risk group or a group of a particular ethnic background. I said, wait a minute. What if you have somebody that fits the risk profile? They are the right age, they are from a country that is questionable as far as the relationship with the United States, they meet other risk criteria in there, but they happen to be, say, Irish or they happen to be Arab; just based on the race thing does it cause you any reluctance to ask them any questions?

Absolutely, he says. I do not want to get in any trouble. This person told me that. The person told me they felt very intimidated to step forward and ask somebody, especially somebody of Arabic ethnic background or of ethnic color, to ask them any of those type of questions because they are afraid they would be accused of racial profiling or racism.

At that point I said to the person, you know the best way to trick the United States is look the part because you probably will not get stopped and questioned. In fact, what I said to the ACLU tonight, I think the opposite is happening. Some of these people that are so politically correct and putting security second and third and fourth seat back are in fact opening a big gap in our security blanket in this country by making our security checkers intimidated, concerned about, oh, my gosh, I better not ask that person because they are not white and Caucasian, or I better not ask that person because they are African American. I do not want to offend this person because they are Irish. That is one of the problems we have got.

So I do not know any of my colleagues on the House floor, I do not know any of them that would advocate profiling somebody based on race alone. I think that goes, I do not understand the boundaries and I think there is a constitutional argument there. But when you combine that with other risk factors or other factors known to you, I do not think that should be excluded from that list. I think it should be included in that list.

Let me tell you, in my opinion, I cannot think of a responsibility that the United States Congress or any elected official in the United States, I cannot not think of a responsibility we have that is more inherent to the obligation for us to the American people in our hearts and souls, it is more inherent to us than providing security for the American people. What we have seen in the last 10 years and what we have seen in the last 10 months and the further and further we get away from September 11, what we are beginning to see is the grip of political correctness has once again come into our cookie jar, frankly, and locked it up. That is what is happening. We are so concerned about political correctness that once again we are going to get hit hard.

Now there is a balance out there and it is called common sense, and I think political correctness has gone too far off the track. It is not on the common sense track. And I would venture to say that most Americans want you searched when you get on an airplane if you meet certain risk factors. Americans want security on those airplanes.

I did not complain about the fact that I was searched and this group ahead of me was not searched; but boy, if somebody fit what I would consider a profile, considering what we had on September 11, 19 people, all male, all within a certain range, all within a certain ethnic background, all with a particular religion, most with passports from a particular area of the country, I mean that is a profile, and if somebody fits that profile, we ought to go after it, regardless of their ethnic background. It does not benefit our country to put handcuffs on the very people that we are placing the responsibility to provide us security with.

Clearly we have to give them direction. We do have things like the Miranda rights when you arrest somebody. We have certain things that are observed but because a person, or because somebody at the airport says, ma'am, we are going to have to open a suitcase or someone says, Congressman, we are going to have to open your suitcase and look at your dock kit and your underwear and your jeans and your running shoes, that is not unconstitutional. Sure, it is an inconvenience, but it is what we have to have for security on our airlines.

So tonight on CNN, I found it very interesting, many in my opinion the American Civil Liberties Union could not wait to race to the courtroom, could not wait to file a lawsuit against all of these airlines, again using the age-old plaintiff's favorite statement racial preferences or racial prejudice against the airlines. Go for the deep pockets, accuse them of racism and see how many of them we will get to fold.

That is exactly what I perceive this lawsuit to be about, race to the courts by the American Civil Liberties Union, have a national press conference. They did not write the airlines and say maybe they had some misbehavior here, they would like to have an apology and we would like the airline to fix their ways. They should stop what they did to this particular plaintiff. They did not do that. They do not want to do that.

Their mission is not to correct a wrong. Their mission is, one, to get attention; two, to drive this political correctness so that it fits their agenda;

Our country has become lawsuit happy. No matter how we cut it, no matter what angle we look at it, whether we want to talk about malpractice, whether we want to talk about asbestos, whether we want to talk about racism, they are not alleging, the American Civil Liberties Union, whatever it is they think they can get the slot machine to kick out some change, they are going to go to the court and do it.

In the long run it hurts those plaintiffs. In the long run it hurts our society as a whole. If someone has truly, truly been wronged, they ought to be made whole, no argument there; but I can tell my colleagues that a lot of people allege to have been wronged, exaggerate just how badly wronged they were, and being made whole is not their idea. Being made rich is their goal, and so we can see this cycle. It was a very interesting debate on CNN this evening.

I have covered a couple of areas tonight. One of them, of course, prescription care and the fact that we want to provide prescription care to the extent that we can afford it, and we want to do things that can help hold the costs down. For example, allow generic drugs, encourage generic drugs, encourage competition out there among the pharmaceuticals; but it is wrong for us to make a promise to the American people, which was made on this House floor tonight, and we should provide all Americans with prescription care service. We cannot pay for it. We do not have the money. Nice, the empty promise. It is an empty promise.

They have promised a rose garden. By the way, they did not tell my colleagues that they are not only going to have to plant their roses, they are going to have to plant everybody's roses, and the rose garden does not have any water and nothing in it when they get into it.

The second thing we talked about was whether or not a person's ethnic background, whether they are Irish, Arabic, whatever they are, is that an appropriate element to fit a risk profile. My belief is that it is, that when we combine it with other factors, we can build pretty good profiles, and profiles help us.

Keep in mind, these profiles are used by our local schools. For example, our local schools might say, hey, in this neighborhood, we have a particular minority and this minority is scoring lower, this minority has lower math grades than this group over here. So by doing that, by profiling, by going in there and determining what is affecting this group versus this group, we say, all right, we need to focus more money or more resources or more help to bring this minority's math grades up to par.

It is a tool. It is a legitimate tool. It is a tool that we use in our schools. As I said earlier, it is a tool that the media networks use to determine who reads their paper. It is a tool that the political parties use to determine who is going to vote for them. Why would we, on God's Earth, why would we eliminate it as a tool to provide ourselves with security against acts of terrorism or acts of our enemies that want to do us harm? Why would we say to somebody, oh, you are Irish, I cannot ask you if you are Irish; it is unconstitutional by meshing with these other factors. So you go ahead even though it may compromise our security? So that is a debate all on its own.

In the few remaining minutes that I have left I want to talk about something entirely different, and that is, first of all, the fire season that we have got out there. I want to commend our firefighters, our national firefighters, our Federal firefighters, our State firefighters, our volunteer firefighters, our district firefighters across the Nation.

In my particular district in the mountains of Colorado, and this district by the way is larger than the State of Florida, we have had fire after fire after fire. This is a drought the likes of which we have not seen in a hundred years. It is classified as an extreme drought. That is exactly what it is. The latest fire we had over the weekend took 83 or 85 homes, burned their homes, destroyed these people's possessions. Fortunately, we had no injuries in the fire.

I want to commend our firemen, and when I say firemen, I say that generically, plural, firemen and firewomen. Those firepeople out there are courageous people; and what is interesting is last year we put in a fire plan, and my colleagues can take credit for this because it was an act of Congress in coordination with our Federal agencies to really beef up our firefighting capabilities last year.

We hired thousands and thousands of new firepeople to fight these fires. We went out and purchased capital, purchases of thousands and thousands of pieces of new equipment. We really geared up for this year's fires, not knowing how serious the start it would get off to, and now our benefits are paying off.

This fire in Canyon City, while it was a horrible fire, we should have it 100 percent contained within the next 2 days. The many, many fires, and I probably had five or six major fires in the last 3 weeks in my district, major fires, type I fires, break out in my district, were all contained in a pretty quick period of time because of the investment that we and those Federal agencies and most importantly those firemen on the scene on the line put into this effort.

So I want to publicly acknowledge from the House floor those firepeople from across the country and all those Federal agencies that are helping fight these horrible fires that we are seeing besiege us this year.

In the next couple of days or perhaps next week, I want to take an entire hour and speak about the water situation in the West. As many of my colleagues know, I have had a series of discussions here talking about the public lands and what impacts us that is different in the West than the East.

I am continuing to make a very conscious effort at trying to educate and work with my colleagues to tell them how the geographical difference, the public land location difference in our country has significant, significantly different needs, for example, in the western United States than we have in the eastern United States; and I want to spend a good hour talking about the issue of water, defining and making clear the difference between what is surface water, the water that originates on the surface or is accumulated on the surface, versus the water that is subsurface, that we dig a well down into.

Many in the East get their water from wells. Where I live most of our water is surface water. In fact, in Colorado 80 percent of our water that we use in Colorado is dependent upon the snow pack. Colorado happens to be the highest place on the continent, and our mountains reach high into the skies, and they gather that snow; but water storage is very critical for us, and just the same as I have seen an effort in health care towards a socialized type of system, i.e., the government takes care of all of it, the government pays for all of it, do not worry about the prescription costs, the government will pay for all of it, we are seeing the same kind of effort being made in the West in regards to water.

Right now water in the West is a private property. This country was built on the premise of private property. If we were to list some of the freedoms, say the top 10 freedoms that Americans feel so strongly about, that were the foundation of the founding of this country and the foundation of the greatness of this country, in those top 10 items we would find private property listed by almost everyone who listed those top 10, private property; and in the West water is a property issue.

Generally what we see is those who do not have it or did not buy it or did not think to get it make a very conscious effort of saying, wait a minute, those who have it ought to share it with us. That is exactly the premise upon which socialism was built, and we are seeing it in the West; and it is being seen in the West by something called the public interest doctrine, i.e., when it comes to water, we do not consider the individual's private property rights. We do not consider the individual's rights of usage. What we consider is what is good for the public as a whole.

So in other words, it might be that someone has owned these water rights out in the Colorado mountains for a long time, and it might be that that family is dependent upon ranching; but the fact is, since in Colorado agriculture is only a small percentage of the entire economy, but yet uses a larger percentage of the water in proportion to the size of its economy, public interest demands that we take water from them.

That is exactly the effort that is being made, and frankly, I think this year in Colorado under a populist type of banner, they are going to attempt to put a question on our ballot, should a person's water rights have to take backseat to the public interest doctrine. It is a very, very dangerous move towards a socialistic society. I can tell my colleagues that there are some people's water I would like to have, some people's property I would like to have, but it is not my private property. It is their private property. They earned it, they paid for it, they worked it or whatever; but it is their property.

For us to begin to move this country in a direction that because we as a public think we can put it to a better use, that the public interest doctrine should be introduced and the property should be taken from them is the wrong approach. So next week I fully intend to spend a full hour talking about the special needs of water, the special needs in the West.

In the West water is like blood. That is what they say. Water runs thicker than blood, in fact, they say in the West. We will talk about where it originates, the importance of storage in Colorado and the West. We will talk about the public lands that are primarily located in the West and not located in the East. We will talk about gravity, how gravity has a lot to do with the situation that we are in today.

We will talk about those who do not want water being utilized for their home or for no development, for example, and see it as a way to control or stop development. Frankly, in some regards, I think the abuse of water has been ignored. We will talk about that, too.

We will talk about the environmental issues of water. Water is a very boring subject by the way. It only becomes interesting to all of us when all of the sudden we are in a drought or when we turn on the faucet and the water does not come out; but in fact, when we look at the future generations, what issue is so, so important to sustain life, to sustain agriculture, to sustain recreation, to sustain the environment, we are almost always going to come back to water.

Colorado politicians and Colorado citizens throughout its hundred-plus years of being a State have recognized the importance of water. If we go in the State capital of Denver, we see in every painting in the rotunda somewhere depicts someone doing something with water. It is very, very important.

The Colorado River is called the mother of all rivers. Why? Is it a big river? No. It does not look like the Mississippi. In fact, I grew up understanding how important the Colorado River was, but I also thought it was the biggest river.

I about fainted when I saw the Mississippi River, the first time I saw a picture of it. It was huge.

The importance of the Colorado and what makes the Colorado the mother of all rivers is the fact that it is the only water available for many of the people out there. Whereas when you get into the Mississippi, in fact, in a lot of the East, the difficulty is getting rid of water. In the West, it is the capability of being able to store water.

So I look forward to visiting with my colleagues next week, Mr. Speaker.

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES AND SPENDING HABITS OF THE CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLAKE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues, of course, that come to mind today for purposes of a discussion for a period of time here. Something brought to mind when I was listening to my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS), and he was talking about the propensity of this body especially to spend money in ways that I think we could call profligate.

It is true, unfortunately, whether one party is in charge or the other, it seems like it hardly matters, we do spend a great deal of money, sometimes without benefit, I think, of enough analysis and enough debate. And a constituent of mine e-mailed us a couple of days ago concerned about everything he had been hearing with regard to the proposals on both sides of the aisle for support of a new program for Medicare, a program that provides for insurance and/or some subsidy in some way or other for prescription drugs. As my colleague from Colorado said, it is a compelling argument.

We have all heard from constituents who over and over again explain to us the need for some help in procuring their prescription drugs, and our heart goes out to them because we recognize, just as I do with my own parents, and certainly I think everybody has someone who they can think of who is in desperate need for medication, the cost of which is skyrocketing. It seems like almost every week it goes up again and it becomes an incredible burden. And, naturally, that kind of thing happening out there will result in pressure here on this floor and in this body to do something about it to respond.

The reaction that most of us have is to say, well, what is it that the Federal Government can do. But unfortunately I think the reaction that most of us should have, but do not, is what is it that the Federal Government is empowered to do, empowered by the Constitution. Day in and day out we confront issues here on this floor that are severe, they are significant, they matter to millions of people in this country, and because they matter and because people are interested in them and there are pressure groups that develop, we find ourselves responding over and over again to the political pressure that boils up.

People say, well, is that not the purpose of a democracy? But, of course, this is a republic and not a democracy. This is a republic. And what that means is that we elect people to represent the interests of our constituents. We do not have a majority rule of the population of the country, which is what a true democracy is; everybody meeting all over the country on every issue and deciding the fate of that issue on an up-or-down vote. That is not what the Framers of the Constitution gave us and that is not what we should be about. It is mobocracy, perhaps would be a better way of describing it.

A republican form of government charges us, the people who are elected, to come here and analyze the issue and cast our vote in the best way we think that will fit our constituency and our responsibilities as a Member of this Congress. And this is always a challenging experience because we are torn, every human being on this floor, every human being in the Congress of the United States is torn between doing what political pressure pushes them toward doing on the one hand, and on the other what the Constitution prevents them from doing.

The Constitution cannot speak for itself. It has no voice here except that given to it by those of us who are concerned about it. It is just words. It is just words on a piece of paper, on a piece of parchment, actually, and, therefore, it can be interpreted, broadly, widely, liberally to say that everything we do here in this body is constitutionally approved. Well, of course, I think that if that were the case, we would not need a Constitution. We would not need a written document.

Britain has, for centuries now, existed without a written constitution. Everybody sort of understands what the parameters are and tries to deal with it. But, of course, Britain is a far more socialistic economy than ours and far more down the path towards socialism than we are, thank goodness. And that is inevitable. Without the constraints of a constitution, it is inevitable that it will lead to a government that will respond to all political pressures by taking away someone's hard-earned money and giving it to someone else that we deem appropriate.

This e-mail that I received had such a logical way of approaching it that I thought I would bring it to the floor for our edification. I received this from Randal Morgan, who lives in Aurora, Colorado. And he said, "Are you willing to insert the Boortz amendment, the Boortz resolution in all legislation you introduce and/or support? It is as follows:" And I must admit to you, Mr. Speaker, I had not heard of this particular resolution, that has evidently come up in the past, but I just did not know of it. It says: "Every sponsor or cosponsor over this legislation hereby affirms his or her belief that the need for the Federal Government of the United States to spend taxpayer funds on the purposes outlined herein is of greater importance and urgency than the spending needs which the party or parties who actually earned these funds may have. Such needs being, but not necessarily limited to, spending for medical care, child care, housing, food, clothing, transportation, education, insurance, savings and retirement planning."

Well, I think that is a great amendment to add to any bill that is passed by this House or introduced by any Member. Certainly I will be happy to do so if I am ever in the position of actually introducing legislation that spends money. So far, in my tenure in this Congress, I have been able to avoid that particular distinction. But should I ever find myself in that situation, I will be happy to add this particular resolution as an amendment.

I think it is a great statement. It is saying what we all are in fact doing. It is saying, clearly, that we are making a decision, we as a body, that everyone here believes and understands that whatever we decide is the important cause for which we are on the floor imploring our colleagues to support is more important than the concerns and the needs of the people from whom we are taking the money. I mean that is exactly what we do here time and time again.

Now, if we use the constraints of the Constitution as our guideline, then we will say that, yes, there are some things that we will take money away from all people in this republic to fund. Because we are charged with the responsibility of doing such. We are charged with the responsibility of maintaining the republic intact. And that is just my interpretation, now. I mean, I recognize that there are 534 other Members of the Congress who make their interpretation, but what it means to me is this; that the primary responsibility of the Federal Government is not education, it is not health and human services, it is not transportation, it is not energy policy. None of those things are the primary responsibility, yet we have committees and we have appropriation bills for all of these. We have 13 appropriation bills for 13 separate activities, and they encompass every imaginable activity, by the way, and some unimaginable, I should say.

But if we were to analyze the Constitution and think of that as the template over which we overlay the proposal that we use to determine how we should vote on any particular issue, I think that we would all walk away from here after having voted no on about 99 percent of the things that confront us. Because if our primary responsibility is, as I believe it to be, the preservation of the republic, then the defense appropriation bill that comes before us every year is of primary concern to me.

It is my responsibility to make a determination as to whether or not it is enough, but not whether or not it is the appropriate thing for the Federal Government to do. Of course it is. That is understood. It is understood that an agency like the Federal Government needs to be there for the coinage of money and for the regulation of the transportation of goods and services across State lines. There are a lot of things that the Federal Government has a responsibility for that the States do not.

Mr. Speaker, I am more than willing to vote to take money away from people in this Republic and give it to others for the purpose of meeting the constitutional requirements placed upon us. Individuals cannot defend the country. They may hopefully be able to defend themselves if we let them keep their firearms, but they cannot defend the country. We have to organize for that, and that is the purpose of the appropriations bill for defense. So our only question at that point in time is: Is it right, is it enough, is it too much, and should we support it on that basis? But really not whether it is appropriate. But all of the other things we do here that do not fit into the constitutional framework can be called into question and they are, I think, by the e-mail to us from Mr. Morgan. I agree we do far, far too much. I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have gone far too far in the direction of federalizing crimes.

The Constitution again gives us certain responsibilities, and we can interpret them in various ways, but it is difficult for me to understand how or why we can impose Federal statutory limitations on certain actions throughout the Nation that are not directly related to our role as the Federal Government and the Congress of the United States.

I think that we have so strained the resources available to us, especially in the FBI, for instance, giving them now over 3,000 laws that they have to enforce, 3,000 criminal laws that they have to enforce. We have so overstrained their resources they find themselves in the position of not being able to do their primary job, and that is to protect the United States from those who will do us harm from internal or external threats as a Nation, not a bank robber, someone who has taken a hostage, taken a drug, something that they are now responsible for getting involved with because we have passed laws here forcing them to do so.

And then we say how is it that we could have possibly missed so many clues, so many signs that there were people in the United States of America that were here to do us harm, and we should have known and done better. The FBI got information from the CIA. Did they not interpret it right?

Frankly, they are doing a million things, and I am glad to see that the Attorney General has determined that there is going to be a priority for the Federal Government, especially FBI involvement, and it is going to start with threats to the Nation. That is where it should end. That is where it should end because we have this thing called States rights. We have this thing called the federalist system of government which delegates to States all of the responsibilities for law enforcement of other activities.

Yet people come to us constantly and ask us, and it is hard to turn down a request to make a law against certain activities, to make a law against pedophilia and child molestation. I do not know anyone who supports that activity. But is that our role? Is that what the Constitution says the Federal Government should be doing?

I suggest that because there have been so many attempts to federalize criminal statutes and federalize certain crimes, I should say, that we have now become bogged down in that quagmire of activity that could frankly take all of the resources that we could possibly devote and would never, ever solve the problem.

We all need to know what our role is. What is the job of the Federal Government when it comes to enforcement of criminal statutes? What is the job of the counties and the cities? When each one knows what they are supposed to do, they can devote their resources to accomplishing that goal. But we have done far, far too much because we have responded, as is natural, to the requests, the demands, the political pressure, to make certain things a Federal crime.

Guns, guns. Now, I happen to represent a constituency that has suffered through one of the most traumatic events that can possibly be described. Columbine High School haunts our memories. It is replayed even today on television stations, in the newspaper with charges of malfeasance, with charges of ineptness on the part of various officials who were responsible for dealing with the issue.

Parents will actually never, ever feel the healing salve of forgiveness when it comes to this issue, and when it comes to what happened to their children, both those killed at Columbine High School and those who remain or were injured, both physically and mentally. The tragedy is horrendous. So what happens then is political pressure develops. People come to the Congress of the United States and demand action. Certainly I felt that pressure. People demanded that we take dramatic steps in trying to restrict someone's ability to own firearms.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, let me say first of all and clearly, I believe there are people in this country that should not be able to own a firearm. Maybe that puts me in direct confrontation with those who say the second amendment says everyone should be able to own firearms. I disagree. We do not go through the penitentiary system in this country offering catalogues for people to order firearms. We restrict a lot of people from being able to own firearms, and logically so. We do not want felons, criminals, especially violent criminals, to be able to easily access a firearm. And I must tell Members that seems completely logical to me. We do not allow people who have certain mental instabilities to obtain firearms. That seems logical to me.

But what is the Federal role? That is the question that one must ask themselves. What is the Federal Government's role in this prohibition? Now, there are people who are federally licensed to sell firearms, and because they have chosen individually and voluntarily to in fact make that determination as a federally licensed dealer, then they must be regulated by the Federal Government. They must accept that regulation. That is their decision. They chose to be federally licensed. That gives them certain responsibilities and certain abilities that other people do not have. It is a privilege, in a way. So we regulate it. I can understand that, and I can even support it.

And I understand the desire of many, even here, to go far beyond that and regulate the ownership of firearms to anyone, regulate the ownership of various kinds of firearms and number, all those things that we are able to do. Where in the Constitution does it give us that responsibility?

That is just one example; and as I say, believe me, I want to keep firearms out of the possession of people who should not get them to the extent we are able. We cannot create a perfect society. We cannot guarantee against every kind of risk, yet that is the constant pressure we face in the United States Congress. People want a risk-free society, and they expect us to deliver it.

All of this comes about as a result of a misunderstanding of the form of government that we have, and the blame can be placed at least partially, if not squarely on the shoulders of our public education system that does not do a very good job of telling children who we are, what we are, and what this Nation was founded on, what principles we were founded on.

Without that knowledge, Mr. Speaker, we are at a loss to understand what we should be doing here and what State legislatures and county and local governments should be doing. We would think, without the knowledge of the Constitution, we would think that we here should be doing everything. That we are the ultimate authority, and I suggest that it is a misinterpretation. It is a lack of knowledge of the Constitution and of basic American history that has placed us in that situation, along with just the dynamics of human nature that when they see a problem look to a legislative body for resolution of that problem.

But we have to tell people that we have certain responsibilities, and those responsibilities are limited, limited by this thing we call the Constitution of the United States; and there is an important reason why we have such a document: it is to curtail power of the Federal Government. The Constitution is not something that is designed to broaden the power of the Federal Government; it is designed to limit the power of the Federal Government. And we should understand and appreciate that, and we should teach our children about that to the extent we are able, both as parents and as schools. Schools should be the reflection of these values and attitudes and ideas about our system of government. After all, although there are a lot of reasons why we should argue about what should be taught in a public school system with regard to morality and everything else, the fact is we are talking about a system of government that we all share, that we all have a responsibility for looking into and voting, and a variety of other things that demand our participation.

When we do that, we should demand the participation of intelligent voters, people who understand what this process is all about. If we do that, Mr. Speaker, it would come naturally to mind the next, I guess, topic of my Special Order tonight, the issue of what is the proper Federal role in the government of this country.

I will suggest that there is one area that is uniquely Federal in responsibility, and that is of course the area of determining who comes into this country, how many, for what purpose, from what countries, and how long they stay.

We call that an immigration policy and no State can adopt one. The State of Ohio cannot determine who comes or goes across its borders, but the Federal Government can and should and has an absolute right to do so. There is a philosophy of government referred to often as libertarianism that suggests that borders are meaningless and that they should be erased for the purpose of advancing economic activity, that borders are anachronisms, that they do not in fact reflect today's reality and should be erased. This philosophy would suggest that the European Union is a good example of the elimination of borders, at least partially, and that everything that comes about as a result of that is good and that is a way of looking at life through strictly economic lenses, and there is something to be said for that. I mean certainly the philosophy has merit. The gentleman who wrote to us, who I referred to earlier, Mr. Morgan, tells me later on in this e-mail that he is in fact a libertarian. I guess I would challenge a libertarian's view of this particular issue. I would suggest that although an ideal world is one in which all movement of goods and services can flow without interdiction, the real world in which we live requires the existence of borders and there are a lot of good reasons why borders should exist, not the least of which is the fact that people coming across borders without permission of the country they are entering can do nasty things, do do nasty things if they do not like that country's government, if they do not like what that nation stands for. So of course we have seen this happen on September 11. We know that 19 people, actually several more came into the United States for the purposes of destroying as much of the country's governmental infrastructure as they possibly could, killing us here, killing civilians in the World Trade towers, crashing their planes into the Pentagon, hoping to crash them into the White House and, as I say, the Capitol.

We face that dilemma. Libertarians face that dilemma. How do they rationalize their desire for a borderless world with a world in which people exist for the sole purpose of destroying others, in this case us? And that the economic system, whatever grows out of this dismantled world that would be the result of the elimination of borders, would not be one in which free enterprise would thrive, in which capitalist ideals would be upheld. It would be one, if it were democratic at all, in which the masses of people would vote if they had the opportunity to vote, for some sort of world government. I assure my colleagues that right now, knowing what we know about human nature and the lack of information and understanding we have in our own country about what a republic is designed to do, can we imagine what would happen if we overlaid that template across the world and said everyone is to vote for some sort of world government to control various aspects of human behavior which would, of course, be necessary? Even if we eliminated borders, there would be a world government that would be necessary.

Does anyone think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that that world government would be one that would advance the concepts of liberal, small L, democracy? And of private enterprise? And of capitalism? Does anybody believe for a moment that it would be that, as opposed to a world government in which everything would be taken from those who have and given to those who have not?

I think it is simple and pure and it is again an ideal, but it is an ideal to which I do not aspire. Therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, we need borders. This country, all countries, need borders. We need borders to distinguish who we are, where we are and why we are. It is true, I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are distinctions among countries, among governments. I believe with all my heart that there are differences among cultures and among political philosophies, and I believe some are better than others. I know that that is a frightening thing to say to some people, and they would see that as very chauvinistic. But the reality is if we raised all of the gates all over the world, where would people come? To what country would they come?

How many people, do you think, Mr. Speaker, if all of the gates in the world were raised, would go to China? How many would go to Russia? How many would go to Mexico? That is a test of this theory that all cultures are the same, essentially, all systems are essentially the same, no real difference and, therefore, why should we worry about things called borders? I suggest that we should worry about it because we are different. The United States of America is different. It is, in fact, unique, and I will say unequivocally it is better. Because if we raised those gates, Mr. Speaker, they would all come here. There is, I think, no question about it. Millions of people every year attempt to come to the United States legally. Millions more come into the United States illegally. We for the most part have abandoned our borders at the present time. We have abandoned the borders for a variety of reasons, some of them purely cynical and purely political, some of them quite philosophical in nature, as I say, a libertarianesque attitude about the need for and importance of borders. But regardless of the reason we have done it, we have done it. For all intents and purposes, we really do not have borders.

I was recently in Arizona in the Coronado National Forest that has a 60-mile coterminous border with Mexico. The forest manager there had asked for help because he has a total of four people to patrol that border of his forest, a 60-mile border with Mexico, and we are now getting hundreds of thousands of people coming across, some looking just for jobs, some looking for a better way of life that would be provided them even if they did not work because of the welfare system in the United States, and some of them coming across to carry the illegal drugs that are provided them by the cartels in Mexico. Regardless of their purpose or intent, they are coming in illegally and they are essentially destroying the forest. In a microcosm, what is happening in the Coronado forest could be said to be happening throughout the country, to our Nation in a way. We are essentially destroying the forest, the Coronado forest, because the human traffic through there is at such a level as to actually negatively affect the ecology. There are thousands of footpaths that have been worn into the ground by people coming across in a very fragile environment. There are thousands and thousands of water bottles that have been strewn. There are clothes. There are other aspects of human movement through there, human participation in the movement through that forest and it is degrading to the forest itself. People coming through there illegally at night start campfires to stay warm and in the daytime walk away from them and now over 50,000 acres this year have been destroyed through fire. If this were happening in any other forest in the Nation, the Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth, a variety of other environmental organizations, would be up in arms. Well, they do not like arms. They would be irate. They would be chaining themselves to the scrub oak that comprise the forest. But there is not a word said about this forest degradation because, of course, it is a result of illegal immigration and something that many of these organizations, the Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth and the rest, are averse to trying to criticize, essentially because of political correctness.

So States look to us, the forest manager in the Coronado looks to the Federal Government and says, "Help me do something about this." We turn a blind eye to it. I used to say all the time that the logo for the INS, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, should be a guy who simply is shrugging his shoulders. That should be on the top of the page, a guy going, "I don't know. Don't ask me. I have no idea," because every time we ask the INS about anything, any questions you have of them, no matter what it is, they give you that kind of an answer. But now there is another way I would like to describe the reaction of the Congress of the United States, the President of the United States to the issues of massive immigration, illegal and legal, and that is the classic see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil, the three-monkey sort of statue we have seen before. That is the logo we should have here. No one wants to talk about this because it gets a little antsy. Are we actually talking about racial issues? Are we talking about just one country? Plus there are all those votes that are here in the United States. If we talk about trying to secure our borders, which is a Federal role, a uniquely Federal role as opposed to all the other things we do that I mentioned earlier in my discussion here tonight, the uniquely Federal role of immigration is disregarded because of the fear of the political backlash that would occur in this country from voters, from certainly minority groups and the desire on the part of the Democrats to enhance their numbers by a large pool of immigrants into the country. They recognize that they vote often for the Democratic party, so they are averse to doing anything that would stop the flow.

We, on the other hand, are averse to doing anything because we are afraid of the economic ramifications of businesses coming to us and saying, "I need cheap labor and I don't care if they are coming here legally or illegally." And there is that libertarian flow through the body that says we should just simply open the borders. So we have all of those converging pressures here that stops us from doing anything about this tragedy.

It is a tragedy in the Coronado. It is a tragedy also for the United States. Any country that cannot define its own borders and cannot actually protect and defend them is not a nation. Any country that says we recognize that there is massive violation of our laws, of our immigration laws, but we choose not to do anything about it, does not deserve to be called a country, and one wonders for how long it can be called a country.

Interestingly, this issue of elimination of borders and sort of a world economic system, or at least in this case a North and South American economic and political system that converges, this is not something that is a hidden agenda. There used to be people that I know, and the Speaker knows of many people, who would confront us at various meetings, town meetings and the like, with this world economic order, a new world order, and it is all very conspiratorial; and they feel that it is all in the hands of certain people who have economic interests. Well, this is not conspiratorial. This is out in the open. It is absolutely clear for anyone to see and hear.

For instance, not too long ago, less than a week ago, I think, the President of Mexico, Vincente Fox, was speaking in Spain, and he said that all of his efforts, all of the government's efforts to try and liberalize immigration policy, were really devoted to one goal. This was incredibly insightful, hearing what he had to say. This is the President of Mexico, and he has said something similar on many occasions, but he said just the other day that his goal is to end up with a system that allows for the free flow of goods, of services, and he stopped for a minute, and he said of people, not inhibited by borders. He has said in the past that he believes in a relatively short time there will be no borders between the United States and Mexico.

The gentleman who is the head of an agency of the Mexican Government that is called the Ministry for Mexicans Living Outside of Mexico said earlier, told me personally in Mexico, that there were, when I was questioning him about the use of his term of "migration," and I said it is really immigration, and when they cross the border illegally it is called illegal immigration, and this is Mr. Juan Hernandez, who is, by the way, both a Mexican and an American citizen, he said to me, "Congressman, it is not two countries; it is just a region."

This, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is the end goal of this game we are playing. It is debatable as to whether it is good or bad. I think it is bad. At least it deserves a debate, a national debate. Should we eliminate our borders, or not? That is where we are going. I want it to happen in a de jure way as opposed to a de facto way. Actually, I do not want it to happen at all, but, if it does, it has to be through a legal process and not one where we just several years from now look around and say, how did this happen to us? We lost our sovereignty as a Nation. I do not want to say I was responsible or had no part to play in that process.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN RECOGNITION OF THE EDMONDS COMMUNITY COLLEGE CENTER FOR FAMILIES GROUNDBREAKING

HON. JAY INSLEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, balancing work and family has become increasingly difficult for families across America. One of the greatest challenges that many families face is finding safe, affordable childcare. It is with these challenges in mind that I am delighted to announce that a week from today, on June 11, 2002, Edmonds Community College will officially begin construction on their new Center for Families. The Center for Families, scheduled to open in September 2003, will triple the college's on-site childcare center from about 5,000 to 15,000 square feet. The Center will also triple its childcare capacity for the children of students, including students who are retraining for new jobs after unemployment and those participating in welfare-to-work programs.

Moreover, this new center will serve as a training facility for future professionals in early childhood education and as a model of best practices in parent education, childcare, preschool education (including Head Start), and family support. The Center for Families will have a Family Resource Center providing a "one stop" reference service for parents and professionals. Here, families can find the resources they need to stay in school and find the best care for their children, as well as parenting resources, professional help, and support groups.

The Edmonds Community College Foundation successfully raised $4 million dollars for this exciting new center from a combination of federal, state, county, city, and private funds. The center will bring together children from all backgrounds—some have parents who are new immigrants, other parents are professionals seeking new job skills, while others are transitioning from welfare. As a community resource, it will create more graduates who are successful and, ultimately, a more educated community.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join me in congratulating Edmonds Community College on their wonderful Center for Families. The Center for Families will truly be, "Expanding Childcare, Educating Families, Enhancing Community."

IN RECOGNITION OF THE POPULATION COUNCIL ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Population Council, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary. Its headquarters are located in the 14th Congressional district which I represent. The Population Council strives to improve the well-being and reproductive health of people around the world and works to achieve a humane, equitable and sustainable balance between people and resources.

Established in 1952, the organization conducts high-quality, objective, policy-relevant research in biomedicine, public health and social science. It also offers evidence-based technical assistance and capacity building through collaborative research, awards, fellowships, and training.

Founder John D. Rockefeller III believed that the reason to care about population was "to improve the quality of people's lives, to help make it possible for individual's everywhere to develop their full potential." Although the circumstances facing the world have changed substantially over the past 50 years, that vision has motivated the organization throughout its history. Today the Council remains in the forefront of its field, anticipating problems, doing the research, and providing the results that inform the debate and facilitate the development and implementation of science-based solutions. The Council's research agenda now includes HIV/AIDS, urbanization, adolescents, and aging, along with its long-standing work in contraceptive development, improving access to high-quality reproductive health services, and understanding the causes and consequences of population change.

The Population Council began as a funding agency with a professional staff of fewer than ten and an annual budget of less than 1 million dollars. This fiscal year the Council will operate on a budget of $86 million, with offices in 18 countries and on four different continents. It conducts research and programs in more than 70 countries. The Council's extensive various offices and programs employ nearly 600 people worldwide and includes citizens from more than 40 countries.

The Population Council Board of Trustees is comprised of leaders in the fields of biomedicine, business, economic development, health, the media, philanthropy, and social science.

The organization receives funding from the government as well as private foundations, corporations and individuals. In all of its endeavors, the Population Council has aspired to the highest professional and ethical standards and has earned a worldwide reputation for excellence and integrity. Policymakers, program managers and others concerned with population issues turn to the Population Council for rigorous research results—results that help improve people's lives.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in commending the Population Council for 50 years of groundbreaking research, and wishing them continued excellence in the next 50 years.

RETIREMENT OF ROBERT E. MELICAN

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join the community of Northborough, Massachusetts in honoring Robert E. Melican, Superintendent of Schools, as the Northborough Middle School is renamed the Robert E. Melican Middle School.

Mr. Melican is representative of all the hardworking and dedicated educators in Central Massachusetts. He has been a part of the Northborough School District since 1969, serving the children of Northborough and Southborough as a sixth grade teacher, math teacher, Assistant to the Superintendent, Assistant Superintendent, Acting Superintendent, and finally as Superintendent for the Northborough, Southborough and Northborough-Southborough School Districts since 1996. For 33 years, Mr. Melican has dedicated himself to the children fortunate to live in these communities.

Additionally, Mr. Melican has deeply committed himself to those outside of the school community, serving as a member of the Worcester County Superintendents' Association, the Massachusetts Superintendents' Association, the Worcester Vocational School District, and the Advisory Board at Worcester State College. Currently, Mr. Melican serves as Vice President of the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents and in that capacity has earned the respect of his peers throughout the state.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the entire U.S. House of Representatives joins me in congratulating Mr. Melican for his accomplishments.

TRIBUTE TO PATRICK NAGLE

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Patrick Nagle for being recognized with the Pennsylvania Financial Services

Advocate award given by the Small Business Administration (SBA). This award, which recognizes his ongoing service in the banking industry, made Mr. Nagle the state winner in addition to being the winner in the Western Pennsylvania District for 2002. Mr. Nagle serves as the Vice President and Small Business Manager/SBA Coordinator for Central Bank, a division of First Commonwealth Bank. In this position he is responsible for the expanding portfolio of SBA loans for Central Bank as well as the entire First Commonwealth system.

When Mr. Nagle first accepted the responsibility for this program in 1994, the portfolio contained only three SBA loans. Since that time remarkable progress has been made. At the end of the most recent fiscal year, September 30, 2001, First Commonwealth's portfolio contained 144 SBA loans making them the second largest originator of SBA loans in Western Pennsylvania. Much of this progress is attributed solely to the hard work and dedication Pat Nagle has invested in his work. He helped make many people's dreams of owning their own business come true. With the addition of new businesses, vitality and growth are made possible for communities' consumers and entrepreneurs.

In addition to being a member of the First Commonwealth system, Mr. Nagle is also active in the SBA Community Express loan program and various local economic development agencies. He is known by many to be helpful by sharing his knowledge and expertise at small business seminars in his and surrounding communities. By sharing what he knows, he makes it possible for others to provide a helping hand in starting new businesses. This creates a chain reaction of community growth and in turn the opportunity for prosperity for everyone. Many of this country's small businesses were made possible because someone cared enough to believe in another person's vision. Pat Nagle has embodied this spirit in his work and community activism.

As a small businessman myself, I know exactly how hard it is to make payroll, schedule, keep inventory, and all the other responsibilities that fall under being a small business owner. I also know that in this country small businesses are the number one creators of jobs—and the more we help small businesses, the stronger our local economies will be.

I would like to congratulate Mr. Nagle once again on this tremendous award he has received and thank him for all of his hard work. I wish him the very best of luck in all of his future endeavors.

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, April 22, a Change of Command was held at Whiteman Air Force Base in Knob Noster, MO. Col. Douglas L. Raaberg succeeded BG Anthony Przybyslawski as the Commanding Officer of the 509th Bomb Wing. BG Przybyslawski will continue his outstanding military career as the assistant director of operations for Air Combat Command headquarters in Langley Air Force Base, VA. Lt. Gen. Keck oversaw the change of command.

Col. Douglas L. Raaberg has had an exemplary military career. Col. Raaberg graduated from the U.S. Air Force Academy in 1978 with a BA in aeronautical engineering. He also holds two masters degrees in systems management and national security strategy. Col. Raaberg has served at Vance Air Force Base, training Navy, Marine Corps and allied pilots. While commanding the Ninth Bomb Squadron, Col. Raaberg's unit set a world record for flying around the world in nearly 36 hours without re-fueling.

Mr. Speaker, as Col. Douglas L. Raaberg takes command of the 509th Bomb Wing at Whiteman Air Force Base, I know that the Members of the House will join me in wishing him the best in the days ahead.

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the hard work and dedication of the employees of Standard Register Company's Murfreesboro, Tennessee, plant. The strong work ethic the Standard Register associates share have led them to achieve a milestone—five years with no lost-time accidents. This five-year period represents 690,500 hours of working safely.

In 1978, a site in my hometown of Murfreesboro became the fourteenth Standard Register plant. Murfreesboro was chosen because of its proximity to the interstates, railroads and airports. Today, the plant employs 80 people.

The Murfreesboro plant manufactures continuous business forms and checks. Employees in the Stanfast Section produce booklets, notepads and more. The Murfreesboro plant fills orders from local sales offices and ships its products all over the United States and internationally.

Founded in 1912 in Dayton, Ohio, Standard Register currently employs 6,000 people in the United States, has annual revenues exceeding $1 billion and serves companies in 40 countries. In addition to producing business forms, the company also offers its clients electronic documents, as well as consulting and e-business services.

I congratulate each and every Standard Register employee at the Murfreesboro plant for a job well done and wish each one many more successes in the future.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE YMCA OF GREATER NEW YORK CITY, ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the YMCA of Greater New York City, which is celebrating 150 years of remarkable service to New Yorkers. Through a variety of programs and initiatives the YMCA has demonstrated an unwavering commitment to serving those in need, and to strengthening the community at large.

Founded in 1852, the YMCA distinguished itself as an institution committed to aiding those emigrating to New York City. It also garnered a reputation as an institution firmly committed to social justice, and throughout its existence has advocated on behalf of a number of historically significant causes. During the 19th century the YMCA was identified as staunchly abolitionist. In addition, it formed a commission to minister to soldiers in the camps, hospitals and battlefields of the Civil War. Upon the conclusion of the Civil War, the YMCA initiated new programs to serve African-Americans, railroad workers and young urban boys.

During the first half of the 20th century the YMCA continued to emerge as a pioneer on social issues. While racial integration was not obtained nationally until the mid 20th century, many New York City YMCA programs were integrated much earlier. During this time women also became members.

In the latter half of the 20th century the YMCA began to focus on addressing the needs of the rapidly growing urban population. In particular, it began to initiate programs targeted at aiding adolescents and their families. A number of these programs addressed poverty, delinquency, and drug abuse, including Jobmobiles and Youthmobiles, which allowed YMCA programs to be mobile and travel into communities in need. A growing emphasis on physical fitness led to the introduction of sports programming including two sports invented at the YMCA—basketball and volleyball.

During New York City's fiscal crisis, the YMCA worked to assist families affected by expanding childcare and family programs. Over the last decade the YMCA has continued to demonstrate a commitment to serving youth. Through partnerships with the United Way and the New York City Board of Education, the YMCA has become a presence in nearly 200 public schools in every school district in New York City through the "Virtual Y." The "Virtual Y" currently enrolls 7,500 students. It also operates Teen Action NYC which currently operates in five schools and provides life skills and career planning.

During its existence, the YMCA has also demonstrated a commitment to public and private partnerships. Early YMCA supporters from the private sector included William E. Dodge, Jr., J.P. Morgan, and Cornelius Vanderbilt II. It has also received substantial support from some of New York City's most influential leaders, including Governor Thomas

During 2002 the YMCA of Greater New York will serve 170,000 youth and 200,000 adults. The YMCA of Greater New York will commemorate its 150th anniversary with a book entitled, "The YMCA at 150: A History of the YMCA of Greater New York, 1852–2002."

I ask that my colleagues join me in saluting the YMCA of Greater New York on 150 years of outstanding service to the community.

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Ferreiro family, Harrisonfest's 2002 Family of the Year. The family was honored on May 31st, at the annual Harrisonfest in Harrison, New Jersey. This festival, consisting of a marathon race, an array of vendors, fun family games, dazzling floats, fireworks, and performances by folk groups and musical bands, lasted through the weekend to raise scholarship funds for the students of Harrison Public Schools.

In 1905, at the age of nine, Louis Ferreiro, along with his mother, father, four brothers, and two sisters arrived in America and settled in Harrison, New Jersey. It was to be the beginning of a prosperous and wholesome life for his entire family in the community of Harrison.

Louis Ferreiro married Angelina Forte in 1925, and together they raised five sons. This blossoming family ran a landmark store known as "Louie the Sausage King" at 7 North 3rd Street for over 50 years. The store was known for its delicious Italian-style hotdogs, and many Harrison citizens continue to reminisce about the good old days when you could catch up with friends, while enjoying the store's speciality.

The five Ferreiro sons and their families, as well as their children's families, have created a legacy of 21 grandchildren and 22 great grandchildren. And today, four generations of the Ferreiro family—29 individuals—continue to live in Harrison.

I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the Ferreiro family, who, through their strong sense of family values, and their commitment and dedication, helped shape today's beautiful community of Harrison, New Jersey.

TRIBUTE TO LOUIS BERTHIAUME

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Louis Berthiaume of Rutland, Massachusetts who has announced his retirement after many years of dedicated service as a rural carrier for the Rutland Post Office.

Mr. Berthiaume was born in Worcester, Massachusetts on May 24, 1942, attended public schools in Worcester and Shrewsbury and graduated from Shrewsbury High School.

In November 1960, Mr. Berthiaume served in the United States Army for six years with the 101st Airborne and the 1st Division. While in the Army, Mr. Berthiaume's tours included Korea and Vietnam. Following his service, Mr. Berthiaume was honorably discharged in 1966.

In addition to his service to our nation as a civil and military employee, Mr. Berthiaume has been deeply involved with the Special Olympics, and he has volunteered for many years in the annual Post Office food drive.

It is a pleasure to acknowledge such a fine individual, and I am certain the entire House of Representatives joins me in extending our very best wishes to him and his family for a happy and healthy retirement.

TRIBUTE TO ERNIE WISSINGER

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Ernie Wissinger for earning the Blair County Chamber of Commerce's Lifetime Achievement Award for Business Advocacy. Mr. Wissinger is the first ever to receive this award and set a high standard of excellency for other entrepreneurs to follow.

Mr. Wissinger resides in Blair County, Pennsylvania where he owned and operated a retail grocery store for 42 years. In addition to focusing on his own business, he was always available to assist others within the business community. By lending a helping hand where one was needed, he has played a crucial part in helping to make Blair County businesses thrive and grow. For years he took it upon himself to act as an unofficial ambassador and advocate for the people and the businesses of Blair County whenever he traveled across Pennsylvania or to other states.

In addition to being an insightful businessman he is also a generous volunteer. Mr. Wissinger provided financial support to organizations such as Easter Seals, the Altoona Area Public Library, and the Altoona Campus of Penn State to name just a few. In addition to donating resources, he donated his time to the Blair County youth. His involvement in volunteering for community organizations has made a positive impact on those around him. Blair County is a better place because of Ernie Wissinger's professional and personal investments in his community.

I congratulate Mr. Wissinger on all his business accomplishes and thank him for his involvement in the local community. By being the first to receive this award Mr. Wissinger set a standard for businessmen and women to strive to achieve. This award signals that he began a tradition of excellence that will be hard to duplicate. President George W. Bush, in his last State of the Union Address, challenged all of us to give two years or 4,000 hours of service over our lifetimes. If the President were here today I am positive he would shake Mr. Wissinger's hand and hold him up as an example for others to follow. I, too, would like to encourage others to follow in Mr. Wissinger's footsteps by being active volunteers and thoughtful entrepreneurs. One person can impact a community in many wonderful ways, and Blair County's example is Ernie Wissinger. I wish him the very best of luck in the years to come.

CONGRESS SALUTES BRIGADIER GENERAL DONALD P. PETTIT

HON. DAVE WELDON

OF FLORIDA

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize Brigadier General Donald P. Pettit, Commander of the 45th Space Wing in Florida, who will retire on July 31, 2002, after 32 years of distinguished service to the Air Force and his nation.

For the past three years, Brigadier General Pettit has served as the Director of the Eastern Range responsible for the safe and secure access to space of America's manned and unmanned space vehicles. During this time, he achieved a perfect 70 for 70 launch record with many of the satellites deployed used to fight the war on terror and for scientific research to expand our knowledge of the universe.

General Pettit entered the Air Force as an enlisted man during the Vietnam conflict and served four years as an aircraft electronics technician. He earned his commission as a distinguished graduate from the University of Miami's Reserve Officer Training Corps in 1974.

During his early years of service, he served as a Minuteman Missile Combat Crew commander and strategic missile planner. During tours at Headquarters, Strategic Air Command (SAC) and the Pentagon, he was instrumental in developing, acquiring and deploying the Peacekeeper (MX) Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles (ICBM) now at F.E. Warren Air Force Base, Wyoming.

As a field grade and general officer, he distinguished himself by serving in numerous capacities, including commanding a Minuteman ICBM squadron selected as "Best in Strategic Air Command," and subsequently our nation's largest ICBM wing.

As the Director of Plans and Programs at Headquarters, Air Force Space Command, Colorado Springs, Colorado, he created the command's Strategic Master Plan.

While in Moscow, he negotiated with the Soviet Union "The Reduction of Dangerous Military Activities Agreement." Since its 1989 signing, it has allowed Russian and American forces to operate in proximity to one another and precludes an involuntary act or miscalculation by either military force—whether land, air or sea—to escalate into a combat or war situation.

Brigadier General Pettit's final command was at the 45th Space Wing, overseeing America's eastern space launch range. The Eastern Range encompasses a 15 million square mile area.

Brigadier General Pettit's education accomplishments include an undergraduate degree from the University of Miami, Master of Arts degree from Pepperdine University, and graduating from the Marine and Air Force command and staff colleges and the Air War College.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Defense Superior Service Medal, and Joint Defense Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf cluster and Air Force Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters.

Brigadier General Pettit is married to the former Carol Worley, of Miami, Fla., and they have a son Michael, a 2002 University of Colorado graduate.

I am honored to rise in support of General Pettit's service to our nation, and I am proud of his commitment to the cause of liberty and freedom.

TRIBUTE TO JUSTIN WELLS

HON. ANNE M. NORTHUP

OF KENTUCKY

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and honor a very brave young man from my district in Kentucky. Mr. Justin Wells is a hero in the truest sense of the word. While driving home from the hardware store, Justin and his father came upon a near fatal car accident. Taking the first aid kit from his father's trunk, Justin rushed to help the injured man, who was bleeding profusely and whose leg had been pinned down by the steering wheel of the car. Holding a compression bandage to the man's wounds while trying to keep the victim calm, Justin used the skills he had gained as both a Medical Trainer at St. Xavier High School and as a First Aid Instructor for Boy Scout Troop 380 to attend to the injuries. Justin was not deterred by the danger of the situation, or the possibility of an electric fire from the sparks emanating from the dashboard. Instead, he courageously tended to the injured man until the rescue squad arrived.

It is my great honor to pay tribute to Justin Wells, and to thank him for his courage, resourcefulness, and desire to help those in need. Justin is a very special young man, and I hardily applaud his commitment to his fellow citizens, even in the face of danger. His actions show that one person can make a great difference. Again, I offer my congratulations to Justin for his courage and good will.

HONORING ELNER G. OVERDEER

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Elner G. Overdeer who was honored as the winner of the 2002 Dauphin County Senior EXPO Outstanding Senior Award. She has dedicated her life to the service of others and for this she must be both appreciated and congratulated.

Ms. Overdeer clearly demonstrates a spirit of unconditional giving through her many initiatives that have benefited our community. She is a sterling example of kindness and integrity. Throughout the years she has been affiliated with a number of charitable and selfless organizations. These include the Middletown Historical Restoration Commission where she has served on the board since 1980, the Middletown Historical Society, the Regent of Swatara Pine-Ford Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Middletown Senior Citizens Center, the Middletown Area Alumni Association, the Presbyterian Congregational Church where she has served as an ordained ruling elder, and the Middletown Borough Authority where she has been the secretary for the past thirteen years.

It is with great honor, Mr. Speaker, that I call on all Members to join me in congratulating and thanking Elner G. Overdeer. Her years of service to the community have benefited many people in more ways than these mere words can express.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, June 5, 2002

The House met at 10 a.m.

O God, the fountain of wisdom, whose will is good and gracious and whose law is truth, we beseech You so to guide and bless our Representatives in Congress assembled, that they may lead this Nation and enact such laws as shall please You, to the glory of Your name and the welfare of the people. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. TIAHRT led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOME GUEST CHAPLAIN, BISHOP FRANK NEFF POWELL

(Mr. GOODLATTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to welcome Bishop Frank Neff Powell, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, and one of my constituents, who has been chosen to serve as Guest Chaplain this morning.

Bishop Powell was born in Salem, Oregon. He was baptized at Saint Paul's Episcopal Church in Salem, Oregon, in 1948. Growing up in Salem he met his future wife, Dorothy Houck. He attended Claremont Men's College, in Claremont, California, graduating with a degree in history in 1970. During college, he was active at Christ Church Parish, Ontario, California.

Immediately following graduation, he married Dorothy and enrolled in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Massachusetts. While there, he completed his field education at Church of our Savior in Milford, New Hampshire, and at St. Dunstan's in Ellsworth, Maine, graduating in 1973.

Bishop Powell began his ordained ministry as the curate at Trinity Parish in his home State of Oregon before being appointed vicar at Saint Bede's, Forest Grove, in 1975. These were fruitful years for the Powell family, marked by the birth of their three children, Charles Neff, Dorothy Louise, and Robert Bingham.

Bishop Powell was called to the diocese of New York in 1983 to serve as archdeacon and deputy for program, with a special emphasis on Christian education, stewardship, and small churches. He helped to develop the Carolinas and Virginia Small Church Leadership Training Program.

In 1991, he was called back to Oregon to serve as executive assistant to the bishop of Oregon. Most recently, on June 22, 1996, he was elected the fifth bishop of Southwestern Virginia. He is presently an associate of the Society of Saint John the Evangelist, a member of the Council of Associated Parishes for Liturgy and Mission, and a fellow of the College of Preachers. In addition, he was appointed to the Church Deployment Board of the National Episcopal Church in 1997.

Bishop Powell's life has been marked by continual service and dedication to the Episcopal Church and to the dictates of his personal faith. It is a distinct pleasure to welcome him to Washington today to open the United States House of Representatives in prayer, one of the finer traditions of this institution in which we humbly seek divine guidance and wisdom for the difficult tasks before us.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to welcome Bishop Frank Neff Powell, Bishop of Southwestern Virginia and one of my constituents, who has been chosen to serve as guest chaplain this morning.

Bishop Powell was born December 28, 1947, in Salem, OR. He was baptized at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, in Salem, OR, on November 28, 1948.

Growing up in Salem he met his future wife, Dorothy Houck, in the church youth group. He attended Claremont Men's College, in Claremont, CA, graduating with a degree in history in 1970. During college, he was active at Christ Church Parish, Ontario, CA, and in the Episcopal students group.

Immediately following graduation, he married Dorothy, and enrolled in the Episcopal Theological School, in Cambridge, MA. While there he completed his field education at Church of Our Savior in Milford, NH, and at St. Dunstan's in Ellsworth, ME, graduating in 1973.

Powell began his ordained ministry as the curate at trinity parish in his home state of Oregon, before being appointed vicar of St. Bede's forest grove, in 1975. While at St. Bede's the liturgy was redesigned, Christian education expanded, the congregation began to actively engage the community, and a new church was built. These were fruitful years for the Powell family as well, marked by the birth of their three children, Charles Neff, Dorothy Louise, and Robert Bingham.

Bishop Powell was called to the diocese of North Carolina in 1983 to serve as archdeacon and deputy for program, with a special emphasis on Christian education, stewardship, and small churches. He helped to develop the Carolinas and Virginia small church leadership training program.

In 1991, he was called back to Oregon to serve as executive assistant to the bishop of Oregon, attending to administration, vocations, deployment, and secretary of convention and council.

Most recently, on June 22, 1996, he was elected the fifth bishop of southwestern Virginia during a special council held at St. John's Church, in Roanoke. He was ordained and consecrated at Burris auditorium on the campus of Virginia Tech, later that year.

He is presently an associate of the society of St. John the evangelist, a member of the council of associated parishes for liturgy and mission, and a fellow of the college of preachers. In addition, he was appointed to the church deployment board of the national Episcopal Church in 1997.

Bishop Neff's life has been marked by continual service and dedication to the Episcopal Church and to the dictates of his personal faith. It is a distinct pleasure to welcome him to Washington today to open the United States House of Representatives in prayer, one of the finer traditions of this institution in which we humbly seek divine guidance and wisdom for the difficult tasks before us.

JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, the pending business is the question of the Speaker's approval of the Journal of the last day's proceedings.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 363, nays 40, answered "present" 2, not voting 29, as follows:

☐ 1027

So the Journal was approved.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 378, this time has been designated for the taking of the official photo of the House of Representatives in session. The House will be in a brief recess while the Chamber is being prepared for the photo.

As soon as these preparations are complete, the House will immediately resume its actual session for the taking of the photograph. About 5 minutes after that, the House will proceed with the business of the House. One-minutes will be taken when the House reconvenes for business following the taking of the official photo.

For the information of the Members, when the Chair says, the House will be in order, we are ready to take our picture. That will be in just a few minutes.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess while the Chamber is being prepared.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 10 o'clock and 31 minutes a.m.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 10:45 a.m. today.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 34 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 10:45 a.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mrs. EMERSON) at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a.m.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CROWLEY. Madam Speaker, on Thursday, May 23, 2002, and Friday May 24, 2002, I was absent for several rollcall votes. Had I been here, I would like the RECORD to reflect that I would have voted "yes" on rollcall vote 199, "yes" on rollcall vote 200, "yes" on rollcall vote 201, "yes" on rollcall vote 202, "no" on rollcall vote 203, "no" on rollcall vote 204, "yes" on rollcall vote 205 and "yes" on rollcall vote 206.

FINISH INS REFORM LEGISLATION

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOLEY. Madam Speaker, in the last several days, there has been a lot of finger pointing and accusations about our agencies, the FBI and CIA. There is no question, we will do a thorough and complete review of what was known and what could have been done to thwart the terrorists on September 11. But the kind of cynical sniping at these fine agencies has to stop.

Our collective resolve against terrorism must remain united. We must stand beside our President and our leaders in order to extradite and remove these terrorists from our soil.

I strongly support major restructuring of the INS. We have passed a bill in this Chamber and sent it to the other end of the hall. That bill languishes on the Senate desk, and I urge the majority leader to start proceedings to hold a hearing or at least have a vote on that bill.

This past week in New York City, four Syrians arrested who had deportation orders against them, were released because they were not available to process them on Memorial Day. What a tragedy, that these criminals were in our country and were not sent back to their own native country. They had the orders. They should have been deported.

I urge the Senate to adopt the INS reform bill and do so urgently.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members that they should not urge the other body to take any actions.

PROVIDING CRITICAL INFORMATION TO PREVENT ABDUCTIONS

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Madam Speaker, I generally give my 1-minutes each day on the issue of missing children, whether it is to talk about Ludwig Koons, who has been abducted by his noncustodial mother to Italy, or whether it is talk about the Missing Children's Day, which we observed only a couple of weeks ago.

During that time, there was a survey that was done, it was done by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and ADVO, and it showed that many parents lack information critical to recovering children who have been abducted. The survey results show that many parents are missing opportunities to help prevent abductions.

Law enforcement tells us that information such as height, weight, eye color, and a recent photograph are critically important when searching for a child. However, the survey shows that 22 percent of parents do not know the height, weight, and eye color for all of their children; and in the event of an emergency, it is critical for parents to have readily available their child's accurate physical description and a recent photograph so that law enforcement can act immediately and effectively.

So, parents, take the time to get a good portrait ID-type photograph of each child, not just a low-quality snapshot. Parents need to take the responsibility of knowing about their children and being able and ready to respond in the event that something terrible happens such as that. Let us work to take care of our children.

DEATH TAX AND FARMERS

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Madam Speaker, in my district in Pennsylvania we have some of the most productive farmland in America. In fact, it is known as the "Garden Spot" of America. Many of these farms have been in the same family for generations. A few of them date back to William Penn.

But these farms are in trouble. Taxes on the land are simply too high. Part of the problem lies right here in Washington. The estate tax, what some of us like to call the "death tax," takes as much as 60 percent of the farm's value when it passes from one generation to the next. Many times families have to sell half of the farm just to pay the death tax. That is not right.

Last year we voted to repeal the death tax; but unless we vote to get rid of it permanently, it will come back in 10 years.

Let us vote to kill the death tax for good and help Pennsylvania's and America's family farmers and small businesses stay in business.

CREATING A MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUG BENEFIT

(Mr. GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Madam Speaker, I rise today to talk about the pressing need to create a prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

For almost a decade, Congress has been talking about a Medicare prescription drug benefit, and every time this issue comes up, excuses are made that it is just too expensive and we cannot afford it. Meanwhile, seniors are struggling every day to find ways to afford their life-saving medicines. They pay some of the highest prices in the world for their prescriptions; but because Medicare lacks a prescription drug benefit, 40 percent of the seniors pay for their prescriptions entirely out of pocket.

Last year, the Congressional Budget Office was projecting surpluses well into the next decade. We had the opportunity to do something about this. But instead of using the surpluses to create a Medicare drug benefit, we passed a bloated tax cut that eroded these surpluses and sent us back into an era of deficit spending.

This week we are going to take another vote to further extend these tax cuts. We have deficits as far as the eye can see, but the majority wants to dig that hole even deeper and pass tax cuts that will cost almost $1 trillion over 10 years and will benefit less than 2 percent of the American people. Yet we tell seniors we cannot afford a prescription drug benefit.

COMMENDING SUNSET OF OUR MEMORIES EXHIBIT

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, today I recognize the students of Sunset High School's Holocaust Studies class and their instructor, Mr. Irv Madnikoff. Their hard work and dedication in remembering the Holocaust through their class's exhibit "Sunset of Our Memories" should be commended.

This amazing class is one of its kind in Florida and has brought to our community this important presentation so that we can always remember the brave victims of the most deplorable time in the world's history. Over the past 3 years, 9,000 people have visited Sunset High School's interactive exhibit. One visitor commented that it was the best exhibit, next to the one in Washington, D.C., that he had ever seen.

I again want to express my sincere gratitude to Mr. Irv Madnikoff and his students at Miami's Sunset High School for taking an active role in keeping alive the memories of innocent Holocaust casualties.

CONDEMNING TERRORIST MURDERS IN ISRAEL

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Speaker, while America slept, another suicide bomber hit in Israel. Sixteen innocent people were killed, over 50 people were wounded, many of them critically. Our population is 50 times that of Israel. On a comparable scale, this would be like reading in our morning paper that 800 American citizens were massacred overnight, with some 2,500 wounded, many critically.

In his speech at West Point, the President clearly stated, "The only way to deal with terrorists is by preemptive action." We will have to do this wherever terrorists are planning to hit us, and the Israelis have to do it to protect their own citizens. This pattern of murder must come to an end.

ELIMINATING THE UNFAIR DEATH TAX

(Mr. REHBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REHBERG. Madam Speaker, 2 decades ago Ronald Reagan reminded America that government does not tax to get money it needs, but will always find a need for the money it gets.

The death tax is an unfair burden designed to punish families that work to leave a better future for the next generation, and it is a tax the government can do without. Despite the class warfare being waged by some in this Chamber, eliminating the estate tax is not a tax cut for the rich; it is a desperately needed reform to save thousands of family businesses, farms and homes.

Madam Speaker, death should not be a taxable event. I urge my colleagues to abandon the gains of class warfare and send the Grim Reaper home empty handed this year by eliminating the death tax.

PROVIDING A FAIR PRESCRIPTION DRUG PLAN FOR SENIORS

(Mr. STUPAK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STUPAK. Madam Speaker, the Bush administration wants to give seniors a prescription drug card that may save you 15 percent on your prescription drugs. "May save you."

Prescription drug charges are manipulated by the pharmaceutical companies. Take a look at this chart here in my district. When they bought their drugs with their card, they saved 12 cents. They advertised 30 to 40 percent savings, but actually saved 12 cents. When they came down here to buy their Combivent and their Diltiazem, if you take a look at it, with their card, they paid $81.43. The cash price was $47.49. There was no savings. The actual out-of-pocket increase was $33.94. The drug companies manipulate these prices with or without a card.

The Democrats have a real plan. We believe every senior should have a prescription drug plan covered underneath Medicare and lower prices of the prescription drugs that we all need and use. So I would urge this body to reject any of the other plans that provide a card which is manipulated by the pharmaceutical companies and actually costs us money.

CONGRATULATING THE U.S. MEN'S SOCCER TEAM

(Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALSH. Madam Speaker, early this morning while most Americans were sound asleep, about 1 billion people from all over the globe, myself included, watched a group of talented young American athletes do something truly remarkable.

Against all odds, the U.S. Men's Soccer Team defeated Portugal in the first game of the 2002 World Cup. The Portuguese were one of the favorites to win the World Cup outright, but our team prevailed 3 to 2. And it was no fluke. We took them apart in the first half with slashing attacks, and wore them down with tough defense in the second half. It was a balanced effort with everyone contributing under Coach Bruce Arena's guidance.

The win gave the U.S. the opportunity to move into the quarter finals, but they have more work to do. They play the host team Korea and then Poland, with the two best teams from the group moving on.

These young men have already exceeded expectations. They are off to the best start for any American team in history. Please tune in. Set the alarm clock for an early rise, brew some strong coffee and enjoy a great spectacle. They deserve our support.

SALUTING THE CITY OF CLEVELAND ON NEW SCHOOL

(Mrs. JONES of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Madam Speaker, this morning I rise to salute the city of Cleveland; the CEO of the Cleveland Municipal School District, Barbara Byrd-Bennett; former mayor, Michael White; current mayor, Jane Campbell, because yesterday we broke ground on the first brand new school in the city of Cleveland in more than 20 years, AJ Rickoff Elementary School.

It will not only be a school center, but it will also have a library, and hopefully opportunities for parents to train from CCC College or Kiowa Community College.

It is just a wonderful thing, after Issue 14 passed last year, that we were able to break ground on a new school. We anticipate that we will build more than 40 new schools in the city of Cleveland over the next 5 years. Here is for education, here is for the Cleveland Board of Education, the Cleveland School Board, and here is for the children of the city of Cleveland.

I am thankful for the opportunity to be supportive. Let us build more schools.

OPPOSING RESURRECTION OF THE DEATH TAX

(Mr. RYUN of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak out against resurrecting the death tax. This tax allows the Federal Government to take up to 55 percent of the assets of an individual or small business when the owner dies, and this simply is not fair. These people have already paid taxes on everything they own. The death tax is simply a double taxation at the rate of nearly 50 percent higher than the highest income tax.

Countless farmers and small business owners in Kansas have urged me to do all I can to end this unfair tax. Who can blame them for wanting to leave their hard-earned businesses to their children?

I am proud that last year we voted to phase out the death tax, but this will become a hollow victory if a Senate provision allowing the death tax to be resurrected at the end of 7 years is allowed to stand. I am forced to tell my farmers and small businessmen that the death tax will not affect them, but only if they die in the year 2010.

Death should not be a taxable event. Let us finish what we started and kill the death tax once and for all.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

(Mr. RODRIGUEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Madam Speaker, today I rise once again to ask for us to look at the prescription drug plan that would provide our seniors with immediate relief. As prices continue to soar out of control, our seniors struggle on fixed incomes. They struggle to pay for their blood pressure prescriptions, they struggle to pay for their anti-inflammatory medication that costs over $1,800 a year.

Our seniors deserve better. They deserve to live their lives in dignity and without anxiety over whether they can eat or pay for their medication, or whether they can turn their heaters on or their air conditioners on. It is with great frustration that I continue to ask the Republicans to do the right thing, but they continue to push a limited plan that will not work. It will leave too many seniors behind.

Madam Speaker, it is time for us to bring a real prescription drug plan to the floor, one that is voluntary, one that is universal, one where every senior would have access, no matter where they live or what they do. Let us do the right thing and respond to our seniors.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE U.S. SOCCER TEAM

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, I would like to join my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH), in extending congratulations to the U.S. Soccer Team.

Clearly, the greatest upset of the World Cup tournament has been this win of the U.S. team over Portugal. Coach Arena was extraordinarily bold in putting two great 20-year-olds in to ensure that they would have the chance to play a role in leading this team to victory.

Landon Donovan and DaMarcus Beasley are two new players who are obviously fighting very, very hard on behalf of the United States. As we head into the quarter finals, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH) said, there are a billion people around the world who are following the World Cup, and I hope very much that more Americans are among them as we see a spectacular U.S. victory.

(Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Madam Speaker, on June 3 People Magazine featured two young women. I come before this House again today to alert those who may be watching in Oregon and across the Nation to the tragic plight of two young teenagers from my district.

Miranda Gaddis and Ashley Pond, both 13 years of age, students at Gardiner Middle School in Oregon City and teammates on the school dance team, have been missing now for almost 3 months and 5 months. Ashley disappeared January 9; Miranda, March 8. Oregon City was shocked by the abduction of Ashley in January, and paid extra attention to keeping their children safe. Two months later and with their guard still up, the unthinkable happened and Miranda disappeared.

Both Ashley and Miranda were last seen by their mothers early in the morning as they left their homes at the Newell Village Creek apartments to catch the school bus. The FBI has confirmed that the disappearances appear to be related and that foul play is likely to be involved.

If Members have any information regarding Ashley or Miranda's whereabouts, I ask them to please contact their local FBI office. Let us not forget about our children. Let us not give up hope about our missing children.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE

(Mr. BACA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BACA. Madam Speaker, I stand in support of a comprehensive prescription drug plan. We need to do something for our seniors. Seniors are the ones that made our country great, and too often we forget their contribution and what they have done.

We have a responsibility. Today many of them are faced with a crisis, and I say with a crisis, because now they have to pay an abundance of dollars on a fixed income. It becomes so difficult for our seniors to put food on the table when they have to decide what to do: "Do I pay for medication that will relieve the pain and agony that I have?"

Some of these seniors have 15 to 30 prescription drugs that they have to pay for. It is too high. It has gotten ridiculous. This is not about profit, this is about taking care of the American people. This is about taking care of our seniors. We need to make sure that we come up with a comprehensive medical plan that covers them. We owe it to our seniors and we owe it to Americans, we owe it to this country.

I say, let us get behind a good, comprehensive plan that covers our seniors. They have suffered enough. Let us help them.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1372, EXPORT-IMPORT BANK REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 433 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 433

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (S. 1372) to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank of the United States. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for purposes of debate only.

Madam Speaker, yesterday the Committee on Rules met and granted a normal conference report rule for the Senate bill, S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2002. The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration.

In addition, the rule provides for 1 hour of debate, equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Financial Services.

Madam Speaker, this should not be a controversial rule. It is the type of rule we grant every time for every conference report we consider in this House. The conference report itself is a strong step forward to help American manufacturers, American workers, and the American economy.

Madam Speaker, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2002 reauthorizes the bank for 4 years. The Ex-Im Bank plays a key role of promoting U.S. exports overseas and levelling the playing field of international trade, which is especially important to my area in North Carolina. The bank is an important tool for American manufacturers, enabling them to reach markets in which they would otherwise be closed out.

By reauthorizing the Ex-Im Bank, we demonstrate our commitment to promoting U.S. goods throughout the world and the U.S. economy at home. It has important provisions that encourage small business transactions by increasing the small business mandate for Ex-Im from the current statutory minimum of 10 percent to a minimum of 20 percent of total Ex-Im financing, and that will help small business. It gives them a bigger share of the pie.

It also requires Ex-Im to conduct outreach and increase loans to socially-disadvantaged individuals, our women, and to businesses which employ fewer than 100 employees; again, a big help, especially when so many corporations and small businesses in our country are starting to do more export.

That is especially true in my area. We have a lot of small businesses that are exporting in the last couple of years North Carolina products that had never done that before, so we are always looking for ways to encourage that.

S. 1372 also contains strong provisions relating to the U.S. trade laws that will ensure Ex-Im does not contribute to the overcapacity or dumping of goods on U.S. markets. Again, that is an area that we have had a lot of problems with, with steel and with textiles, which is very, very important in my area of North Carolina, in South Carolina, and some of the other southern States.

Finally, I am pleased that this legislation requires that the bank, when considering whether to guarantee, ensure, or extend credit, will take into account the extent to which a nation has been helpful or not in efforts to eradicate terrorism. We must stop the flow of money from going to countries which support terrorism, and specifically those identified by the President as comprising the axis of evil.

To that end, I urge my colleagues to support this rule and to support the commonsense legislation it underlies.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased this conference report is on the floor today. It has strong bipartisan support, and I expect that it will pass overwhelmingly.

Since 1934, the Export-Import Bank has played a vital role in creating and sustaining millions of high-paying American jobs by supporting more than $400 billion in U.S. exports. As American business and jobs have become more dependent on trade over the years, the importance of the Ex-Im Bank has only increased.

In today's world of global trade, the Export-Import Bank serves as an indispensable lender of last resort, filling financial gaps that would otherwise hurt many American businesses and their employees. Perhaps most importantly, the bank levels the playing field for many U.S. companies, allowing them to compete with foreign companies that have significant support from their own governments.

But Ex-Im Bank financing does more than support jobs at exporting companies. It helps sustain and create jobs at tens of thousands of U.S. suppliers around the country who participate indirectly in Export-Import Bank-financed exports. These indirect exporters, many of which are small businesses, supply components, services, and technology to U.S. exporters of a wide range of products and services as diverse as environmental technology, construction and agricultural equipment, amusement park rides, aircraft, furniture, and computer and telecommunications technology.

Export-Import Bank financing has a ripple effect. It sustains jobs at companies large and small throughout the U.S. economy in almost every State and the great majority of congressional districts. Moreover, the bank makes good, sound investments for America. In fiscal year 2000, for example, the Ex-Im Bank used $759 million as leverage to support more than $15.5 billion in U.S. exporters. That has a tremendous bang for the buck.

In my north Texas district, where tens of thousands of jobs are directly dependent on exporting quality American products, we have seen firsthand just how important the Ex-Im Bank is to America's economy. For all these reasons, I am pleased that this conference report reauthorizes the bank for 5 years. That will provide U.S. companies and their workers with the certainty they need.

I urge the passage of this rule and of the underlying conference report.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO).

Mr. MANZULLO. Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the conferees, particularly my subcommittee chairman and friend, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), for coming up with a good bill that will support our Nation's small manufacturing exporters.

Ex-Im is one of the few government programs that actually serves small businesses. Last year, 90 percent of Ex-Im's transactions and 18 percent of the dollar volume went to small exporters. As chairman of the Committee on Small Business, I am proud of what the conferees have done to further enhance exports from small firms. Many of our markets are saturated in this country. Ninety-six percent of the world's consumers live outside the U.S. This conference report recognizes this reality by helping provide small business exporters access to these tough but critical markets.

The conference report agreed with the House to double Ex-Im's set-aside for small businesses from 10 percent to 20 percent. This conference report directs more of Ex-Im's resources to small business outreach, including the very small businesses, those employing 100 workers or less, and women and minority-owned firms.

Finally, this conference report focuses on the importance of technology for small businesses, and directs Ex-Im to put out more of its applications process online and track its documents electronically to speed up its work.

This 5-year reauthorization bill is one piece of the puzzle to help manufacturers in the district I am proud to represent recover from the economic downturn. We are suffering immensely with an unemployment rate higher than the national average. Manufacturing has lost over 2 million jobs in the past 3 years, and northern Illinois has not been immune.

Compounding an already weak economy is the high value of the American dollar, stiff foreign competition, high prices for steel, and tightening of credit, particularly for export finance. This conference report provides one tool to help offset the effect of the difficulty of obtaining trade finance for small business exporters.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report. It will help ensure that quality and price, not the lack of adequate export financing, is the key for a small business exporter to win a sale abroad.

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, I rise in very strong opposition to the Export-Import Bank, and I do that as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade.

Madam Speaker, there is growing anger and frustration in this country at the increasing greed and illegal activities in corporate America. The American people are sick and tired of CEO salaries in the tens of millions of dollars, in the hundreds of millions of dollars that are now on average 500 times greater than what the average American worker receives. The American people and workers are sick and tired of CEOs slashing pension programs and health benefits for their retirees while corporate profits are soaring. The workers of this country are sick and tired of corporate America shutting down American plants, throwing American workers out of the street and taking our jobs to China, to Mexico where desperate people are forced to work for 20 cents an hour.

The American people are sick and tired of accounting gimmicks that cheat investors and employees. They are tired of CEOs setting up phony post office box companies in Bermuda so while the middle class pays more and more in taxes, CEOs and their corporations avoid their responsibilities in terms of taxes. And basically the American people are tired of corporate welfare. We are going to hear a whole lot in this body about making poor people responsible when it comes to corporate welfare. What about the CEOs and the major multinational corporations who get tens and tens of billions of dollars from the working families of this country? Some of my colleagues are going to tell us Export-Import Bank creates jobs, it does some good. Sure, it does. We give them a billion dollars a year, and we put at risk through loan guarantees some $15 billion a year; and if one sat out on a street corner and one gave away a billion dollars a year, he would also do some good.

But the issue is are we getting value for the amount of money that we are spending, and the answer is obviously no. Madam Speaker, the outrage of the Export-Import Bank is that we are giving billions of dollars to the major job cutters in America. Yes, that is true. The largest corporations who come into Export-Import to get their corporate welfare laugh all the way to the bank because these are precisely the people who lay off American workers and then say, thank you, workers, for subsidizing our efforts.

Let us look at these desperate companies that are getting the corporate welfare from Export-Import. It is Boeing, General Electric, Caterpillar, Mobil Oil, certainly in need of taxpayer support, Westinghouse, AT&T, Motorola, Lucent Technologies, IBM, Enron. Enron getting helped from Export-Import. The irony here is that not only should the taxpayers of this country not be supporting profitable multinational corporations but the irony is we give them money and they say thanks, we are moving to China, we are moving to Mexico. General Electric, a major recipient of export import, we give them a lot of money. What is the result? From 1975 to 1995, GE reduced its workforce from 667,000 American workers to 398,000. Boeing, the same thing, huge job layoffs.

Jack Welch, interestingly enough, the former CEO of GE, when he gets on the welfare line he said, "Ideally what you would have is to put every company on a barge." In other words, what he says is thank you for the money; but we are going to go anyplace in the world where we can get cheap labor.

In addition to its being corporate welfare, in addition to our, through Ex-Im, giving money to companies who have contempt for American workers, what also must be understood is that Export-Import is part of a failed trade policy. The United States trade deficit was $346 billion in 2001, and the trade deficit in goods was $426 billion. Let us wake up and understand that the permanent normalized trade relations with China is a failure. Yes, we gained some export jobs; but we are losing far, far more in terms of jobs being lost because companies have taken our jobs to China.

Over the past 4 years we have lost a total of 2 million factory jobs, representing 10 percent of our manufacturing workforce.

So the point here is Export-Import is part and parcel of a failed trade policy. Whether it is the most favored nation status with China, permanent normalized trade relations with China, NAFTA, that policy is failing. And it is time that we say we cannot continue to hemorrhage American jobs. Let me repeat. Under this great trade policy which Republican leaders talk about, some Democratic leaders talk about, corporate America and editorial boards say it is great; if it is so great, why between 1994 and 2000 have more than 3 million decent-paying manufacturing jobs been lost?

In 2001, the manufacturing sector lost 1.3 million jobs. In my own State of Vermont, a small rural State, small plant after small plant after small plant is closing down because they cannot compete against imports coming in from China where workers are being paid 20 or 25 cents an hour. And it is time that this body finally said enough is enough. Yes, we get millions and millions of dollars from corporate America for our campaigns; yes, that is great that they come to $25,000-a-plate fund-raising dinners. But what about the workers in rural Vermont, in California, in Illinois, in Ohio, who have lost their jobs? Maybe somebody should stand up for them. What about the high school graduates who used to be able to go out in the workforce and get a manufacturing job and make a living wage who today flip hamburgers at Burger King or McDonald's. Maybe they need a decent job even if they cannot contribute huge sums of money to this institution in terms of campaign contributions.

Our trade policy is a failure. Ex-Im is part of that trade policy. Let us defeat it for that reason. Let us end corporate welfare. Where are all of my conservative friends who want a balanced budget? Do you really want to give a billion dollars a year to some of the largest, most profitable corporations in America?

There are many reasons to defeat Ex-Im, but it is time that we stood up for the American taxpayer. It is time we stood up for the American worker. And it is time we told corporate America get off the welfare train. Start respecting American workers. Start respecting the United States of America. Do not sell our country out. Do not sell our workers out. Let us defeat Ex-Im.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). He is the chair of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade of the Committee on Financial Services.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, this Member rises today in support of H. Res. 433, the rule under which the conference report of the Export-Import Bank or Ex-Im Bank Reauthorization Act of 2001, S. 1372, will be considered.

As is customary for conference reports under this privileged rule, there will be an hour of debate divided between the majority and minority with no amendments being made in order, of course.

As the chairman of the House Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade of the Committee on Financial Services, which has jurisdiction over this effort, the Member, of course, has a special interest in the Ex-Im Bank legislation. And, therefore, this Member would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the chairman of the House Committee on Rules; the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), the ranking member of the House Committee on Rules; and the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK), who is managing the time on our side of the aisle, for their efforts in bringing this rule before the House floor. In addition, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the chairman of the House Committee on Financial Services, for his leadership on the Ex-Im issues, and the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the ranking member of the House Committee on Financial Services, and the distinguished gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), who he and I worked together on this legislation in compatible fashion, for their efforts on the reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank.

In contrast to what we have just heard, this is legislation which actually creates jobs in America, a great number of jobs.

The Ex-Im Bank is an independent U.S. Government agency that creates and sustains American jobs by providing direct loans to buyers of U.S. exports, guarantees to commercial loans to buyers of U.S. products and insurance products which greatly benefit short-term small business sales. So we are talking about American exports going abroad, things that are produced here by our American workers or farmers.

The Ex-Im Bank finances exports such as civilian aircraft, electronics, engineering services, vehicles, agricultural products; and the list is just as broad as you can possibly imagine.

To illustrate the importance of the Ex-Im Bank, in fiscal year 2000 the bank supported over $15.5 billion in U.S. exports through an appropriation of $759 million. It is important, however, to remember that the loans and loan guarantees that the bank issues, the transactions, are risk-based costs and insurance fees, so no Export-Import Bank is charging for the money loaned or loans guaranteed. And in almost every year in its 60-year existence, Ex-Im has produced a net profit for the Treasury over the appropriations given. Last year that net profit was over $1 billion.

Madam Speaker, in the past 60 years, the Ex-Im Bank has supported more than $300 billion in U.S. exports. Of course the Export-Import Bank is only intended to be a lender of last resort and not intended to compete with private lenders. Therefore, only about 2 percent of our exports use Ex-Im Bank transactions. For example, the Ex-Im Bank supports U.S. exporters in risky markets, and private financial institutions sometimes are unwilling or unable to do that. Yet the net default rate is less than 2 percent.

In fact, over the last 20 years, the Ex-Im Bank has an average loan default rate, as I said, of less than 2 percent of its total authorization. This bank was last reauthorized in 1997 for a 4-year period that initially expired on September 30. By extension, it will now expire on June 14 of this year. And the legislation which will be brought to this floor under the rule will be for a 5-year reauthorization.

When drafting the Export-Import Bank, the Member utilized the suggestions and recommendations of the distinguished chairman of the full committee and the ranking members of the committee and subcommittee and those of other members of the committee. We had a very democratic process in the subcommittee which extended into the committee deliberations. And many items in this important reform legislation, in many respects, came from the Members on both sides of the aisle.

Madam Speaker, on May 1, we passed this House legislation by voice vote; but we are now at the point where we are prepared to take up the conference report. After a conference of only about 4½ hours, we reached numerous important decisions to bring the Congress this conference report. Importantly, we also clarified and resolved the dispute between the Export-Import Bank and the Treasury Department. I have every indication that the President will sign this legislation, and I thank the Committee on Rules and the House leadership for bringing this important legislation to the floor today.

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY).

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Madam Speaker, foreign trade has long been a critical component of our economy. So long, in fact, that it predates the founding of our Nation. And despite the ups and downs of the local global market, there is absolutely no doubt that the American economy is dependent on trade. Yes, we import far more goods than any other nation; and, yes, we have a trade deficit. I do not like it. No one likes it. But the only way to remedy it is to enhance our export sector. But when we examine the trade deficit, let us remember that we already export more goods and services than any other nation.

Those exports represent 10 percent of the United States' GDP; and they support 12 million jobs, including one in five manufacturing jobs. They are not all huge multinational conglomerates like a General Motors. The overwhelming majority, 97 percent, are small- and medium-sized businesses. In Oregon, these businesses and family farms are the backbone of our economy. They provide good paying and rewarding jobs, and it is my goal to make sure that there are a lot more of them.

If there is a company that wants to sell its goods to a new market, particularly one that poses some degree of risk as well as profitability, then all too often the only financing for them is from the Export-Import Bank.

Furthermore, Ex-Im financing does more than support jobs at exporting companies. It creates an enormous ripple effect in the supply chain.

For many companies that export, tens of thousands of U.S. suppliers around the country are indirect exporters, many of which are small businesses, supply component services and technology providers.

Madam Speaker, the evidence is clear. Overseas sales are no longer optional for most U.S. companies. To compete and succeed, they must play on a global stage, and Ex-Im Bank can provide the U.S. companies with the financing tools they need to accomplish this.

While not perfect, it is the best tool for the job at hand, and I ask my colleagues to support the conference agreement.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me the time. I thank the proponents of this legislation and those who have brought this compromise or conference report to the floor, I thank them for their work.

Madam Speaker, the business of America is creating jobs and it is business, and frankly I think it is realistic to understand the global markets that we now live in. When we think of countries like Germany and France and England, there is a large proponent or a large part of their economic framework that is supported by the government, companies owned by the particular nation, giving them the upper hand. That is the global market or the global business world of which many of our companies compete with.

Although I may have some concerns about the whole issue of trade without regulation, I believe the Export-Import Bank is a good balance because what it does is it gives an even playing field or maybe even a leg up, a reasonable leg up to the businesses of America who are trying to compete internationally, competing against the major discounts and the major waivers that are given to corporations owned by the particular country of which they have to compete with.

I am very glad that in this legislation we have the tied aid credit fund which then requires those donor countries who are receiving benefit from the Export-Import Bank to buy resources from the United States. That creates jobs.

I am also pleased how this impacts our agricultural community, giving them the opportunity to have a two-way street.

The Advisory Committee for Sub-Sahara Africa, having been a supporter of the African Growth and Opportunity Act, and listening now to ambassadors from Africa and presidents from Africa, in the sub-Sahara continent they are saying that it is working, but they are also looking for added enhancement, and this advisory committee should get busy by creating opportunities for businesses in the United States to do more business in sub-Sahara Africa. This will generate these countries from being dependent to independent, along with, of course, the balance of debt relief which I so strongly support.

We also are very pleased that there is an anti-dumping order in this legislation; that the legislation includes issues on human rights, anti-terrorism, renewable energy and, of course, anti-fraud and corruption. That is key because we have seen over the last couple of months and the last year a falling from grace of many of our corporations that have not been following the rule of law or the ethics of which we would expect for them to do.

This should not be a wasteful legislative initiative. This should not be where we are taken advantage, but it should open the doors of opportunity.

My last point, however, Madam Speaker, is my concern. Yes, it is good that we move from 10 percent to 20 percent in assisting small businesses, but I believe we should move to 30 and 40 percent. Small businesses are the backbone of America. I would like to see them engage in international activities and trade and business. They can do so with the Export-Import Bank at a higher percentage of participation for them.

I would encourage my colleagues respectfully to consider that, and finally, Madam Speaker, I would simply say we must create businesses and lessen corruption. We can do that by supporting international businesses and jobs in America with supporting this legislation.

Madam Speaker, the Export-Import Bank has a very specific mission related to the promotion of American exports. This mission is to create and sustain American jobs by helping to finance American exports that would otherwise not be available in over 150 countries.

The Bank is required to not compete with the private sector, but rather steps in where commercial bank financing is insufficient or unavailable. They support exports that, due to the absence of competitive financing, otherwise would not take place—meaning loss of a sale and an impact on American jobs.

The Ex-Im Bank operates in a very competitive international environment, in which export credit agencies in other countries are increasingly aggressive in supporting the exports of our competitors. The Bank is critical in countering these transactions, by providing leverage for the U.S. to negotiate a gradual reduction in export subsidy activities among OECD members.

In a word, absent the Export-Import Bank, American exporters would find themselves competing against foreign exporters who receive government subsidies. Consequently, with the loss of key export markets, American exporters would lose export-oriented jobs. These jobs pay 18% more on average than non-export jobs.

The Ex-Im Bank does more than just provide a level playing field for American exports. The Bank has the charge of providing critical export financing in cases where there is a market failure in private lending. Frequently, these failures relate to the nature of the exporter. For example, small businesses often face problems attaining private credit for export transactions. For this, the Ex-Im Bank has been a critical source of support for small business exporters nationwide.

The Export-Import Bank does not exist to promote exports by subsidizing American companies who are engaged in fair and open practices for business. The Ex-Im Bank does exist to defend American companies engaged in non-competitive markets. Therefore, the Bank's ultimate goal is to discourage these non-competitive practices.

In fiscal year 2001, the Ex-Im Bank supported $12.5 billion of American exports to emerging markets around the world, enabling many American companies to maintain and even expand their workforces. And 90 percent of the total number of Ex-Im Bank-supported transactions in fiscal year 2001 were in direct support of small business. Ex-Im Bank financing has a ripple effect that sustains jobs at companies large and small throughout the American economy, in almost every state and the great majority of congressional districts.

Ex-Im Bank steps in where the competition is toughest for American exporters, where they must compete to win export sales against foreign companies backed by their government's official export credit agencies.

Market failures are related to the nature and location of the export market. Markets in Sub-Saharan Africa and elsewhere in the developing world are frequently overlooked by private export credit. Ex-Im goes where private lenders are unwilling to go, to the ultimate benefit of these developing countries, the United States, and the global economy.

Ex-Im's charge to go into under-served markets is particularly relevant today, when economic engagement with other countries is an essential element of foreign policy and national security. In the months since last September, we have had to move very quickly to determine how best to reach out to countries and people who were previously of too little interest to the United States and other wealthy countries. Certainly, much has been achieved already in the war on terrorism by high-level engagement between the Bush Administration and foreign leaders. But top-level diplomacy will ultimately fail if it is not supported by bottom-up engagement in the political, social and economic spheres.

Here is where institutions like the Ex-Im Bank have a critical role to play. With each export transaction supported by the Bank, we have made a new connection and developed a new familiarity with a market, a people, and a country that had previously been slightly more foreign to us. With thousands of these transactions, we take a thousand steps forward toward a world of interdependence and prosperity—in short, a world in which terrorism finds it hard to exist.

S. 1372 emphasizes the need to expand outreach to small businesses. There are barriers to the Ex-Im Bank assistance for small business. Technology enhancements are critical to any meaningful effort to expand services for small businesses. However, for small businesses, working with the Ex-Im Bank may be a daunting prospect. This legislation can go a long way toward bringing in new small businesses and serving them better by expanding the use of technology throughout the transaction process. As a result, the legislation expands the budget authority for technology upgrades and provides guidance to the Ex-Im Bank on the implementation of new technologies.

The Ex-Im Bank has supported $1 billion in American exports to sub-Saharan Africa during the last two years, covering products and services ranging from bread-making equipment and agricultural machinery to commercial aircraft and construction equipment.

In 2001, the Ex-Im Bank expanded its Sub-Saharan Africa pilot program to 16 countries in the region, allowing the Bank to support exports to certain markets in which the Bank would not otherwise be open for business. The program provides short-term insurance coverage to help businesses in the region buy American goods such as spare parts, raw materials, and agricultural commodities.

The Ex-Im Bank is working hard with African banks such as the PTA Bank in Nairobi and African regional development banks such as the ECOWAS Fund in Togo, pursuing agreements and partnerships to encourage these financial institutions to lend to customers purchasing American goods and services.

There is probably no market in the world where the Ex-Im Bank has worked harder during the last two years than Nigeria. The Bank has financed exports ranging from solar-powered billboards and printing equipment to cement bagging equipment, a metal frame warehouse and dredging equipment for the Port of Lagos.

By providing guarantees for South African rand and CFA franc-denominated loans, the Ex-Im Bank has made it easier for American exporters to sell their products to Southern and West Africa.

As we require the Ex-Im Bank to expand its assistance and outreach to small businesses in developing societies, we should provide more, not less, funding for the administrative expenses that will come with this effort.

I support this bill and urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time, and I want to compliment the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) for her statement. She has described some of the very important new reforms in the legislation, and I would just say to the gentlewoman that I, too, and the whole subcommittee and committee and the conferees of both Houses would like to see more small business involvement in the Ex-Im Bank.

I would say this. Over half the transactions of the Export-Import Bank do involve small business. We would like to see more than 18 percent of total resources going to small business, and that is why we are pushing them a little higher to a figure of 20 percent.

We started out, at the gentleman from Vermont's (Mr. SANDERS) initiative, aiming for an even higher level. I would like to see that at a higher level, but over half the transactions do involve small businesses.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his work and I appreciate that.

Whenever I have gone into the district, as my colleague well knows, all of us probably have a higher percentage of small businesses in our respective communities than maybe our large corporations, so we appreciate them both, and I have always sought to encourage them to see the world in a larger viewpoint. I think these kinds of very valuable resources should help them.

I am glad to know that a large percentage are participating, and I hope that as we work through that increase, 20 percent can go up higher as well, and I thank the gentleman very much for his leadership.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her comments.

One more thing I might say. We found that the technology in the office of the Export-Import Bank was very obsolete. They recognized that fact but they have not spent enough money to improve it. If we make that situation better, small business is going to have better access to the Bank. Currently small businesses do not have the capacity to work the Ex-Im Bank process as easily as some of the larger firms. So we think by mandating improvement in this area, setting aside a separate budget category for updating the technology in the office, the Ex-Im Bank will be more accessible to small business. That, too, I think is an advance.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I would simply say, as my colleague well knows, the vice chair of the Export-Import Bank is Eduardo Aguirre who hails from Texas and knows that he has a balancing concern about small businesses. I applaud the technology issue, and I would encourage, I do not know how many times they have done this, I would encourage the Export-Import Bank to get out on the road as well, do a little bit more of that and do some educational outreach to our small business community around the Nation.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, that is good advice, and I thank the gentlewoman for her comments.

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, we have no further requests for time. I urge adoption of the rule, and I yield back the balance of our time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 433, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1372) to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. EMERSON). Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) each will control 30 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, under clause 8 of rule XXII, I seek to control one-third of the time in opposition to the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) favor the conference report?

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Speaker, I favor the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the time will be divided three ways. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) and the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) each will control 20 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to urge passage of the conference report to accompany S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2002. This is a sound piece of legislation that will help U.S. exporters reach markets overseas, will maintain U.S. manufacturing jobs and will help the economy grow.

We have worked in a bipartisan manner throughout this process, and the House measure passed the Committee on Financial Services by voice vote and also passed on the floor of the House on May 1 by a voice vote, also. It is important to note that this support carried through to the conference report which was signed by every conferee, save one.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade of the Committee on Financial Services, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER); the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the ranking member of the Committee on Financial Services; the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY), my esteemed colleague; and the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. GARY G. MILLER) for their hard work on the conference committee. Without the dedication and hard work of these Members, this reauthorization would not have reached the floor today.

Madam Speaker, our manufacturers face stiff competition from foreign companies seeking to expand the sale of their goods overseas. There is little argument that goods made in the U.S. are the highest quality and are in great demand. However, foreign companies receive significant assistance from their export credit agencies in finding markets and negotiating prices for their goods.

Without the Ex-Im Bank, U.S. exporters would be forced to compete in this international marketplace with one hand tied behind their backs. Ex-Im levels the playing field of international trade by allowing U.S. companies to compete on the quality of their products.

In a perfect world, we would not need export credit agencies, and the free market would operate without distortions. Because foreign manufacturers receive aid through export credit agencies, the United States must have a strong Ex-Im Bank in order to fight fire with fire.

Currently, some 70 governments around the world have export credit agencies like Ex-Im providing more than $500 billion a year in government-backed financing. Madam Speaker, as long as foreign governments are financing export credit agencies, we must support Ex-Im to ensure that our manufacturers and workers remain competitive in the global marketplace.

This conference report is about U.S. jobs. Without the Ex-Im Bank, many companies would lose bids to supply U.S. manufactured goods overseas or would simply move their production operation to other countries where they could receive export credit financing.

In testimony before the Committee on Financial Services last year, the president of a division of Case New Holland, Richard Christman, stated that when the company was deciding whether to construct a combine assembly plant in the U.S. or in Brazil, one of the primary factors they took into consideration was whether export credit financing would be available to sell their goods overseas. Because there was the possibility of Ex-Im Bank financing for the goods produced in the plant in the United States, Case decided to build their plants in the U.S.

This one decision created hundreds of jobs in our country and ensured that suppliers and other businesses affected by the operation of a major assembly plant would continue to benefit as a result of the Ex-Im Bank. These are real jobs and real exports that directly affect our economy.

Critics of Ex-Im claim that it is corporate welfare for the largest companies in the United States. That charge is simply not accurate for several reasons. First, approximately 90 percent of Ex-Im's transactions are with small businesses. Those businesses rely on Ex-Im to help them access overseas markets that they would otherwise not be able to reach. This conference report seeks to continue to increase the exposure of small businesses to Ex-Im Bank products by doubling the minimum dollar value of small business financing that the bank must pursue.

Second, while many of Ex-Im Bank's higher dollar transactions do go to larger companies, we should remember that those large companies utilize supplies from many small- and medium-sized businesses in order to create those products.

Third, Ex-Im serves as the lender of last resort for U.S. exports when commercial financing is not available for export sales. Without the Ex-Im Bank supplying this kind of high risk financing, many sales would not be made, and many U.S. workers would be without jobs.

Finally, let me make it clear that Ex-Im financing is not free. Ex-Im charges interest on its direct loans and premiums for its guarantees and insurance costs that the U.S. exporter usually passes through to its overseas customer. From the exporter's and customer's point of view, the bank does not subsidize the cost of financing an export transaction. Ex-Im is no less expensive to use than a commercial bank or other financial intermediary.

The opponents of this conference report have been trying to paint this as a giveaway for U.S. corporations, and it is most certainly not. This conference report goes a long way to protect workers, to encourage more small business transactions, to aid the environment and to protect human rights. I encourage my colleagues who may instinctively be opposed to this measure to take a good hard look at this conference report, think about how it will benefit U.S. business and the economy, and then support it.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am pleased to rise in support of the conference report authorizing the Export-Import Bank through 2006. I want to commend the full committee chairman, my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), most especially the chairman of the relevant subcommittee, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), who has worked on these issues so arduously over the years, but also very especially my friend, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), for his diligence in focusing attention on workers' issues and the role that the bank should play in job creation. Especially as a result of his efforts, this legislation clearly establishes that the bank's objective in all of its transactions shall be to contribute to maintaining or increasing the employment of workers in the United States.

The conference report contains many strong provisions, and I would like to highlight just a few. The legislation doubles the share of small business transactions that must be undertaken by the bank. It also emphasizes outreach to women and minority-owned businesses as well as businesses employing 100 or fewer workers. The bank will be required to report on progress toward increasing transactions and expanding outreach in each of these areas on an annual basis.

With the active participation of members of the steel caucus, we were able to strengthen language that prohibits Ex-Im transactions in areas where there has been a violation of our trade laws. The language also raises the bar for consideration of transactions when preliminary determinations of economic injury have been made. As a whole, this language will ensure that Ex-Im does not support projects, steel-related or otherwise, that would contribute to the oversupply of a good in a way that would cause harm to our domestic economy.

The legislation also establishes new requirements and guidelines on renewable energy, human rights and efforts to combat terrorism, fraud and corruption in foreign markets. I would like to recognize a handful of Democratic Members for the role they played in helping to craft many of these provisions: the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) for their work on the fraud and corruption provisions; the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) for her efforts on outreach to women and minority-owned businesses; the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) for his efforts on antiterrorism measures; and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) for her work on improving human rights assessments in Ex-Im transactions.

In sum, though it is long overdue, this is a strong reauthorization bill that benefited from substantial input from Democratic Members, and I believe it will enable the Ex-Im Bank to fulfill its mission in the years ahead.

Finally, let me respond directly to the charges of corporate welfare that are often leveled against the Ex-Im Bank. First, it is a simple fact that each export transaction supported by the bank either supports existing American jobs or creates new American jobs. Absent Ex-Im support, thousands of export transactions would go unfunded each year, transactions involving big companies and small businesses, as well as those involving large export markets, like Mexico, and small export markets like that of Namibia.

As much as we hear about Ex-Im support for very large companies, the fact is that fully 90 percent of the bank's transactions last year directly supported small businesses and, as a result, helped to support thousands of small businesses and their workers in communities both urban and rural across the entire United States.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Our current trade policy is an absolute disaster. Export-Import Bank is an inherent part of that disastrous trade policy. The gentleman I am going to ask to speak in a moment comes from the State of Ohio, as does the chairman of the full committee, and they should know that between 1994 and 2000, under our disastrous trade policy, in Ohio alone 135,000 jobs were lost because of our disastrous trade policy.

Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), who has been a strong fighter for the working people of his State and his country.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Vermont for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the conference report.

Madam Speaker, when the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act was considered on the House floor on May 1, I offered an amendment that requires this bank to have applicants for financing disclose whether they have been found to have violated the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Critically, the amendment also requires Ex-Im to maintain its own list of entities that have violated this act.

Under my amendment, I stated on the floor of the House that Ex-Im would request that applicants report whether or not they have been found guilty by a U.S. court to have been in violation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Ex-Im would also independently keep a list of companies that have violated the act.

This independent list is crucial in order to deter applicants from withholding information about prior violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Now, upon offering this amendment, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade of the Committee on Financial Services expressed his support for the measure. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 1, 2002, his words were, and I quote, "The gentleman's amendment, I think, is highly appropriate. This kind of information should be made available and, in fact, generated, if necessary, within the Export-Import Bank."

Clearly, then, the distinguished chairman understood the intent of my amendment, information on Foreign Corrupt Practice Act violators would be gathered both by requiring applicants to disclose prior violations and by requiring the Export-Import Bank itself to independently and internally compile a list of violators.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, the report has come out of the House-Senate conference on this bill, and it thoroughly guts this critical provision. Rather than require the Ex-Im Bank to independently search court records and compile a list of FCPA violators, the report only requires the bank to maintain a record of all applicants that have volunteered information on their Foreign Corrupt Practices Act history. Moreover, an applicant for Ex-Im financing only need disclose the violations that have occurred in the prior 12 months.

Consider what this means. The only way the Export-Import Bank can find out whether an applicant has violated the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act is if the company volunteers this information. And if the violation occurred more than a year before a company seeks Ex-Im funding, the company does not even have to mention it. So if a company lies about prior violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, if they lie about it, the Export-Import Bank would never know it.

Madam Speaker, the Enron debacle should make it clear to all of us that certain corporations will do absolutely anything to increase their profits. So what is the net result of the amendment that I offered and that the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade supported on May 1? Nothing.

I urge my colleagues to take a stand against allowing the Enrons of the world to continue to bilk the American taxpayer for enormous sums of money; and perhaps more importantly, I urge my colleagues to take a stand in favor of the rules of this hallowed House. I offered an amendment, the intent of which was made perfectly clear in my floor statement, was clearly understood and supported by the chairman of the relevant committee, and approved by the Members of this body. And the result, after conference, is the wholesale gutting of the provision's intent.

Conferees do not have the authority to read duly passed legislative provisions any which way they please, in gross contradiction of the duly established legislative history of the measure.

I strongly urge a "no" vote on the conference report.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade, who has been a force throughout this whole process.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time.

This is important legislation. Furthermore, the conference report makes very important, very substantial, highly desirable changes and reforms to the transaction ability of the Export-Import Bank. I am pleased to see that so many Members have made contributions.

The gentleman from New York has mentioned a number, appropriately, on his side of the aisle that have specific provisions which resulted in this legislation being advanced and improved; and I would like to also mention, of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY), who will be speaking shortly about his provisions that are extremely important and make sure that we are not helping by providing assistance to American exporters to increase steel production abroad, for example. He will enlarge on that issue. I also want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) for his effort on behalf of small business.

If we have problems for our workers because of what some people deem to be inadequacies in our trade law, or because of the competition we face from foreign export credit agencies, well, we should not cut off the hand of one of our workers in the process and expect we are going to do better. If we would defeat this legislation to disarm the Export-Import Bank, that is exactly what we would do.

This legislation, indeed, as the chairman said, is about jobs. It has created an extraordinary number of jobs; and it turns a profit for the American Treasury on top of it, last year over $1 billion of net income to the United States. Why? Because not only did we expand our exports, and that results in revenue, but this bank charges risk-based transaction fees and costs. Overall, of course, we want the private sector to provide the credit, and they have. Only 2 percent of our exports are financed with the loans or loan guarantees of this entity.

We have made important reforms and clarifications in the relationship between the Treasury and the Export-Import Bank that will assure that in those small number of cases, but very important cases, where we face unfair competition, subsidies from export credit agencies of other major exporting companies, that we have a chance to assist our exporters. That is about 2 percent of the total provisions. Actually, we have only used it two or three times a year and probably underutilized the so-called "war chest."

I would like to address specifically the comments of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH). I remember well that colloquy, and in fact section 19 addresses important information to be considered by the Export-Import Bank in considering their transactions. While it is true that we rely to some extent upon the information provided to the Export-Import Bank for their determinations, section 21 also enlarges the Chafee amendment to ensure that we have enforcement of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, the Arms Export Control Act, the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, and the Export Administration Act. All of these are new reforms, additions to the Chafee language.

And I will say there are a very small number of violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act that are pursued in our country, and we know which ones they are. So it is not just that we are relying on the information provided by the applicant for a transaction. That information is readily available. There are not that many, fortunately, violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. I wish we could say the same for other countries whose export credit agencies we face in competition.

I would say that the resources we make available focus to a major extent on small businesses, and we are trying to improve that, are really very inadequate compared to our gross national product. In fact, in absolute terms, six countries, major export countries, including our neighbor Canada, provide much more in the way of resources for assistance to their exporters than we do. But this is a step forward, a big step forward.

The advisory committee on sub-Saharan Africa is reauthorized. We provided additional assistance to try to make sure American exporters do focus on exports to Africa. We have made a number of other initiatives that make sure that minority-owned businesses are given special consideration. And those things are due to a bipartisan effort on the part of the subcommittee and committee members.

So Members of the House, this is good legislation. We have worked out our difficulties in a conference with the Senate. It creates an IG at the insistence of the Senate. We welcome that kind of addition. We want to make sure that the resources of the Federal Government, even though they are repaid and redoubled, are spent well and in a manner that Members can feel good about. And that is what this legislation does.

Madam Speaker, this Member rises today in support of the conference report for S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization (Ex-Im Bank) Act of 2001, which is being considered under a Rule. This important legislation extends the authorization of the Ex-Im Bank until September 30, 2006, and makes other appropriate changes to the charter of the Ex-Im Bank. The authorization of the Ex-Im Bank is set to expire on June 14, 2002. This Member, as the Chairman of the House Financial Services Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade, has a special interest in the Ex-Im Bank, which has jurisdiction over this subject.

This Member would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, the Chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, (Mr. OXLEY) for his leadership on Ex-Im Bank issues. This Member would also like to thank both the distinguished gentleman from New York, the Ranking Member of the House Financial Services Committee, (Mr. LAFALCE) and the distinguished gentleman from New York, the Ranking Member of the House Financial Services Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade, (Mr. SANDERS) for their efforts in bringing this conference report to the House Floor.

This Member would also like to thank all the other conferees of this legislation, including the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, the Chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, (Mr. SARBANES) and the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the Ranking Member of the Senate Banking Committee (Mr. GRAMM).

As this Member mentioned earlier during the discussion of the rule for this conference report, the Ex-Im Bank is an independent U.S. Government agency that creates and sustains American jobs by providing direct loans to buyers of U.S. exports, guarantees to commercial loans to buyers of U.S. products, and insurance products which greatly benefit short-term small business sales. It is also important to note that the Ex-Im Bank charges risk-based interest and fees on the users of its products. As a result, last year, the Ex-Im Bank generated $1 billion of net income to the Treasury of the U.S. Government.

On September 10, 2001, this Member introduced the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2001 (H.R. 2871). On October 31, 2002, the House Financial Services Committee passed this legislation by a voice vote. Thereafter, on May 1, 2002, this legislation was passed by the House Floor by voice vote. Furthermore, a conference committee was then convened with the Senate on their version of the Ex-Im Bank legislation. On May 21, 2002, the conferees met and resolved the remaining outstanding issues in the conference report. On May 24, 2002, the conference report for the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2001 was filed with the signatures of 15 of the 16 conferees.

This Member would like to briefly summarize the following seven provisions of this conference report:

1. Reauthorization of the Ex-Im Bank;
2. Reauthorization of the Sub-Saharan Africa Advisory Committee and added emphasis on Africa;

3. Small business;

4. Increase in Ex-Im Bank statutory ceiling for loans, grants, and insurance;

5. The Ex-Im Bank/Treasury relationship over the Tied Aid War Chest becoming explicit;

6. The $18 million guarantee approved by the Ex-Im Bank to support the sale of computer software by American exporters to Benxi Iron and Steel Co. in China; and

7. The inspector general.

First, the conference report of S. 1372 reauthorizes the Ex-Im Bank until September 30, 2006. As a result of this provision, the program budget, which supports the loans, guarantees, and insurance products of the Ex-Im Bank, and the administrative budget, which pays for all salary and overhead expenses, are both effectively authorized for such sums as are appropriated through FY2006.

Moreover, during the Subcommittee's first hearing on this subject, the Ex-Im Bank personnel testified that they were in desperate need of a technology upgrade which would particularly benefit small business users of the Ex-Im Bank. As a result, this conference report creates a technology budget subcategory within the Administrative budget.

Second, this conference report focuses on the efforts of the Ex-Im Bank in Sub-Saharan Africa. For example, the 1997 Ex-Im Authorization Act required the expansion of its financial commitments in Sub-Saharan Africa and reauthorized an advisory committee on this subject to make recommendations to the Board of Directors on how the Ex-Im Bank can encourage and facilitate greater support for American trade with Africa. This conference report would reauthorize the Sub-Saharan Africa Advisory Committee until September 30, 2006.

Third, this conference report makes very important changes which will encourage additional small business transactions with the Ex-Im Bank. It would require that the Ex-Im Bank earmark at least 20 percent of its total financing for small businesses. Under current law, the Ex-Im Bank is required to use only 10 percent of its total financing for small businesses. As of FY2000, the Ex-Im Bank provided about 18 percent of its total financing for small business. In addition, this conference report requires the Ex-Im Bank to focus on technology improvements, including allowing customers to use the Internet to apply for the Ex-Im Bank's small business programs. These efforts will greatly improve small business outreach.

Fourth, the Ex-Im Bank has a current $75 billion statutory ceiling on its portfolio of loans, guarantees, and insurance that are outstanding at any one time. Under this conference report, this statutory ceiling would be increased to $100 billion by FY2006. Increasing the Ex-Im statutory portfolio ceiling is one of the remedies needed to authorize the financial resources for the Ex-Im Bank to enable it to protect American exporters against unfair competition from the much more generous resources of our major export competitors. For example, according to the latest available data, the U.S. Export-Import Bank has a substantially lower level of export credit resources than the following seven countries: Japan, France, Korea, Canada, Germany, and the Netherlands.

Fifth, you will be interested to know that this legislation also would make very important clarifications in the administration of the Tied Aid War Chest which finances tied aid transactions. The Tied Aid War Chest was intended to be used by the Ex-Im Bank to protect American exporters by matching the concessionary financing of foreign export credit agencies. Unfortunately, the Tied Aid War Chest has been grossly under-utilized, which is due in part to the disagreements between the Ex-Im Bank and the Department of Treasury on how to use the Fund. In recent applications for the Tied Aid War Chest, there has been an obvious communication and organizational breakdown between the Ex-Im Bank and the Treasury Department. Moreover, the Ex-Im Bank and the Department of Treasury have had different legal interpretations as to their current statutory role over the use of the Tied Aid War Chest. The Conference Report resolves that issue.

Therefore, this legislation would address these past problems by creating a new definitive step-by-step process to be followed by the Ex-Im Bank and the Treasury Department regarding how the Tied Aid War Chest is to be administered. This conference report requires the Department of Treasury and the Ex-Im Bank to set the principles, process and standards on how the Tied Aid War Chest is used. It requires Ex-Im Bank, not the Treasury Department, to make case-by-decisions on the use of the Tied Aid War Chest. This conference report strikes the current language in the Ex-Im charter which states that the use of the Tied Aid War Chest "must be in accordance with the Secretary of the Treasury's recommendations . . ."

It is important to note that an addition was made to the Tied Aid War Chest section. The conference report explicitly states that the Ex-Im Bank will not approve a use of the Tied Aid War Chest if the President determines, after consulting with the Ex-Im Bank and the Secretary of the Treasury, that the extension of tied aid would materially impede the enforcement of existing Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) arrangements or future negotiations within the OECD. Giving the President an opportunity to stop any transaction is entirely appropriate and only makes explicit powers the President already has. This Member was pleased to endorse this change as were the House and Senate conferees who accepted it. The legislative language in the conference report is clear that such presidential power is not transferable to the Treasury Department or any other agency.

The industry groups continue to be in strong support of this tied aid clarification. U.S. exporters have a vested interest in the tied war chest becoming a viable tool in fighting and deterring concessionary financing by foreign export credit agencies.

Sixth, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY) successfully offered an amendment at the House full Committee markup of the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2001, which passed by voice vote, that addressed the $18 million guarantee approved by the Ex-Im Bank on December 19, 2000, to support the sale of computer software by American exporters to Benxi Iron & Steel Co. in Benxi, Liaoning, China. The Toomey amendment conforms Ex-Im lending to current U.S. trade laws by barring any Ex-Im loan or guarantee to an entity for the production of substantially the same product that is the subject of a countervailing duty or anti-dumping order or a Section 201 determination by the International Trade Commission. In addition, this conference report also requires the Ex-Im Bank to develop procedures and set up a comment period for loans or loan guarantees to a business which is subject to a preliminary countervailing trade duty or anti-dumping determination of material injury.

The conference report includes the exact language of the Toomey amendment with one addition which was offered by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania and accepted by the conferees. This addition requires the Ex-Im Bank to consider, for transactions over $10 million, Section 201 investigations that have been initiated at the request of the President, the USTR, the Senate Committee on Finance, the House Committee on Ways and Means, or by the International Trade Commission. Also, the conference agreement requires the Ex-Im Bank to conduct a comment period for these types of transactions.

Lastly, it is important to note that the House conferees did accept the provision from the Senate Ex-Im bill which creates a Presidentially appointed inspector general for the Ex-Im Bank. According to a General Accounting Office (GAO) report on this subject dated September 6, 2001, the Ex-Im Bank has the largest budget authority of any Federal entity currently that does not have an inspector general.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, over the last sixty years, the Ex-Im Bank has supported more than $300 billion in U.S. exports. Because the Ex-Im Bank creates and sustains American jobs, it needs to be reauthorized. Moreover, this Member fully expects the President to sign this conference report into law when it is presented to him.

For the reasons stated and many others, this Member urges his colleagues to pass the conference report to the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act of 2001.

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York City (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Madam Speaker, I thank our ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), for yielding me this time and for his leadership on this important bill.

I am pleased to rise today in support of the conference report for the Export-Import Bank through 2005. Today's vote has been a very long time in coming. Over the past year, Congress has passed a 6-month extension and a series of 30-day extensions to keep the bank in business as work on the conference report moved forward.

Madam Speaker, this final conference report represents the sum of all that work, and I believe it sets the bank on a strong course for the next couple of years. As some of my colleagues have stated, the Ex-Im Bank is a successful government entity that facilitates and supports American businesses and worker interests by making exports possible to areas of the world that would otherwise be closed to U.S. companies.

The conference report builds on the past successes of the bank which supported $12.5 billion of U.S. exports in 2001, and has supported a total of over $400 billion of U.S. exports in its 68-year history. It is very important to the district that I represent. Since 1995, the Export-Import Bank has supported over $1 billion in exports out of my district alone.

While outreach to small businesses has been an increasing emphasis for the bank in recent years, the conference report strengthens this program. It directs the bank to improve its customer service and technology interface with small businesses, and doubles the value of bank support that must go to small businesses from 10 to 20 percent of the bank's total. Having recently met with a group of small business leaders and exporters in my district, I can tell Members this is a positive step and I would certainly support, as some of my colleagues have mentioned, a greater proportion going to small businesses.

Members concerned about small businesses should also be aware that this language in the conference report coincides with the signing of a memorandum of cooperation between the bank and the Small Business Association last month. Under this agreement, a new joint marketing campaign will be launched to attract small businesses to the bank. The report also builds on the bank's existing mandate to support exports to Africa, and it imposes new safeguards on transactions that may fall under an existing countervailing duty, antidumping or section 201 ruling.

Finally, the conference report retains an amendment I offered in committee giving the bank explicit authority to turn down an application for Ex-Im Bank support for companies that have a history of engaging in fraudulent business practices. One of the main reasons that I believe the bank is important to the U.S. is that it allows us to compete with foreign export credit agencies such as those in Japan, Germany, France, Canada, and other countries. There are over 70 different ECAs that we must compete with. I believe in this global economy, the U.S. must not fall behind our international competitors. I praise the bipartisan leadership in getting to the point we are today, and I support the conference report and urge a yes vote.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, opposition to the Export-Import Bank is not a progressive idea, it is not a conservative idea, it is an idea that should be supported with today's vote by any Member of Congress who wants to protect our taxpayers and protect American workers.

Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), who occasionally has different philosophical points of view from me, but I am pleased to have him speak in opposition to the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. PAUL. Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill. This bill is nothing more than subsidies for big corporations. If one were to look at the Constitution and look for authority for legislation of this sort in article I, section 8, it would not be found. That in itself should be reason to stop and think about this, but we do not look at that particular article too often any more.

Also for moral reasons, I object to this. Even if we accepted the idea that we should interfere and be involved in this type of activity, it is unfair because the little guy gets squeezed and the big guy gets all of the money. It is not morally fair because it cannot be.

One thing that annoys me the most is when Members come to the floor and in the name of free trade say we have to support the Export-Import Bank. This is the opposite of free trade. Free trade is good. Low tariffs are good, which lead to lower prices; but subsidies to our competitors is not free trade. We should call it for what it is. We have Members who claim they are free traders, and yet support managed trade through NAFTA and WTO and all these special interest management schemes, as well as competitive devaluation of currencies with the notion that we might increase exports. This has nothing to do with free trade.

I am a strong advocate for free trade, and for that reason I think this bill should not be passed. There are good economic reasons not to support this. Because some who favor this bill argue that some of these companies are doing risky things and they do not qualify in the ordinary banking system for these loans and, therefore, they need a little bit of help. That is precisely when we should not be helping. If there is a risk, it is telling us there is something wrong and we should not do it. It is transferring the liability from the company to the taxpayer. So the risk argument does not hold water at all.

The other reason why economically it is unsound, is that this is a form of credit allocation. If a bank has money and they can get a guarantee from the Export-Import Bank, they will always choose the guarantee over the nonguarantee, so who gets squeezed. The funds are taken out of the investment pool. The little people get squeezed. They do not get the loan, but they are totally unknown. Nobody sees those who did not get a loan. All we see is the loan that benefits somebody on the short run. But really on the long run, it benefits the big corporations. Many times it doesn't even do that.

Take a look at Enron. We have mentioned Enron quite a few times already. If we add up all of the subsidies to Enron, it adds up to $1.9 billion. That is if we add up the subsidies from OPIC as well. And look at what Enron did. They ran a "few" risks, and then they lost it. Who was left holding the bag? The taxpayers.

Madam Speaker, I strongly urge a no vote on this bill. If Members are for free trade, they will vote against this bill, and will vote for true free trade.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY), a member of the conference committee.

Mr. TOOMEY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for crafting a good bill, which I believe is going to make the Ex-Im Bank more accountable to the taxpayers. Specifically I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for working closely with me to ensure that the Ex-Im Bank is not in a position to reward foreign countries or industries that are in violation of U.S. trade law, and thank the gentleman for including me as a conferee on this report.

This is an important bill which reauthorizes the bank through 2006. There are several significant changes, one I would like to focus on in particular. To illustrate this provision that I wanted to focus on, I want to review very briefly the crisis that is facing the American steel industry. I think we are aware that the American steel industry has been devastated by a flood of imports. Foreign governments subsidize steel production, which creates a glut of steel, and prices in turn are depressed. The result has been devastating.

Over 33 American steel companies have been forced into bankruptcy. Bethlehem Steel, headquartered in my district, filed Chapter 11 last year. This is having a devastating impact on steel workers, their families, their communities and retirees who depend on these steel companies for their health care benefits.

In the face of this huge, global overcapacity, shockingly to me in late 2000, the Ex-Im Bank unfortunately provided financing for a project which would actually increase global capacity, specifically financing an $18 million project to increase by 1.5 metric tons the steel-making capacity at a Chinese steel company. This action was taken despite the recommendations to the contrary by the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, the Congressional Steel Caucus and others.

The good news is in this conference report we have a provision for the first time which would prevent a similar situation from ever recurring. There is a provision which prohibits the Ex-Im Bank from extending any loan or guarantee to any foreign company found in violation of U.S. trade law. Specifically, it would prohibit the Ex-Im Bank from providing a transaction to an entity for the resulting production of a product which is already subject to a countervailing duty or antidumping order, and prevent any loan or guarantee for an entity which is subject to an affirmative injury determination by the ITC under section 201. The bottom line is that we would not grant loans to companies that are already proven to be violating U.S. trade laws, and taxpayer funds could not be used to assist foreign corporations in aggravating an existing American economic problem.

While this provision was inspired by this Chinese steel company transaction, it is not specific to any industry or product; rather it would apply to any product or commodity for which there are violations of U.S. trade laws.

Again, I commend the leadership of this committee on both sides of the aisle for the hard work they have done in crafting a good bill. I would also like to thank the American Iron and Steel Institute, the American Steelworkers of America and the Congressional Steel Caucus for their support, and urge my colleagues to vote yes on this conference report.

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report, and I commend the chairman and ranking member of the full committee as well as the chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee for putting together what I think is a very well-balanced bill.

The bill has been through a number of iterations from the subcommittee to the full committee, and then through the conference. A number of the proposals, such as what the gentleman from Pennsylvania just discussed with respect to funding of industries where we have either dumping or countervailing duty issues at play have been addressed in the underlying bill. I think it shows that the Congress is willing to respond to criticisms which have been raised with respect to our various aid programs, including export finance programs.

A lot of critics will get up and argue that this bill is either unnecessary for libertarian reasons and that we ought to allow for free market to rule in worldwide trade; and others will argue that this does nothing other than really export U.S. jobs.

I would argue that both of those arguments are flawed. With respect to the free market aspect, over the years we have found that the United States, when compared to other export-oriented nations, funds export finance at a much smaller margin than most of our competitors do. So all we are doing in this instance through the Export-Import Bank is providing a modest amount of support when compared to other competing nations. I think it is something that we should not cede the field.

With respect to my colleague from Vermont and others, and I think the gentleman from Vermont is very well meaning in his approach, but I think his approach is unworkable. I think it takes the viewpoint that this is a zero sum game. Either we have jobs domestically or jobs abroad; whereas I think in the economy and what we are trying to accomplish through export finance is to expand the base of jobs that we have in the United States and abroad. I hope my colleagues support this bill. I think it is well drafted, and I rise in strong support of it.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO).

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, if we are going to extend a Federal tax benefit, if we are going to take the money of the American working people and give it to corporations, should we ask something in return? Just a little something? The answer in this legislation is, no. We should not. Here is the subsidy, do whatever is desired.

Let us take a no-brainer here which was knocked out. Should companies that set these new triangular tax scams to avoid both taxes on their overseas production and on their U.S.-based production by doing the Bermuda Triangle, should they be prohibited from receiving this subsidy? That is, they are not paying any taxes any more in the United States of America. They have set up a scam which the wonderful accounting companies have figured out. Should they receive these subsidies? The answer in this report is, yes. There was language in there to prohibit this that was taken out. These companies are not paying any U.S. taxes, but we will give them a subsidy.

We hear a lot about small businesses. Yes, a large number of the transactions do involve small businesses. That is true. But the real measure is what percentage of the U.S. taxpayers' dollars in subsidies are going to the small businesses. It is less than 10 percent.

So what we are saying here is a large number of transactions and a tiny amount of the money are going to help small businesses, and the largest amount of the money, more than 80 percent, is going to the largest corporations in the world. All Fortune 500. Could we have just a little bit more of a restriction there and a real direction towards small business? This conference report says no.

Then we just heard, we have prohibited in this bill a repeat of the Benxi Steel Company. Well, guess what? No, this bill does not prohibit that. The original version might have prohibited it, but the language that has now been adopted in the conference report is so watered down that, indeed, I would challenge either the ranking member or the Chair to stand up and say definitively that the language in this bill would prohibit a repeat of that travesty, U.S. taxpayer money going to fund a corporation in China to steal jobs from United States workers. It will not.

Then finally, we can go to the issue of future here. AT&T, they are going to get an $87.6 million loan under the condition of the Chinese Government that they can begin to sell telecommunications products in China. Good news for U.S. workers? Well, it might have been, except that the Chinese Government also said that within 5 years, all of the production for all the equipment sold in China must be based in China. We are going to subsidize that. United States workers, taxpayers, are going to subsidize this.

A colleague stood up before me and said this should not be about the measure of where the jobs are, U.S. or overseas, that it does not matter. It matters a hell of a lot to me and the people I represent and to the U.S. taxpayers. Yes, the jobs should be based here in the United States of America.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GARY G. MILLER), also a member of the conference committee.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Madam Speaker, I would like to commend Chairmen OXLEY and BEREUTER for their leadership in crafting a very reasonable bill, and I rise in support of H.R. 2871.

California is the fifth largest economy in the world, but it benefits from the strategic role of the Export-Import Bank.

During fiscal years 1996 to 2000, 722 companies from California benefited from the assistance; 225 communities benefited; total value of exports were $8.3 billion; and 120,403 jobs were sustained. Most importantly, regardless of the rhetoric we have heard on the floor today, 72 percent of the transactions assisted small businesses; and that is most important, for small businesses are the engine that keeps this economy moving.

Far too often when we talk about numbers and figures, we do not apply it to a name and a face. Services provided by the Export-Import Bank to small businesses are overlooked, really; and that is a big issue today. But there are a lot of success stories, including ZMG Enterprises in Walnut, California, owned by Mr. Joe Gomez. ZMG Enterprises is a long-standing user of the bank's short-term, multibuyer insurance policy to cover the sale of nearly $11 million in annual sales of canned vegetables, fruits and table sauces, primarily to Mexico. For a small company, a family-owned business, $11 million is a lot of revenue to generate for a company. Mexico has traditionally been a COD country. This insurance policy backed by the bank enables Mr. Gomez to offer short-term credit to Mexican supermarkets so that the grocers can purchase more of his product in a single sale and there are reasonable guarantees. There is no money being lost. It is benefiting entrepreneurs in this country, specifically in California, the State and the district I represent. This is a good bill. I would encourage any individuals who have questions to take time to read the bill before they listen to some of the rhetoric on this floor.

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, I would like to preface and qualify my remarks by saying that I am not at all opposed to the comments that emanated from the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) because losing jobs overseas is indeed an acute problem, especially in my district where Indiana alone has lost over 90,000 jobs to foreign corporations.

I am going to speak in favor of this legislation in terms of reauthorizing the Export-Import Bank. If it passes today, of course it reauthorizes the sub-Saharan Africa Advisory Committee until September 30, 2006. It requires the bank to continue to report to Congress annually for each of the 4 years on steps taken in sub-Saharan Africa to increase U.S. exports and to consult with the Commerce Department and the Trade Promotion Coordinating Council on the bank's Africa activities.

In the year 2000, trade with sub-Saharan Africa was 2 percent of total U.S. exports and 1 percent of total U.S. imports. Three-fourths of total U.S. trade with sub-Saharan Africa is with just three countries: Nigeria, South Africa, and Angola.

When the 106th Congress passed major legislation to improve economic relations between the U.S. and sub-Saharan Africa, known as the African Growth and Opportunity Act, I supported that enthusiastically and thought that this country was taking a major step forward in terms of the enhancement of our partnership with Africa and African business.

So I think that this bill for Indianapolis where we just celebrated a major exporter of businesses, the George F. Cram Global Company in Indianapolis just received a major award for outpacing others in terms of exporting this globe.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam Speaker, under our disastrous trade policy from 1994 to 2000, we lost over 3 million jobs due to our trade policies. The State and the country which has suffered the most is California, which lost over 300,000 jobs due to our trade policy.

I am proud to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this 5-year reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank. First and foremost, let us recognize that this Congress has been very forceful in welfare reform aimed at getting poor Americans off of government subsidies and off of government handouts and into their self-sufficiency. Why is it that we cannot do for big American corporations what we have been doing to America's poorer people, insisting that they be self-sufficient? No, let us get America's biggest corporations off the dole. If we are going to focus on poorer Americans, let us make sure we also get these big American corporations off the dole.

According to the supporters of this bill, the Export-Import Bank sustains free trade. That, of course, pulls that definition way beyond any of the boundaries of logic. The reality is that the bank allows for privileged trade. Certain corporations are given the privilege of taxpayer-guaranteed investments so that they will have the privilege of moving their production out of the United States, making deals with another company in another country in order to set up a manufacturing unit in the other country, financed by the U.S. taxpayers no doubt.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY), who suggested in his remarks that he will now vote for the Export-Import Bank, during the last debate on this issue, went into excruciating detail how thousands, 72,000 steelworkers' jobs had been lost and in the middle of this overproduction of steel there was, yes, an Export-Import Bank guarantee for a Chinese company to add even more, 1.5 million metric tons more of steel production in China, and how he is going to vote for the Export-Import Bank because there has been a guarantee in this bill that no more money will go to foreign companies that violate U.S. trade laws.

The question we must ask ourselves is, Why is any U.S. money, our taxpayer money, going to set up corporations in foreign countries in the first place? What is going on here? Oh, yeah, it is not going to go to companies now that violate U.S. trade laws that are setting up manufacturing units overseas. Why are we spending American tax dollars to build up manufacturing units in other countries when our own people need the jobs? What is going on here? As I say, we are too interested instead of getting poorer people off of welfare than we are to look at something like that.

Yes, and the fact is that if we have all those jobs going overseas that we are subsidizing, there will be more people on welfare. Who are the companies that will actually benefit from this? The companies that are being helped, yes, Boeing Corporation is being helped and a few other major companies that we have heard about, AT&T. But the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) pointed out that quite often what happens in these companies, it is not just that they are selling their product and then we have jobs here; but instead China and these other countries are insisting that they set up manufacturing units in those countries in order to get the deal. Yes, we have just about created an aerospace industry in China that will now be competing with our aerospace workers in my district. AT&T has created an electronics industry in order to make that sale. And part of the sale, of course, is a guarantee by the taxpayers that that manufacturing unit is going to be financed so that we can set up that job-producing company in China.

This makes no sense whatsoever. It makes no sense for us to subsidize these large companies in order to set up manufacturing units. That is what is going on with the Export-Import Bank. Do not let anybody kid you. I would vote against reauthorization and ask my colleagues to join me.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY), Chair of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill. This report must be passed for one simple reason and that is the support for U.S. jobs. It is really easy to characterize this as a handout for big businesses. Well, those businesses mean jobs. They are the people who hire. In our global economy, U.S. companies must constantly be seeking new markets for our products. Our government needs to support these efforts because it supports U.S. jobs. Unfortunately, we do not live in a world in which our trading partners play fair. Our businesses must compete with businesses which are directly subsidized by the nations in which they operate. To add some level of fairness to this competitive disadvantage, the U.S. created the Export-Import Bank. In my area of New York, this has translated into over $70 million which has benefited both large and small businesses involving thousands of jobs in my district alone and tens of thousands of jobs in New York State.

The international market presents many problems for United States businesses seeking new opportunities. We must work to alleviate these problems for U.S. employers so the incentive to move jobs overseas will not be there. In this present economy, every one of us has to make a commitment to ensure more products bearing the "Made in the USA" label get to the markets abroad by supporting this legislation.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this conference report.

In this committee's review of the Ex-Im's performance we determined that a greater effort must be made to increase the amount of funds which go to small businesses. This Conference Report requires a ten percent increase in the volume of funds going to small businesses.

Ex-Im provides an invaluable service for U.S. workers. Many U.S. products and services would never have been able to find new buyers in the global market place without the assistance of Ex-Im.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I join with the gentleman from Vermont in opposing the disastrous trade policies that the United States has employed over the last decade. They have led to the largest trade deficit in the history of mammalian life.

The trade deficit affects people; $300 billion and more of trade deficit with a rough approximation of 40,000 jobs lost for every $1 billion of deficit.

We do not live in a perfect world. We live in a world in which Europe and Japan subsidize their exporters, and the only thing worse than us subsidizing ours through the Export-Import Bank, would be our failure to do so to partially balance what Japan and Europe do for theirs.

I also want to commend the conference committee for leaving a provision that was added by amendment in the House bill to require that when the Export-Import Bank makes its decisions, it include as an important criteria: whether the country involved is one that is cooperating with us in the war on terror. I think increasingly in all of our trade and foreign aid, we ought to ask that question.

I might add that the Export-Import Bank has to be contrasted with the World Bank, which is planning right now to loan $755 million to Iran. Iran was branded just two weeks ago by the State Department as the number one sponsor of terrorism among all the governments in the world.

So let us support the reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank, and let us be wary when the World Bank appropriation comes to this floor.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), one of the outstanding fighters in this Congress for American workers.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I have watched this Import-Export Bank for years, and the idea when it was set up in 1934 was to promote U.S. exports. I have even been questioning the name Export-Import Bank because it seems to me it has been much more successful at increasing imports into this country, displacing our manufacturing base year after year after year, than promoting exports. Look back to the loan that was made in the 1970s in Brazil to mine ore and help to create a Latin American steel industry that has contributed to the global steel overcapacity that her now swamped this Nation's industry. Not only is something fundamentally wrong with the way this organization functions but with our trade policy in general. America's trade deficits have never been larger. Why should we approve a bill for an organization for 5 more years that has helped to spawn our competitors? They are not creating export markets for us. They are creating export platforms where steel and electronics and apparel and aerospace products are U-turned back into this country displacing U.S. jobs. We should reject the reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank. I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on its final reauthorization today.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), a valuable member of our committee.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of the Export-Import Bank conference report. We are considering legislation necessary to help level the playing field for American exporters by guaranteeing that the Export-Import Bank will be there to help our Nation's companies compete against exporters subsidized by foreign governments. As our Nation has become a leader in advanced technologies, exports have become an increasingly important part, of course, to our economy. The Ex-Im Bank is critical in making sure that our companies are able to compete effectively in global markets. This institution levels what would otherwise be a tilted playing field and make sure that the debate is over the quality of the products of services, not who has the most subsidized prices.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that in the past I have always been critical of the Ex-Im Bank. Past actions have cast doubt over whether it was truly taking into consideration the needs of America's workers and our national security. For example, just a couple of years ago, Ex-Im made a loan for Benxi Steel in China to expand its steel-producing capacity when at the same time China was being investigated for dumping steel.

But the bottom line is that I am pleased to have had the opportunity to work with Chairman OXLEY, who has done a wonderful job, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY). There are guarantees in here that make sure that our businesses are not hurt, and I would urge support of the conference report.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in permitting me to rise today in support of the conference committee report. I think we have heard already on the floor of this Chamber that the Ex-Im Bank is good for American business and it is not free money. It charges interest and it is overwhelmingly a net benefit to the United States Treasury. I have had the pleasure previously to talk about how it is good for my State, which is definitely an export-dependent State, in Oregon.

We have seen in the last 5 years Ex-Im finance a quarter billion dollars in Oregon exports, supporting 59 businesses, 44 of which are small businesses: in my community, Danner Boot, a small high-quality boot product; Calbag Metals Company, an outstanding family-owned environmentally sensitive metals and recycling company. I talked previously about the freightliner company that pays union family wages to machinists and painters that help create high-quality trucks. Without Ex-Im they would not have had an opportunity to sell these high-end units in Latin America.

But my special interest as a Member of Congress deals with protection of the environment, and I have been pleased to watch the work that has been done here demonstrating the evolution of the Ex-Im Bank in environmental exports programs. Last year Ex-Im supported $12.5 billion dollars of United States exports, almost a half billion of which were environmentally-beneficial goods and services. Environmental technology in this country is a $200 billion industry, but only 11 percent of that is currently exported.

Our competitors export almost twice as much of that. I have seen in my own community and around the country that this is an emerging market. With the help of the Ex-Im Bank, we will be able to help American business with critical environmental services that will improve the quality of life around the world. I urge support for the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINDER). The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) has 4½ minutes, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) has 5½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) has 2 minutes remaining and the right to close.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least three good reasons to oppose the reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank.

First, the Export-Import Bank is an integral part of a failed trade policy. If you like the fact that between 1994 and 2000 the U.S. has lost more than 3 million decent-paying manufacturing jobs in Ohio, in Indiana, in New York State, all over the country, in my small State of Vermont, if you like and want to continue a failed trade policy, vote for the Export-Import Bank.

The second reason to oppose the reauthorization is corporate welfare. This country has a $6 trillion national debt and a growing deficit. We cannot take care of our veterans, we cannot take care of education, we cannot take care of affordable housing. But, yes, we do have hundreds of millions and billions of dollars available to subsidize the largest, most profitable corporations in America, corporations which shut down plants in this country and move to China and Mexico, corporations which pay their CEOs huge salaries while they lay off their employees.

Lastly, I think it is time to tell the CEOs of America they have to get off of the corporate welfare line; they have to produce jobs in America, not in China; they have to protect the taxpayers of this country.

Those are at least some of the reasons to oppose the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, indeed there is a basic trade policy issue involved in this debate, and that is whether we want to shape trade policy, whether we want to shape the terms of competition, or we do not. Do we believe that trade as it expands is always better, regardless of its nature and its terms? I do not think it is. I think we have to shape trade policy.

Ex-Im is part of that picture. In competing with other nations who help their companies in terms of their exports, those other nations do so, and the question is, are we going to effectively compete with those nations? We are not going to help keep jobs in the United States by destroying the Ex-Im Bank. That is just not the way to do it.

There is talk about downsizing, for example, at Boeing. Ask the machinists who work at Boeing whether they want us to end the Ex-Im Bank. Their answer is no. Ex-Im Bank helps Boeing. It helps them produce goods in the United States that are exported to other places.

There have been problems with Ex-Im in terms of small business. There has been an effort to address those. We can probably still do better.

There has been a problem in terms of companies that violate U.S. trade laws. There is an effort to address this in this bill. We can probably still do better.

But the answer in terms of an effective shaped American trade policy, which I believe in, is not to eliminate the Ex-Im Bank. We can do better, surely, in terms of shaping our trade policy, and I have been active in the efforts to do that. But it is misguided to say, those of us who believe you shape American trade policy, that you eliminate the Ex-Im Bank. I rise in support of the conference report.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, as you may recall, when this Ex-Im Bank was debated on the floor of the House, I offered an amendment that received 135 votes, including a majority of the Democrats and 22 Republicans, and that very simple amendment said that a company receiving Ex-Im funds must not lay off a greater percentage of U.S. workers than workers abroad. Frankly, during the conference committee, I was not surprised that that amendment was rejected. We did not win it on the floor of the House.

But let me tell you about another amendment that I offered. I offered an amendment that would simply require companies that receive assistance, now, we are talking about billions of dollars for corporate America, that those companies that receive this assistance sign a pledge, a nonbinding pledge, that they believe in employing U.S. workers at livable wages.

Now, imagine that: corporate America comes in, they get billions of dollars, and we want them to sign a nonbinding pledge that does no more than says they believe in employing American workers at a livable wage. I could not even get that amendment past the conference committee. I do want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) for that amendment, but we could not get the majority to support it.

So the issue comes down to the fact that when you give billions of dollars to the largest corporations in America, what do the working families of this country have a right to expect? I think at a minimum when you are giving money to Boeing, when you are giving money to General Electric, when you are giving money to AT&T, you simply cannot have them accept this money from American taxpayers and say, Thank you very much. By the way, I am on my way to China because we just shut down a plant in your district, throwing American workers out on the street, and we are opening a factory in China. Thank you very much, suckers, in the United States for that taxpayer support.

I think the time is long overdue for the American people to be able to say that, corporate America, you finally have got to have some responsibility to the workers of this country, to the taxpayers of this country, and we should oppose the Ex-Im Bank.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, let me just say little evidence exists that the Ex-Im Bank's credit assistance creates jobs. The Ex-Im Bank is a prime example of corporate welfare. The majority of the Ex-Im subsidies go to Fortune 500 companies. It is time to derail this kind of effort that selects favorites and distorts free trade.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the issue of corporate welfare. As we eliminate the fat from the federal budget, we should recommit ourselves to making sure all projects and programs are closely examined—not just the politically easy ones.

The Export-Import Bank (Eximbank) subsidizes loans and loan guarantees to American exporters. The experts agree; Eximbank should be abolished.

The Congressional Budget Office makes the following observation: Eximbank has lost $8 billion on its operations, practically all in the last 15 years; and little evidence exists that the Eximbank's credit assistance creates jobs.

The Congressional Research Service writes that: Most economists doubt that a nation can improve its welfare over the long run by subsidizing exports; and at the national level, subsidized export financing merely shifts production among sectors within the economy, rather than adding to the overall level of economic activity; export financing subsidizes foreign consumption at the expense of the domestic economy; and subsidizing financing will not raise permanently the level of employment in the economy. The Heritage Foundation recommends Congress "close down the Export-Import Bank."

Heritage further states: Subsidized exports promote the business interest of certain American businesses at the expense of other Americans; and little evidence exists to demonstrate that subsidized export promotion creates jobs—at least net of the jobs lost due to taxpayer financing and the diversion of U.S. resources into government-favored export activities at the expense of non-subsidized businesses. According to Heritage, phasing out subsidies will save 2.3 billion over 5 years.

The former Director of Regulatory studies at the Cato Institute calls the subsidy activity of Eximbank "corporate pork." He stated, "Even in the face of unfair international competition, the U.S. government doesn't have a right to use tax dollars to match equally stupid subsidies."

Export financed by Eximbank actually hurt competitive U.S. exporters not selected for subsidies. The bank chooses winners and losers in the economy. The winners are selected foreign consumers and selected U.S. corporations.

The Eximbank is a prime example of corporate welfare. The majority of Eximbank subsidies go to Fortune 500 companies that could easily afford financing from commercial banks: Boeing, McDonnell Douglas, Westinghouse Electric, General Electric, and AT&T.

To raise funds for its lending and guarantee programs, Eximbank puts additional pressure on Treasury borrowing, driving up interest rates for private borrowers. That's all of us. From a corner barbershop wanting to expand to a young family trying to finance their first home. We all pay the price. Sadly, there's more.

Eximbank appears to have wasted money on frivolous items as well. After 50 years with the same agency logo, Eximbank decided it needed a new one. Designing a new logo—including creation, copyright search, and the redesign of bank brochures and literature—cost nearly $100,000 last year. And in 1993, Eximbank spent $30,000 to train 20 employees how to speak in public—including chairman Kenneth Brody. An outside consultant was paid $3,000 a day for this task.

Mr. Speaker, I believe government shouldn't choose winners in the economy. With Eximbank the big winners are foreign consumers, large corporations and professional speech coaches. The losers are the American taxpayers.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, let me simply say that in a theoretical world that we might develop, there should be no need for an Ex-Im Bank, because no country should be engaging in subsidies of its exports. But we do not live within that theoretical world, we live within the real world; and within the real world, virtually every country in the world, most especially our major trading competitors, engage in the subsidization of their exports. That being the case, were we not to reauthorize Ex-Im Bank, we would be engaging in unilateral disarmament; and I, for one, do not favor unilateral disarmament.

Having said that, let me also say that it has always been my hope that administrations, both Democrat and Republican, would have been much more aggressive in negotiating a reduction or an elimination of export subsidies.

This is difficult to do with other countries, and it is difficult to do domestically. Other countries have been quite critical of our own Congress because of the recent agricultural bill that we passed saying that we have raised the bar considerably through the exports of our crops and agricultural products in a manner that they believe violates international law.

So we have to look to ourselves, too, but we should be negotiating a reduction or elimination so we could have multilateral disarmament rather than unilateral disarmament.

One more point, too. The Ex-Im Bank is a misnomer. Some individuals will say, well, they do more to help imports than they do exports. The fact is they do zero, nothing, to enhance imports; they do everything, 100 percent of all their programs, all their products, all of their services, all of their assistance, to promote exports of goods, products, and services made in the United States of America and sold abroad.

So one of the things we always should have done and I always favored is to simply strike the word "import" because of the misleading impressions that could be created. One Member got up on the floor and gave evidence of the misleading impression that has been created.

Having said that, in order for the United States to compete internationally within the trading arena, passage of today's reauthorization bill, a very good one, a balanced one, one with Democratic and Republican input, is imperative. I would commend all Members to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to thank my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), for his stellar efforts throughout this process; and also particularly the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). He would perhaps deflate a couple of rather incongruous statements made during the course of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Yes, indeed, this agency focuses exclusively on exports, despite the name. I want to say definitively that now, when we have a 201 determination or a final order under Title VII, no American exporters may export products to those sectors abroad that are in violation of those two parts of our trade law. That is a major advance offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY). There was no retreat from that; in fact, in conference it was actually strengthened. We traded a very important procedure for a report; a very big advance.

Another point here: Ten percent of the resources of the Export-Import Bank do not go to small business, as suggested; 18 percent. Over 90 percent of all the tax credits are for small business, and we are pushing them to go even much further by the mandate here.

I do not like American exports of jobs, jobs going abroad; but this legislation actually keeps American exporters producing products here, products, manufactured goods and services, and helps our exporters compete, sometimes against subsidized tax credits transactions, by other foreign export credit agencies. Yet, only 2 percent of all of the loans ever go into default.

The Export-Import Bank has a net return of resources year after year after year to the U.S. Treasury. Why? Because we charge risk-based insurance and fees. So the idea of this being a large corporate giveaway or a huge subsidy is just not the case.

I would say to the gentleman from California, for example, or the gentleman from Texas, California is number two in terms of exports abroad coming out of that State because of the Export-Import Bank, and Texas is number three. Think about those aerospace workers and what it means to California, Washington State, and other States involved.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of the conference report.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Conference Report. The Export-Import Bank has, as its main goal, the focus of helping businesses compete in the global arena. Since its creation in 1934, the Export-Import Bank has been successful in supporting U.S. businesses by providing needed assistance that allows these businesses to expand and promote their goods in other countries. Without this assistance, many of these businesses would not see this goal realized. Furthermore, as many countries provide higher levels of export financing subsidies to their companies than the U.S., the Export-Import Bank plays a crucial role in helping to even out this imbalance for U.S. firms in the international market.

The Export-Import Bank has to its credit many positive outcomes. It has not only been able to sustain vital U.S. jobs in both small and large companies, but it has also created many jobs around the country. In FY 2001 alone, the bank supported over $12.5 billion in U.S. exports to markets all over the world. Companies across the country see the benefits of working with the bank, as more than 2,000 American companies of all sizes utilize its services each year. In my home state of Michigan, the value of exports supported by the bank since October 1997 is well over $500 million.

The conference report strengthens the ability of the Export-Import Bank to continue its commitment to assisting U.S. companies. The report increases the loan ceiling for the bank each year, culminating in $100 billion in FY 2006. It also contains other important provisions, including anti-dumping, antiterrorism, and human rights provisions that are important factors when considering possible transactions with other countries. The conference report also requires the Export-Import Bank to improve its technical capacity that will strengthen its ability to touch more small businesses and will facilitate the usage of the bank's services for all companies.

The conference report increases the bank's small business requirement to 20 percent from its current level of 10 percent. While this represents a positive step forward, I join with my colleagues in urging a higher percentage level of support in years to come and encourage the bank to do all it can to expand its outreach effort to small businesses, specifically minority and women-owned businesses. The report also strengthens U.S. export efforts in Africa, which I strongly support.

I thank my colleagues, particularly Chairman OXLEY and Ranking Member LAFALCE, for their hard work and commitment in putting forth a strong bill that will enhance the Export-Import Bank's ability to assist U.S. companies of all sizes as they look to expand and compete in the global market.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I have been a strong supporter of the Ex-Im Bank since coming to Congress in 1981. The Bank plays a very significant role in US trade policy. It ensures that U.S. businesses will not be denied access to overseas markets because of market imperfections that prevent them from obtaining financing from the private sector or because of unfair competition from foreign export agencies. Ex-Im has initiated thousands of transactions in foreign markets that commercial banks deem too risky to enter. Because of the Ex-Im, U.S. businesses export more goods and develop new and stronger trading relationships abroad.

The world of finance and the international trading system are changing fast. Other countries are finding more sophisticated ways of assisting their exporters and new financing mechanisms are being developed. Instead of placing restrictions on the Ex-Im and cutting its funding, we should be working to enhance the banks capabilities to assist business abroad my making sure they have the tools necessary to assist US exporters in this changing global economy.

If fiscal year 2001 Ex-Im Bank financed nearly $12.5 billion of US exports world wide which supported millions of US jobs. Nearly 90 percent of Ex-Im Bank's transaction in fiscal year 2001 was on behalf of small businesses.

In New Jersey alone, the Ex-Im Bank has supported over 214 companies and 138 communities. It is estimated that over 44,974 jobs are sustained by Ex-Im efforts. For example, JB Williams Company located in Glen Rock, New Jersey, is a small, 45-employee manufacturer of specialty soaps and bath products that has been using Ex-Im Bank's short-term export credit insurance since 1998 to expand its exports to Saudi Arabia, Poland, Korea, Colombia, and other counties.

This legislation extends the charter of the U.S. Export-Import Bank for 4 years and creates offices on Small Business Exporters within the Bank. It also increases the value of transactions that the Bank can hold in its portfolio at any time, raises the percentage of small business transactions the Bank should pursue, and improves the operation of the Tied Aid Credit Program. This measure further mandates that the Bank take into consideration U.S. trade laws when considering a transaction, examine whether a recipient company has been involved in any corrupt practices prior to a transaction's approval. And, in the context of our need to fight a war on terrorism, this bill requires the Bank to assess whether a country has been helpful in U.S. efforts to combat terrorism.

This bill raises the level of total Ex-Im portfolio (loans, guarantees, and insurance) outstanding at any one time from the current level of $75 billion to $100 billion by FY 2006. The mandate for small business activity will be raised from 10 percent to 20 percent of the total value of Ex-Im transactions, with 8 percent of the total going to businesses with less than 100 employees.

The Ex-Im Bank improves America's competitiveness overseas, promotes small business and creates and sustains U.S. jobs. I urge my colleagues to support this Conference Report.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Export-Import Bank, and in support of this conference report.

For nearly eight years, I've been a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations. This Subcommittee provides the funding for Ex-Im's program budget. During this time I've become very familiar with the Bank's operations and the important role it plays in supporting U.S. jobs, assisting small U.S. businesses, and helping to finance development in emerging markets around the world.

Support for Ex-Im means real jobs for real people. In its 68-year history, Ex-Im Bank has supported over $400 billion of U.S. exports, sustaining and creating millions of high-paying U.S. jobs. In fiscal year 2001 alone, Ex-Im Bank supported $12.5 billion of U.S. exports to developing countries, enabling many U.S. companies to maintain and even expand their workforces.

Ex-Im's impact is felt throughout America and affects companies of every size, but the Bank's positive impact is particularly strong on small businesses. Ninety percent of the total number of Ex-Im Bank supported transactions in fiscal year 2001 was in direct support of small businesses.

Ex-Im Bank aggressively reaches out to small businesses through a variety of partnerships with lenders, city and state trade offices, small business associations, Congressional offices, and other federal agencies such as the Small Business Administration. I commend Ex-Im for this effort.

Exports are crucial to the U.S. economy. Overseas sales are no longer optional for most U.S. companies. Exports accounted for over one-quarter of U.S. economic growth over the last decade and support an estimated 12 million American jobs. In order to grow the U.S. economy and increase the number of jobs, export opportunities need to grow as well. The Export-Import Bank has a critical role to play in this effort.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Export-Import Bank and supporting this conference report.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the conference report on S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act.

The purpose of the Export-Import Bank is to create American jobs for American workers. Unfortunately, the Bank has a history of providing assistance to companies that have been exporting American jobs and hiring cheap, foreign labor. For example, the Export-Import Bank insured a $3 million loan to help General Electric build a factory where Mexican workers will make parts for appliances that will be exported back to the United States. As a result, 1,500 American workers will lose their jobs to Mexican workers who will be paid only two dollars per hour.

When the House of Representatives considered its version of the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act, an amendment was offered to ensure that the Bank does not subsidize companies that are exporting American jobs instead of American-made products. Unfortunately, this amendment was not adopted.

I am especially concerned by the fact that the Conference Committee deleted the Office on Africa provision from the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act. The House version of this legislation included a requirement that the Export-Import Bank establish an Office on Africa to monitor Export-Import Bank lending for projects in African countries. This provision was supported by both the Financial Services Committee and the full House of Representatives, and there was no reason for the Conference Committee to delete it.

I urge my colleagues to oppose S. 1372, the Export-Import Bank Reauthorization Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINDER). All time has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Messrs. KERNS, BARTLETT of Maryland, CRANE, HEFLEY, SULLIVAN and Mrs. CUBIN changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTING IN AMERICA'S FUTURE ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 432 and ask for its immediate consideration.

☐ 1315

H. Res. 432

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4664) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill. Each section of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purposes of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 432 is a fair, open rule providing for consideration of H.R. 4664, the Investing of America's Future Act. The purpose of this legislation is to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2003, 2004 and 2005 for the National Science Foundation.

The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. The rule waives all points of order against consideration of the bill.

Additionally, the rule provides that the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and provides that the bill shall be considered for amendment by section. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has the authority to accord priority in recognition of Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

As an independent Federal agency, the National Science Foundation's mission is to support science and engineering among all disciplines. Currently, the NSF funds research and education activities at more than 2,000 universities, colleges, schools, businesses and other research institutions throughout the United States.

Federal investment in educating America's youth in the foundation areas of math, science and technology is the only way to maintain our competitive edge in a global economy and to create economic prosperity here at home. The ever changing world of science demands that the research behind it keep pace with the times.

This legislation will provide a 15 percent annual increase for NSF through fiscal year 2005, providing critical financial support that will ensure our Nation's continued advancement in science, education and research. Much like this Republican-led Congress has kept its commitment to double funding for the National Institutes of Health, this legislation will initiate a plan to double NSF moneys over a 5-year period.

This kind of increase is consistent with President Bush's focus on education improvements, such as the Math and Science Partnership Act and the Undergraduate Math and Science Education Improvement Act. This increase will also supply dollars for the countless major research equipment projects that have been approved but simply await funding.

Technology, science and research are powerful components in our development of society. Continually advancing science and research will discover new cures for diseases, improve our quality of life and create jobs and economic growth across America. As someone who hails from a State and region that has fully embraced the value and potential this type of scientific research offers, I can attest to how important this investment is to our future.

NSF-funded projects often bring national and even international attention to towns and cities across America, and sustained research efforts and collaborations have meant growth and new employment opportunities in those areas. This ripple effect energizes communities and attracts young Americans to fields and job markets like science and engineering, areas that are key to making American industry more competitive across the globe.

The long-time president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, physicist Karl Taylor Compton, once said, "Modern science has developed to give mankind a way of securing a more abundant life." Through this important investment in science, technology and research, this Congress can help ensure for the American people and communities across our Nation a more abundant life.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this fair and open rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fair and open rule for a noncontroversial bill. H.R. 4664, Investing in America's Future Act, will reauthorize the National Science Foundation, including an increase in funding for the NSF by 15 percent for each of the next three fiscal years. This increase will result in the doubling of the NSF budget over the next 5 years.

NSF is a critical institution whose mission is to promote the progress of science; to advance the national health, prosperity and welfare; and to secure the national defense.

In doing so, NSF has worked with and funded research institutions all across the country. For example, NSF has granted over $311 million to Massachusetts last year, including $3.3 million to the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and $1.9 million to the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth to fund very, very important projects that are vital to our national security and our national defense.

This reauthorization bill was unanimously referred to the House by the Committee on Science. The funding level called for in this legislation is above the President's request, and it addresses the growing imbalance between Federal support of biomedical research and physical sciences research. It also helps to ensure that America's present and future scientists and engineers are globally competitive.

The 21st century holds a great deal of promise, but there are also serious challenges ahead. Fortunately, the United States has some of the finest researchers and research institutions in the world. We must ensure that the scientific community in this country has the resources they need to meet our challenges.

The bill before us today I think is an important step in that effort. Mr. Speaker, I commend the members of the Committee on Science for their bipartisan work on this important bill. I ask Members to support this open rule and to support the Investing in America's Future Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), the sponsor of this important legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, let me just say, this legislation is named the Investing in America's Future Act because that is really what it is. Basic research is what is needed to develop new ideas for products that the world demands. It is how we develop ways to increase the efficiency and productivity in the way we produce those certain products. Basic research, which NSF has done such a tremendous job in its peer review, is really key to not only our economic security but our national security. Smart weapon technology come from basic research.

Let me for just a moment quote a previous statement from NIH, the National Institutes of Health. They said if you do not do more research, basic research coming from NSF, we are going to have to set up our own division for basic research in NIH. Adequate basic research is key to our health, key to our economy, key to our national security.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

In preparation for the discussion of the bill itself, I would just like to offer some general comments about the nature of basic research and the importance of funding basic research because that often raises questions in the mind of the public and, consequently, questions in the minds of the Congress.

Basic research is that research which is done to understand the basic underpinnings of science, the basic underpinnings of the nature of our universe and how it operates. It is very broadly based. It is not specifically directed toward any particular problem in society and sometimes not even toward a problem in the sciences. It is an effort to really learn more about the universe and how it and all its composite parts work.

That makes it very difficult to defend in the political process, but let me simply point out to my colleagues some of the results of basic research that we take for granted today.

In the 1930s, there was some research done on a very esoteric topic called stimulated coherent emission of radiation. This was theoretical work. It was very low cost work. The National Science Foundation did not exist. It was done by a professor and a few others working together, and they deduced that it was possible to have stimulated emission of light where one would have one photon, one particle of light, hitting an atom in an excited state, and one would have another photon come out that was exactly like the one that came in, and yet the one that came in would be unaffected. So one obtains double the amount of light and the light was coherent; that is, the wavelengths matched and the light was in phase.

This was essentially an unremarkable result in 1930 because no one had yet imagined a way in which it could be done, but after World War II, during which we learned a lot about more advanced physics, and researchers began investigating this with microwave radiation and discovered, in fact, it did work; this work was done by Charles Townes, a good friend of mine, a good physicist, who is now at Berkeley. He discovered that he could direct a microwave photon at an excited atom and get two microwave photons out that were coherent, traveling in exactly the same direction, in phase, and with identical frequencies.

He immediately recognized that this could also lead to light amplification by stimulated emission of radiation, and so the laser was developed about 1960, or in that time frame. It was a laboratory curiosity.

I remember the first time I saw a laser and played with it. It was almost a toy, and we had fun with it. What an amazing thing, that one could amplify light! And yet everyone today is familiar with lasers; They have become ubiquitous. We use them for everything from lining up sewers to making certain that the tiles in the ceiling of a building are level, to conducting surgery of various types, on to many other uses, cutting metals and cutting cloth. Most likely the dresses and suits that are being worn here today were cut by laser initially before they were sewn together. All of this is based on the initial research work done in 1930.

Let me take another example, nuclear magnetic resonance, an esoteric bit of research which occurred while I was in graduate school. Who really cared about the nuclear spins and magnetic moments of hydrogen nuclei? Yet that nuclear magnetic resonance work which forms the basis for what we today call magnetic resonance imaging, a fantastic medical advance. diagnostic tool, the MRI, which look inside our bodies and tell us whether we have cancer, or a torn muscle, or something else. Similarly, the CT scan came out of research in high-energy elementary particle physics, an esoteric topic as far removed from everyday life as we can imagine.

The question is, so what? The point is simply that during the past decade the marvelous economic expansion we enjoyed was, according to Alan Greenspan and other experts, almost entirely based on the basic research that we funded some 30 to 50 years ago. If we want to continue to enjoy economic growth and expansion, if we want to continue to lead the world, we have to also continue leading the world in basic research.

That is what this bill is all about, continuing to lead the world in basic research so that our children and grandchildren are going to have the same economic advantages that we enjoy today, just as our parents and our grandparents invested in basic research so that we could enjoy the fruits of that today. That is what this bill is about.

That is why the Congress must pass this bill so that we adequately fund basic research and continue the economic base and growth that we enjoy today, and so that we can continue to expand our basic understanding of the universe and all it contains, and learn about the scientific processes that constantly occur.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. And this is the first time I have had him yield to me in his capacity as a member of the Committee on Rules. We are all very proud of that accomplishment for him and thank him for his great leadership there and on this bill, which is a very important one.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in support of the legislation, and I commend the Committee on Science for their excellent work on this reauthorization for the National Science Foundation funding. For a long time, our colleague, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), has sponsored a bill and given us all the opportunity to register our support for drastically increasing the funding of the National Science Foundation. I am so pleased now that the Committee on Science has taken up that leadership, and the considerable leadership of the chairman, et cetera, of the committee to make this a possibility; that we would be on a path to doubling the National Science Foundation budget.

Mr. Speaker, I serve as a member of the House Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education of the Committee on Appropriations. A number of years ago, we set off on this path to double the funding for the National Institutes of Health. We are in our last year of that doubling effort. It was very important to the health of the American people. So, too, is the doubling of the National Science Foundation. Not only do we have to do this, but we should do more.

We had the Tech Talent Act, which encourages young people and mentors them in studying math and science so that we have the seed corn for us to have the scientists who will maintain and improve and enhance our technological base, and as well, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) said, our economic base as well.

Our progress in the National Institutes of Health, the Human Genome Project and other progress, really springs from the improved instrumentation that came from the technology side of it, the hard sciences, physical sciences side of it, the nonbiomedical science. So we all benefit across the board in terms of biomedical research, which is so important to the American people; the economic success, which is so important to our country; and also the fulfillment of the young people who have the talent and should be encouraged to study math and science and become scientists.

So I am absolutely delighted today that in this bipartisan way we can come to the floor. I commend the distinguished chairman of the committee and the subcommittee, as well as the Members on both sides of the aisle, for making this a reality for the Congress to take this vote and make it a reality for our country; and I will do everything in my power working with them to ensure that this can be translated not only into an authorization but an appropriation as well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT).

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise today in support of the rule and as a cosponsor and strong supporter of H.R. 4664, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act, or Investing in America's Future Act.

I want to commend the members of the Committee on Rules for this open rule, and the chairman of the Committee on Science, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT); and the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) of the Committee on Science; as well as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Research, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH); and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), for expeditiously ushering this bill through that committee and to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, a distinguished committee, chaired by Senators Gary Hart and Warren Rudman, released a report on national security at the beginning of 2001. While it did not receive a lot of public attention at the time, the Hart-Rudman report has been revisited often since September 11. One aspect of the report with particular relevance to the bill we are considering today is its finding and recommendation on the importance of basic research. According to the Hart-Rudman report on national security, and I quote, "The U.S. Government has seriously underfunded basic scientific research in recent years. The quality of the U.S. education system, too, has fallen well behind those of scores of other nations. The inadequacies of our systems of research and education pose a greater threat to U.S. national security over the next quarter century than any potential conventional war that we might imagine."

The report goes on to recommend doubling the Federal Government's investment in science and technology research and development by 2010. Mr. Speaker, the bill we pass today takes an important step in the right direction.

In addition to supporting basic research at colleges and universities nationwide, the NSF works to ensure that American teachers and professors have the skills, training, and equipment to prepare future scientists and researchers. This is critical as science and technology become increasingly important to our economy, our health, our environment, and our national security.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this rule and this bill.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time to say that this is a good rule. It is an open rule. It is nice to have an open rule. More importantly, this is a good bill and deserves the support of all our colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Since the dawn of man, the human race has been ingrained with a fascination and need to slip beyond its boundaries and explore the unknown. From across the continents to the depths of the ocean and to the far reaches of space, that pioneer spirit continues to this day.

The National Science Foundation embraces that spirit with its record of excellence in research, education, technological advancement, and discovery. They make possible the pioneer spirit within us all.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supplying the necessary tools to the National Science Foundation so they can continue along the path of important contributions to America and to mankind. Their programs are an important demonstration of how efficient government investment can return great dividends to society. There is no better time to invest in America's future.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). Pursuant to House Resolution 432 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4664.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4664) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes, with Mr. ISAKSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) each will control 30 minutes.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to bring to the floor today H.R. 4664, the Invest in America's Future Act, which was approved unanimously by the Committee on Science. This landmark bill would put the National Science Foundation on a track to double its budget over the next 5 years, while, at the same time, imposing strict new management requirements to ensure that the National Science Foundation continues to spend our money wisely.

This Congress has already demonstrated its faith in and reliance on the National Science Foundation several times in recent months, and I hope and expect that we will continue to do so today. Earlier this year, by the overwhelming margin of 400 to 12, we passed a cybersecurity bill that relied on NSF to fund the research needed to protect our Nation's computer systems and networks. At this time last year, we passed by voice vote a bill to initiate the President's math and science education partnerships, a program that NSF is now beginning to carry out; and we have passed appropriation bills that have included generous, if still insufficient, increases for the National Science Foundation.

So the 107th Congress is already on record as acknowledging the vital role played by NSF in both research and education, and we have already recognized the Foundation's need for additional funds. Today, we take the next logical step.

The scale of NSF's budget today is simply not commensurate with the breadth and importance of its mission. Congress reached that same conclusion about the National Institutes of Health, and we have followed through by doubling that research agency's budget. But health research is not the only kind of research on which our Nation depends. And, indeed, even health research itself depends on advances outside of biomedicine, the kinds of advances that produce new research tools and new understandings of chemistry and physics.

So it is time to give NSF, a much smaller agency than NIH, a budget commensurate with its mission. When we look at the new fields of science and engineering that will boost our economy in this new century, fields like nanotechnology, where do we turn to ensure that our Nation's researchers stay at the cutting edge? The National Science Foundation. When we look at the field of information technology, which facilitates every activity in today's economy, where do we turn to ensure that the U.S. remains at the cutting edge? NSF. When we consider our even more urgent need for a highly skilled technologically-literate workforce, where do we turn to ensure that our education system, from kindergarten through postgraduate work, is preparing the people we need? You guessed it, the National Science Foundation.

We turn to the National Science Foundation to solve some of our most pressing problems. We cannot turn from NSF when we decide where to invest Federal funds. It is time to give NSF the money it needs.

But do not take my word for it. Do not even take the word of all the university and research groups that have endorsed this bill. They are the obvious beneficiaries. Instead, listen to the major industrial entities that are backing this bill, groups like the National Association of Manufacturers, the Semiconductor Industry Association, and Technet. They understand that federally funded basic research, research which industry has little incentive to fund, is needed to keep the American economy humming.

But some may still wonder, despite the support for raising NSF's budget, whether the agency can handle such a significant increase. I would argue that there is no agency better placed to handle it. NSF is a lean agency that spends little of its budget on administration. It is the only agency in the entire Federal Government that received a green light rating from the Office of Management and Budget for the quality of its operations. It is repeatedly cited as a model of how Federal agencies should be run.

But despite NSF's stellar record, this bill will not allow the agency to rest on its laurels. The bill imposes several new management requirements to ensure that Federal taxpayer dollars are wisely spent.

There is a new report NSF must submit to Congress explaining how it decided to allocate its funding. There is a new requirement to ensure that the public has greater access to National Science Board meetings. There is a new joint NSF-NASA advisory committee on astronomy research.

Most importantly, there is a new process to prioritize major equipment projects and to manage them more consistently. Right now, there is no way for anyone outside the foundation to understand how these large projects, like new telescopes and research stations, are selected or ranked.

Under our bill, the director and the board will have to agree on a list of projects in priority order that will be submitted to the Congress. Actual budget proposals may still have to depart from that order, but at least we will all be starting with the same information in evaluating such budget proposals.

Mr. Chairman, this is a responsible bill, it is a needed bill, it is a bill that has garnered widespread support in committee and outside this Chamber, and it deserves support from all of us today. In passing this bill, we do nothing more, and nothing less, than reaffirm some basic principles: That being the world leader in research is important to our Nation's health, defense, and economic well-being; that improving science and math education is critically important; that a great Nation should not skimp on its investments to improve human understanding of natural phenomena.

It is through NSF that we turn those principles into actions. To paraphrase Daniel Webster, it is a small agency, but there are those of us who love it. I urge support for this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Investing in America's Future Act of 2002, H.R. 4664, a 3-year reauthorization bill for the National Science Foundation.

The bill represents a bipartisan effort by the Committee on Science to provide the level of resources necessary to sustain the important work of the National Science Foundation in science and engineering research and education.

I want to congratulate the chairman of the Subcommittee on Research, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and the ranking Democratic member, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) for their efforts to craft this bill. I also thank the chairman of the Committee on Science, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) for his leadership in working closely with this side of the aisle in developing the bill.

NSF is our premier agency for support of basic research at academic institutions in the physical sciences and the nonmedical biological sciences, in mathematics, and in engineering. Basic research discoveries launch new industries that bring returns to the economy far exceeding the original public investment.

The Internet, which emerged from the research projects funding by DOD and NSF, strikingly illustrates the payoff potential of such research expenditures. In fact, over the past 50 years, half of U.S. economic productivity can be attributed to the technological innovation and the science that has supported it.

Unfortunately, the simple truth is that during the 1990s we underinvested in the fields that NSF supports.

A recent report from the National Academy of Sciences provides specific examples that make this case. The report shows that between 1993 and 1999 Federal research support at academic institutions fell by 14 percent in mathematics, by 7 percent in physics, by 2 percent in chemistry, and by 12 percent in electrical engineering.

Inadequate funding for basic research in such important fields imposes a price on society, because new ideas are lost that would otherwise underpin future technological advances.

Of even more importance, anemic funding of academic science and engineering research reduces the numbers of new young scientists and engineers who constitute the essential element necessary to ensure the Nation's future economic strength and security.

H.R. 4664 authorizes funding growth for NSF of 15 percent per year for 3 years, bringing the total authorization level to $7.3 billion by the third year. This follows a funding path to double NSF's budget over 5 years, as was proposed by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) in the NSF authorization bill she introduced, and I cosponsored, last year.

We were not alone in calling for substantial funding increases. Such prominent figures as Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan, former House Speaker Gingrich, and former presidential science advisor Allan Bromley have pointed out the importance of increasing support for basic research in science and engineering.

The coalition for National Science Funding, a group of 80 scientific, engineering, and professional societies, universities, and corporations, specifically called for providing a 15 percent funding increase for the NSF this year as the next step in doubling the NSF budget.

The funding growth proposed by H.R. 4664 will enable the foundation to expand its investment in cutting-edge research initiatives and shore up its core research programs.

Equally important, the bill will increase efforts to improve the skills of K–12 science and math teachers, develop better science and math curricular materials, and attract more women and minorities to careers in science and engineering.

H.R. 4664 is an important bill that will help ensure the Nation maintains a vigorous basic research enterprise, which is an essential component for a strong economy for our national security.

Mr. Chairman, I commend this measure to my colleagues and ask for their support and its passage in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) to control the time for the remainder of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I support this legislation to increase the National Science Foundation budget by 15 percent for next year. This bill will put us on the path to double the NSF budget over the next 5 years.

Science inspires us to conquer the unknown, invent what does not exist, and improve what already exists. It all begins with research.

President Bush's budget proposal recognized the importance of science funding with a 9 percent increase in science and technology spending. That is the good news. But among the various science agencies, the increases in amounts varied greatly.

The National Institutes of Health, NIH, received the lion's share of funding under the administration's proposal. The NIH budget has increased to a point where it is now larger than the rest of the budgets of the science agencies put together, and the proposed increase alone in NIH funding is larger than the research budget of the National Science Foundation.

Biomedical research is important and the NIH should receive adequate funding. The administration's proposed budget rightly recognized the importance of our physical health. But, Mr. Chairman, our citizens' economic health is just as important as their physical health.

The NSF funds the cutting edge research that allows the U.S. to dominate the high technology field. Our commitment to the funding in the bill ensures that our technological preeminence will continue. Scientific research at the NSF has greatly enhanced our lives and has advanced science and technology. Consider the benefits of better weather forecasting, the saved lives that result from MRIs, the promise of faster semiconductors, and breakthroughs in nanotechnology that will drive our scientific efforts in the new century.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 4664 improves the quality of math and science education with $200 million in funding for the Math and Science Partnerships Initiative, which encourages more students to enter graduate level science studies.

In our technology-driven economy, math and science skills are essential. If we want to prepare the next generation with the skills they need for success, we must increase their knowledge of science. Either we continue to invest in the sciences, or risk losing the ability to lead the world in research. This legislation recognizes the priority of research and development, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) for allowing me to share this time, and for their leadership and imagination in bringing H.R. 4664, the Investing in America's Future Act of 2002 before us today for our consideration.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this important piece of legislation. I have long been a passionate advocate for the National Science Foundation and the work they oversee. This work begins the laudable goal of doubling NSF's budget over the next 5 years.

Competition for NSF grant funding is very intense. Every year NSF receives about 30,000 proposals for research in education projects. Of these, about one-third only are funded. These grants usually go to colleges, universities, academic consortia, nonprofit institutions, and small businesses. The NSF also supports collaborative projects between universities and industry, as well as U.S. participation in international cooperative research and education efforts.

By increasing the amount of money available for grants, the NSF will be able to greatly enhance opportunities for scientific inquiry, and will generate invaluable progress in a wide range of fields. The resulting discoveries will help drive economic growth and enhance the quality of life for all Americans.

NSF is the second largest source of federal funds for academic research. Students of mathematics, science, the environment and engineering will be better able to compete in the global marketplace because the investments made by NSF will generate exciting opportunities to enhance their studies.

I believe our Nation is well served by increasing the resources available for NSF. For these and many other reasons, I am proud to support this bill and I know this measure will pass the House today with overwhelming bipartisan support. This day will mark a day when we make the future of this country immeasurably brighter and bigger because investing in science is always a good investment.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), the angel of NIST.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the guardian of the Committee on Science for yielding the time to me.

It is with great pleasure that I rise as a very proud cosponsor to speak on behalf of H.R. 4664, the National Science Foundation Reauthorization Act. I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and the ranking members for their leadership on this issue. This committee has had a congenial disposition; but the bipartisan nature under which we have operated to produce this bill is a true tribute to the leadership and consensus-building skills on both sides of the aisle. I hope we can continue to work together to produce this kind of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, 5 years ago we made a historic pledge to double the budget of the National Institutes of Health. It took a lot of hard work to get the initial commitment, and even more to see it through. Despite a war on terrorism and an economic downturn, Congress and the administration kept its word and fulfilled that promise. The NIH is funding twice the work it did a mere 5 years ago. That is a tremendous accomplishment. In the 21st century, revolutions in our understanding of biology will rival those of physics in the 20th, and work sponsored by the NIH must continue to be a priority.

However, their initiatives cannot and must not be pursued exclusively. Science has become intricately interconnected; discoveries in one drive innovations in others. Without adequate research into the underlying fields of physics and chemistry, advancements in biology and medicine will stall. If we expect the myriad achievements of recent years to continue, we must support the underpinning science and engineering more robustly. As such, I believe we need a more balanced portfolio and need to champion the traditional areas of research, as well as the exciting new projects that have generated so many headlines of late.

In addition, we must do a better job of training the next generation of scientists and engineers. Fewer and fewer Americans are undertaking technical careers, accepting the torch from elder scientists and building on the accomplishments of generations past. We have made up for this shortfall largely by relying on foreign students and post-docs to fill the ever widening void. This is a poor long-term solution, and we must find ways to arrest the decline of American scientists.

The National Science Foundation is uniquely positioned to accomplish both of these goals. As the premier supporter of the overall scientific enterprise, the NSF has the exclusive ability to balance research and education dollars. They already reach across the entire scientific spectrum, touching all of the major disciplines, and can ensure underfunded areas of science and technology receive adequate support.

They are also the primary Federal agency when it comes to science education. They more than anyone else are responsible for supporting new scientists in all of the physical disciplines, and they are prepared to target traditionally underrepresented groups to fill the gaps.

I myself had the opportunity to work with NSF on the Congressional Commission on the Advancement of Women, Minorities and Persons with Disability in terms of recognizing the important contribution that they can make to the development of our next generation of scientists and engineers. As our society becomes more and more technologically focused, we must ensure that our educational system is training our youth to meet the rigorous demands of the future. The NSF has a vital role to play. I know that they are up to the task.

What is more, the NSF has consistently scored at the top of all government agencies when it comes to efficient and effective use of resources. The GAO routinely gives them favorable evaluations. They are one of only a few agencies to successfully comply with GPRA requirements. They have all the tools, and they know how to use them. All they need are the resources. With this bill, they will have them.

I have been a consistent advocate of an increased science portfolio. This is the way to go. The NSF deserves our support. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the NSF reauthorization. H.R. 4664 is a good bill, it is a bipartisan bill; and I want to compliment Chairman BOEHLERT, Chairman SMITH, and the ranking members for closely working together so that both sides are well represented in this legislation. Even during these tight budget times, investing in basic research like that at NSF is a wise and fiscally-prudent decision. I strongly believe we must make significant long-term investments in this Nation's sciences. This bill does just that.

The need for increased funding at NSF is clear. Recent data published by the National Academy of Sciences on Federal funding for basic research shows us that we are not meeting today's challenges. Sadly, there is strong evidence of declining basic research funding in many of the physical science areas. However, since NSF is the source of 36 percent of the Federal funding for basic research that is performed at universities and colleges in the physical sciences, we now have a chance to reverse course.

In my home State of California, NSF partners with the University of California on numerous research proposals in the physical sciences. I know that this bill will continue to support those needed partnerships for our long-term science and research needs. It is clear that in this instance, the returns to the Federal Government far exceed our public investment. That is why I urge my colleagues to support this bill to increase the NSF budget.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I would like to add to the comments I made a moment ago under the discussion for the rule but apply those comments specifically to the National Science Foundation.

Over the past decade, we have had some interesting trends in the funding of scientific research in the United States. However, we have failed to keep pace with that of other nations. At the moment, we are spending less on research compared to GDP in the United States than Japan does and the gap is increasing, not decreasing. Even worse, we are spending less compared to our GDP than Germany does. Even worse, we are rapidly being overtaken by South Korea. We are losing ground. Yet we are supposed to be the superpower, the world's leader, not only in military might but also in research and advancement. We have to change that trend. We made a good step in that direction a few years ago when we doubled the NIH budget over a period of 5 years. It is high time we do precisely the same for the National Science Foundation.

Just to illustrate the impact of what has happened and how things have gotten out of balance, I have here a very small chart, which I hope my colleagues can read, and at least see the trend lines, which shows very clearly what has happened to NIH, as shown on the top line. A few years ago NIH was bundled fairly closely to NASA and Department of Energy research. We decided to double it, and it has shot up exponentially as happens when you double things, whereas NASA is holding its own or slightly down, and DOE, the Department of Energy, has gone down.

We are spending less on research in the Department of Energy now than we did 10 years ago, in real dollars. The National Science Foundation, our most important basic research entity, is struggling along at the bottom of the chart. It had slight increases over the past decade, but very slight. I maintain that that is out of balance. As the rate of NIH goes up, NSF should also go up, because the National Institutes of Health builds its research on the basic research that is done under the auspices of the National Science Foundation. They go to the well of this basic research periodically and build on what has been developed there. But if they go to the well and the well is empty, all the money that we have spent for NIH is not going to count for much. It is essential that we proceed with the doubling that is proposed in this bill for the National Science Foundation. I commend Chairman BOEHLERT and Chairman SMITH for leading the charge in this effort. It is something that we must do and that we can do.

To those who are worried about budget busting, let me simply point out that this year's increase in the National Institutes of Health is greater than doubling the NSF budget will be. In other words, this year's increase in NIH is greater than the total current budget of the National Science Foundation. At the very least, we can easily afford to double the NSF budget; and by doing that over 5 years, we are spending one-fifth of what we have been spending each year to increase NIH.

This is a good bill. I urge that my colleagues vote for it. I urge that we pass this bill and put this doubling program into effect.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE).

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time and Chairman BOEHLERT and Ranking Member HALL and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) for their efforts in getting this bill. I am proud to be a cosponsor as well.

I rise in strong support of H.R. 4664, Investing in America's Future Act. This legislation, that will increase the funding for the National Science Foundation, is critical and it is probably more critical at this time than anyone can imagine. I believe that maintaining our Nation's global scientific and economic leadership provides the best justification for funding basic research, and that is really what we are talking about here. I also believe that a solid academic foundation in math and science education is critical to our success as a Nation in the 21st century.

As the lead source of Federal funding for basic research at colleges and universities, NSF supports research and educational programs that are crucial to technological advances in the private sector and for training our next generation of scientists and engineers. NSF funds cutting-edge research in science and technology that is critical in the United States. The research funded by the foundation has played a pivotal role in raising the standards of living in the United States as well as around the world.

As we have already heard from others, with a very small portion of Federal spending, the National Science Foundation has had a powerful impact on national science and engineering. Every dollar invested in this agency returns manifold in its worth in economic growth. For example, over 25 percent of the Federal support for academic institutions for basic research is provided through the National Science Foundation and almost 50 percent of the funding for nonmedical research at universities is provided through the National Science Foundation. NSF also provides 46 percent of the basic research in engineering performed at colleges and universities and also helps train more than 25,000 graduate students each year. I am pleased with the accomplishments that NSF has made in research and education initiatives, and I strongly support the doubling of NSF's budget by the proposed increase of 15 percent over the next 3 years in pursuit of this effort.

As the former superintendent of schools of my home State of North Carolina, I have worked for many years to improve science and mathematics education in our schools. We need better science and mathematics education in the K–12 classrooms if we are going to have it in university students. Quality instruction is the key to helping students learn in these critical fields. At a time when we are trying to improve the quality and quantity of science and mathematics in America, appropriate investments in NSF is critical to enabling our students to compete in today's knowledge-based economy. This increase in NSF budget will help ensure that improving science and mathematics education remains a national priority. I urge the vote and signature by the President.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI).

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my support for H.R. 4664, the Investing in America's Future Act. This bill would reauthorize the National Science Foundation at its highest level for the next 5 years, placing it in an unprecedented doubling track. I thank Chairman SMITH and Chairman BOEHLERT for the time on the floor today to speak on this very important issue and for their leadership on this increasingly important issue.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of this important legislation. H.R. 4664 not only takes a decisive step to doubling the funding for the National Science Foundation but also is a clear example of the support of this House in scientific discovery and growth. Now more than ever science and technology are leading the way to not only expand America and make it the best it can be but also to protect our citizens and improve our homeland security. Technologies such as radiation detectors and highest-level x-ray are keeping our homes, our businesses, and our transportation systems safe every day. But these critical technologies originate from the same place, from the Federal laboratories and university research that benefit from the National Science Foundation. Basic research is key to generating these ground-breaking and important technologies that we utilize in our lives every day.

My district is the home to leaders in basic research, the Brookhaven National Laboratory and the State University of New York at Stony Brook. These great institutions have benefited greatly from the support and funding from the National Science Foundation, advancing their endeavors and educational opportunities for students and scientists alike.

I am pleased that the bill includes important language clarifying the selection process of the Major Research Equipment Account. These large scale research projects are some of the best science our Nation has to offer, and it is imperative that a clear selective process is in place with congressional oversight. I thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for his leadership on this issue and for including this language in the bill.

The National Science Foundation represents the best in math and science education. In order for our Nation to remain a world leader in discovery and innovation, we must strive to educate our younger generation, engaging them in math and science activities.

It is no surprise that the bill is entitled the Investing in America's Future Act, because that is exactly what we will succeed in doing by passing this legislation. Educational programs funded by the National Science Foundation offer students opportunities for exciting studies in innovative fields of learning. From as early as grade school through to the post-doctoral level, the National Science Foundation provides the much-needed support to those students striving to achieve in the science field.

Again, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this very important legislation and thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for the time to speak here today. I look forward to the passage of this exciting bill and urge a "yes" vote from my colleagues.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD).

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4664, to authorize funds for the National Science Foundation. As a proud cosponsor of this legislation, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and the ranking members for their excellent work on this; but I also want to reinforce my strong support for the $50 million funding for the Advanced Technological Education Program in FY 2002 and $55 million for the program in 2003.

The Advanced Technological Education Program is an NSF program designed to help community colleges train high-tech workers. It is the only NSF program focused solely on community colleges. This program provides funds for both existing and new ATE programs.

These programs will become increasingly important as our economy becomes more dependent on technologically skilled workers. In fact, every single one of the top 10 fastest-growing occupations identified by the Department of Labor will require specialized knowledge in the fields of math and science. ATE programs will fund technology, math and science programs that will directly contribute to student success in those fields.

A few weeks ago my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE) and I introduced H.R. 4680, the Science Undergraduate Community College Education Enhancement Act, or, as we call it, SUCCEED. This bill will further direct ATE money to important science, math and technology two-year education programs.

Almost half of all college students in America are enrolled in community colleges, but many of the core math and science programs at these institutions are now severely underfunded. This is unacceptable, especially at a time when our knowledge-based economy depends on a workforce with a solid grounding in math and science.

The SUCCEED Act will function in several areas. First of all, it will expand the scope of existing grant programs to not only focus on the advanced upper division courses, but on the basics in math and technology skills and science skills that are necessary for success in more advanced course work.

In addition and importantly, it will expand partnerships between 2-year and 4-year institutions. Increasingly, our 2-year community colleges are partnering with 4-year institutions, and the SUCCEED Act will provide funding for integrated research between community and 4-year colleges.

This bill will also provide access to state-of-the-art equipment for our classrooms. We cannot expect our students in the community colleges to learn the kind of advanced skills they need if we do not have the fundamental infrastructure and equipment for them to learn those skills.

Finally, this bill will establish an external advisory committee to study how the effectiveness of this legislation is proceeding and to disseminate critical information to share that with other 2-year institutions.

Again, I want to thank the staff of the Committee on Science for their outstanding work, and my own staff member, Ms. Kate Sinner, for her work on this. Thanks again to the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT).

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank everyone involved with this, but none more than the gentleman I am about to introduce to consume the balance of our time. The gentleman from Michigan (Chairman SMITH) is the spark plug behind this legislation. He is serving with great distinction on that very important Subcommittee on Research, and he constantly reminds us every single day about the importance of the work we are about.

Before yielding the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman SMITH), I would like to note that we have a staff that is second to none on the Committee on Science, Republicans and Democrats, all professionals working well together to fashion the type of product that we can bring to the floor with a great deal of pride. This is one such product, and the man most responsible for it is the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) be allowed to control the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 9 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for those gracious remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I feel privileged to be allowed to be the sponsor of this legislation, H.R. 4664. But, as we all know, we have a fantastic scientific community out there, and NSF is one of the lead agencies that has done such a tremendous job. In our committee, it has been a bipartisan support, right from the get-go, with the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Research.

The last time this agency was authorized was in 1998 as part of a 3-year bill that expired at the end of fiscal year 2000. That is why I think it is so important that we move ahead with this legislation today, to make sure that the House has the kind of oversight of all agencies of government, as it is destined to do.

Let me just say that it is so clear from every evaluation and every economic analysis that the Federal investment in science and technology is about as good an investment as you can possibly make with the Americans' taxpayer money to make sure that we have the basic research for national security. Smart bombs and smart weapons and the technological ability of our economic security come from this kind of basic research.

It is also important for our economy, and we have been credited by Mr. Greenspan and many others that our economic strength is derived from the basic research that we have worked on over the last 50 years, and certainly not the least is the strength of the health in the United States.

I would like to give one quote that is very interesting, and that is from Harold Varmus, the former director of NIH. He said, "Congress is not addressing with significant vigor the compelling needs for adequately funding the National Science Foundation, which is the basis of a lot of the research and a lot of the tools they are using at NIH."

This bill is the product of 2 years of hearings and examinations of NSF activities by the Committee on Science and our Subcommittee on Research; and during this time the committee received input from prominent scientists, economists, government officials and from other experts with an interest in improving federally funded basic research.

In the end, we arrived at three principal conclusions. One, NSF is a model government agency with an exemplary record of supporting basic research within a peer-reviewed, competitive grant process that funds only the best cutting-edge research, and does so using under 5 percent of the total budget in overhead costs.

Second, as a relatively small Federal agency responsible for just 4 percent of the total Federal research development expenditures, NSF-funded research has led to a myriad of discoveries that have improved, as I mentioned, public health, strengthened our economy, and enhanced our lives and well-being in many ways we could not have imagined 30 years ago.

Three, a number of areas within NSF programs require additional funding to assure continued advancements in the Nation's scientific enterprise. Among them are funding new education initiatives, alleviating grant pressure within a system that cannot fund over 30 percent of highly rated research proposals.

Again, of all of these highly rated research proposals, we only end up being able to fund 30 percent of the excellent ideas that are coming in from all of the universities and research facilities. It is for these reasons that the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), I and every member of the Committee on Science called for significant increases in support for NSF in this legislation.

I say this is a true fiscal conservative that strongly supports the President's efforts to keep nondefense discretionary spending in check so we can fully focus our budget on the Federal Government's number one priority of defending our Nation, and basic research is part of that responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill today. Let me say this about research and what we do in the United States, and I think it needs to be said. Research is a very important part of what we do here in the United States, and it is a very important part of our economic growth.

About half of the economic growth in the United States today is as a result of research which has been funded in the past. We represent about 4 percent of the world's population, but we represent about 44 percent of the money that is spent on basic research. That is important, and there is a correlation.

I was fortunate to go and visit some of our national labs. They truly are national treasures. What they do through the National Science Foundation, not only through our labs but our universities around the country, makes a big, big difference.

A few years ago I was privileged to meet with a fellow by the name of Gene Fry. Now, Gene Fry is a researcher at a little company called 3M. Now, this probably was not original, but he said something very important that day. He said if we knew what we were doing, it would not be research.

There is a lot of truth to that. A lot of the projects that we fund at the beginning it is hard to defend. But ultimately the reason that we live in the world we live in today is because brave legislatures in the past and brave business people in the past have been willing to invest in projects that may not have made a lot of sense at the time.

I think we have to have the courage to stand up and say research is a very important responsibility to the Federal Government. We get a huge rate of return on the money that we invest in research, and we will determine today what kind of a world our children will live in. This is an important bill. I am happy to rise in support of it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I am honored to yield 6 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Research.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4664, the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 2002. I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT); the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL); and the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman SMITH) for working with me and the rest of the committee in a bipartisan manner on this important piece of legislation that makes a strong statement about our commitment to invest in America's future.

H.R. 4664 places the National Science Foundation on the path to double its budget in 5 years, which was the goal of H.R. 1472, the NSF authorization bill that I introduced last April 2001. I introduced H.R. 1472 because I strongly believed that investing in basic research, math and engineering research is essential to the future economic prosperity and global competitiveness of our country. Even after September 11, what we are depending on most now will be the kinds of technology that the research from the National Science Foundation has brought to the forefront.

The National Science Foundation plays a leading role in educating our youth in math and sciences and training the scientists and engineers of tomorrow, and the agency is working to ensure that tomorrow's high-tech workers reflect a diversity of America. It is my sincere hope that my colleagues will recognize the importance of basic research to our Nation's future and will pass H.R. 4664.

The National Science Foundation expends only 3.8 percent of the Federal research and development funds, yet this relatively small amount belies the importance of the agency to our country. The National Science Foundation provides 23 percent of the basic research funding at academic institutions. For specific research areas, the National Science Foundation's role at universities is even larger. It funds 36 percent of research in the physical sciences, 49 percent of research in the environmental sciences, 50 percent of research in engineering, 72 percent of research in mathematics, and 78 percent of research in computer science. So, clearly, the National Science Foundation plays a disproportionately important role in funding some of the most basic research areas that have implications far beyond their own academic area.

To give an idea of the quality and importance of the NSF-funded research to our Nation, consider the fact that over 100 Nobel prizes have been awarded to scientists supported by the National Science Foundation research in the fields of physics, chemistry, physiology and medicine and economics. In nearly every field of science and engineering are examples of outstanding research supported by the National Science Foundation. This research leads to critical advances in the understanding of our world and in technology that improves our lives.

For example, the National Science Foundation support at the National Center for Supercomputing Applications at the University of Illinois developed the first Internet browser that led to the explosive growth of the World Wide Web. The National Science Foundation-funded research in atmospheric chemistry identified the ozone depletion over the Antarctic, the ozone hole, as it has come to be known. NSF-funded research on mathematics and solid modeling led to the widespread use of computer-aided design and computer-aided manufacturing that has revolutionized industry and enhanced workplace productivity. These are but a few examples of the scientific breakthroughs that have been funded by the NSF in recent years, and this and other research supported by NSF ultimately strengthens our economy. The connection between research funding and the strength of the economy has been expounded by such diverse sources as former presidential science advisor Allen Bromley, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, and the Hart-Rudman Commission for National Security. Yet despite the importance of basic research to the future economic health and well-being of our country, NSF now must decline more than $1 billion worth of high quality research proposals each year. Why? Because NSF's budget is insufficient to meet the demands of our Nation's vibrant research sector.

Mr. Chairman, while it is true that everyone must learn to live within their budget, and NSF has, it is a shame that top-notch proposals go unfunded for lack of resources. It is essential that our Nation's premier science research agency has the resources it needs to fund advances that could lead to the next World Wide Web or deciphering the genome of a critically important crop. Our generation has benefitted enormously from the investment of our parents and grandparents made in basic research decades ago, and we owe it to our children to see that they enjoy the same pace of technological advancement that we have enjoyed. It is critical that we invest in basic research today that will lead to better life tomorrow.

These are but a few examples of the scientific breakthroughs that have been funded by NSF in recent years, and this and other research supported by the NSF ultimately strengthens our economy. The connection between research funding and the strength of the economy has been expounded by such diverse sources as former presidential science advisor Allen Bromley, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, former speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, and the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security.

Yet despite the importance of basic research to the future economic health and well-being of our country, NSF now must decline more than 1 billion dollar's worth of high quality research proposals each year. Why? Because NSF's budget is insufficient to meet the demands of our Nation's vibrant research sector. Mr. Chairman, while it is true that everyone must learn to live within their budget, and NSF has, it is a shame that top-notch proposals go unfunded for lack of resources.

In addition to funding basic research at our Nation's laboratories, the National Science Foundation makes essential investments in training the scientists and engineers of tomorrow. NSF research awards and direct research fellowships help train over 24,000 graduate students each year, the future scientists and engineers essential to our high-tech economy. The bill before us today seeks to strengthen NSF's graduate research fellowships by funding more research grants and increasing the average grant size and duration.

NSF programs also help to improve science education for all students and to prepare them for citizenship in a world increasingly dominated by technology. Today we continue to have manpower shortages in many high technology fields, and many industries rely on the labor and brain power of foreign nationals. The ideal way to alleviate the shortages is by ensuring that our Nation's children of all races and both genders receive the basic grounding in science and mathematics that will prepare them to pursue careers as scientists, engineers and technologists. Now, more than ever, we need to ensure that an adequate number of Americans choose careers in the sciences and engineering. We cannot allow inadequate funding to cripple NSF's efforts in this area.

Mr. Chairman, over the past few months, there has been a great deal of debate about the appropriate level of funding for the National Science Foundation. Some have proposed essentially flat levels of funding, while others have proposed a small 8.8% increase for one fiscal year. These levels are simply not enough for an agency as highly regarded and as critical to the future well-being of our Nation as the National Science Foundation. I say that we must double the budget of NSF and invest in our Nation's future. H.R. 4664 was developed in a bipartisan fashion and enjoys the strong support of the Science Committee. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Committee on Science for its work in putting together this reauthorization for the National Science Foundation. This bill shows us the path we must take to ensure that our Nation continues to lead the world in technological innovation and in scientific capacity, by doubling Federal funding for the NSF over the next 5 years, just as we have done for the National Institutes of Health.

In a widely-circulated letter last year, Dr. Harold Varmus, the former director of the NIH, made it clear that we do health research no favors when we underfund basic research in the physical sciences. Physical science disciplines are often the key not only to providing the tools used in conducting health research, but in delivering the benefits of health research to the public.

Just take a walk through any hospital surgical unit or emergency room, where you will be surrounded by more pieces of medical technology than you can count, and you will quickly understand this point.

I also want to draw the attention of Members to the bill's reauthorization of the National Science Foundation's Advanced Technology Education program. The ATE program is the only NSF program targeted to community colleges.

Associate-degree-granting colleges educate the vast majority of the three to five technicians that support each engineer, scientist, and medical doctor across this Nation.

Meeting the demand for high-tech workers by both our modernizing manufacturing sector and our new-economy enterprises requires strengthening undergraduate education in science, mathematics, and technology at associate-degree-granting colleges, where nearly half of all undergraduate college students are enrolled. That is the purpose of the ATE program, which provides grants to 2-year institutions to develop new curricula and teaching methods and materials in advanced technology fields.

I have worked on our Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies of the Committee on Appropriations to increase ATE funding, and we have enjoyed some successes. However, current funding is still under $40 million a year, and cut of $950,000 has been recommended by the administration for the next fiscal year. A more adequate authorization would offer considerable help.

Fortunately, the Committee on Science accepted an amendment offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD), to authorize the ATE program at $50 million for fiscal year 2003, with a $5 million increase for each of the next 2 fiscal years.

In fact, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) and I have introduced legislation to more broadly expand and strengthen the ATE program.

In addition to increasing funding for the program, the Science Undergraduate Community College Education Enhancement Development Act, the SUCCESS Act, H.R. 4680, would give community colleges more flexibility to develop innovative core math and science curricula, and would provide more opportunities for community college students to have research experiences at 4-year institutions.

Our bill would also establish an advisory committee, comprised of representatives from industry and academia, to evaluate the effectiveness of the ATE program and to make recommendations on how it can be improved. Also, it would promote the dissemination of ATE results to community college systems across the Nation.

While the increased authorization level for the ATE program is included in the bill before us now, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) was successful in adding the remaining provisions of H.R. 4680 to the Undergraduate Science, Mathematics, Engineering, and Technology Improvement Act, which was also recently approved by the Committee on Science.

I again congratulate the Committee on Science and our colleagues on both sides of the aisle for the fine work they have done today in bringing H.R. 4664 to the House floor. I urge all of our colleagues to support it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from California, for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support this legislation. It is, I think, very important, and I think the committee, under the leadership of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), has done an excellent job.

We heard that the National Science Foundation provides only a few percent of the total Federal research and development budget, but it provides a large fraction of the support for mathematics, biological sciences, earth sciences, social sciences, and engineering.

We have all heard about the many things that have come out of NSF research: the work in thin film technology, in genetics, in magnetic resonance imaging, CD players, printers, Taxol, and so forth.

It is also important to recognize the return on investment to this Federal investment. Economists will argue about whether the return on investment in research and development is 20 percent, 40 percent, or 60 percent. Whatever it is, it is extraordinarily high. This is one of the best things that we as a Congress can do who have been entrusted with the worthwhile expenditure of taxpayer money.

As one Member of Congress who himself has conducted NSF-funded research, and who every year that I have been in Congress has worked to see the NSF budget increased, I am very pleased to see the NSF on this faster growth path, because we can talk about funding the National Institutes of Health and other health-related research here in the United States, but unless we invest in the research that leads to improved techniques and instrumentation and the training of scientists, that investment in health research will not yield the returns that we should be getting from it.

Just today I have been having some briefings with investigative and intelligence organizations. They have reminded me just today how much they are dependent on research that is coming out of the National Science Foundation for their work in dealing with anthrax and other pathogens.

Finally, I would say the most important work that the National Science Foundation is doing is the work in our schools, particularly in the pre-college setting. The members of the committee are to be commended for putting together such a good authorization bill.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA).

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me. I would like to commend the chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on Science and the chairman and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Research for their leadership on this issue.

Investment in research and development is one of the single largest contributing factors to the Nation's past, present, and future economic growth. The U.S. high technology industry spends more on R&D than on any other industry, but because corporations feel acute pressure to focus scarce research dollars on market-driven product development, the Federal Government must play an integral role in the longer-term basic research that leads to fundamental innovations.

Federal support for basic research has contributed to the development of the internet, personal computers, the silicon chip, lasers, fiber optics, supercomputers, and magnetic resonance imaging. The first graphical web browser, high-speed networks, artificial intelligence, databases, and the graphical user interface all have their roots in government-sponsored research.

Over the past few years, funding for research in the physical sciences has declined as a fraction of overall R&D spending. Funding for the National Institutes of Health now makes up over half of all non-defense research, and the proposed research at NIH funding this year is as large as NSF's entire budget.

This funding imbalance threatens long-term research at a time when we are quickly approaching the physical limits to semiconductor performance. A new technological revolution is needed if we are going to continue improving computer performance like we have in the past few years. It is essential that we invest in basic research to provide the scientific basis for this technological revolution so that we can maintain the gains in productivity that lead to economic growth.

A sustained public and private investment in R&D will also foster a skilled American work force, stimulate new technologies, and maintain U.S. dominance in vital industries, elements critical to retaining the United States' global economic leadership in the new millennium.

The 2001 report of the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security for the 21st Century determined that "the scale and nature of the ongoing revolution in science and technology . . . pose critical national security challenges to the United States."

To address the challenge, the commission recommended a doubling of all Federal funding for science and technology research and development by 2010. I believe we should strive to achieve this goal, and I recommend and urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4664.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that it would be nice just to include myself in the good remarks made by both sides of the aisle on the importance of basic research.

One area that we have not talked about that I think is so important in NSF is it keeps young, quality minds at that university staying in research, so it encourages the talented young people in our university systems to stay on, to get their Master's degrees and their Doctor's degree.

Just in terms of sort of proving that point, if we are looking at all the Nobel Laureates in physics, in chemistry, and in economics, most every one of those individuals at one time in their career had an NSF grant. So part of the tremendous success of the program is keeping these talented young people in that research arena to do what is necessary to strengthen our economy, to improve our public health, and certainly to add to our ability to defend ourselves and our national security.

America's position as a world leader in science and education is a key element to our national security. Let me just mention in the report on national security in the 21st century, the Hart-Rudman Commission noted that and, I will quote, "The inadequacies of our systems of research and education pose a greater threat to U.S. national security over the next quarter century than any potential conventional war that we might imagine."

It is important that we move ahead, that we improve our education system, that we work more diligently than we ever have before, keeping more students in the math and sciences as they move their careers through high school and into the college arena.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to summarize by saying that I believe we have put together a strong piece of legislation that will allow Congress to demonstrate its commitment to continuing the economic gains and technological advances of recent years through support of fundamental basic research. The increase in this legislation is a sound investment and is brought by bipartisan support, was passed through both the Subcommittee on Research and the full Committee on Science by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all Members to support the bill.

I would like to point out that NSF-funded research has also directly benefited America's effort in response to the events of 9/11—supporting emergency grants pioneering the use of genomics as a tool in forensic analysis of microbes after last October's anthrax attacks. Also, an NSF-funded robotics grant led to the development of software-guided robots that were used successfully to search the rubble and locate victims at the World Trade Center Disaster site.

NSF research has also led to faster computer Magnetic Resonance Imaging the Internet, Doppler radar, discoveries of new planets, new polymers materials that are used in products ranging from clothing to automobiles, and most recently, fundamental plant genomics research that will lead to improved crop varieties that increase yields while better protecting the environment. These are just a few examples, but the list goes on and on.

I want to reiterate that NSF has supported these achievements with an efficiency that is almost unheard of in the Federal Government. NSF has been recognized for it's strong management—as the only cabinet agency to receive a "green light" rating in the President's budget. Mitch Daniels, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, has hailed NSF as "one of the true centers of excellence in government."

Let me summarize by saying that I believe we have put together a strong piece of legislation that will allow Congress to demonstrate its commitment to continuing the economic gains and technological advancements of recent years through support of fundamental basic research. The increase in this legislation is a sound investment and has broad bipartisan support, was passed through both the Research Subcommittee and the full Science Committee by voice vote, and I urge all members to support the bill.

NSF has supported the research of more than half of the United States Nobel laureates in physics, chemistry, and economics. Since 1989, 80% of NSF-funded Nobel prize winners were funded by NSF before winning the prize.

Research supported by the National Science Foundation has led to a myriad of discoveries, technologies, and products that improve our daily lives, including: a greater understanding of bacteria, viruses, and the structure of DNA; medical diagnostic tools, such as Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI); the Internet, web browsers, and fiber optics, which have revolutionized global communication; automated DNA sequencing machines; polymer materials used in products ranging from clothing to automobiles; Doppler radar used for accurate weather forecasting; artificial skin that can help recovering burn victims; economic research in game and decision theory which has led to a greater understanding of economic cycles; and discoveries of new planets, black holes, and insights into the nature of the universe.

More recently, NSF-funded research has benefited America's effort in response to the events of 9/11. An NSF-funded grant led to the development of software-guided robots that were used successfully to search the rubble and locate victims at the World Trade Center disaster site. Also, NSF supported emergency grants pioneering the use of genomics as a tool in forensic analysis of microbes after last October's anthrax attacks.

These advances have all come from an agency that receives only 4% of the total annual Federal spending for R&D.

NSF has also been the lead Federal agency in a number of national science initiatives, such as those in information technology, plant genomics, and nanotechnology.

The National Science Foundation's innovative education programs work to ensure that every American student receives a solid foundation in science and math through support for the training and education of teachers, the public, and students of all ages and backgrounds, and by supporting research into new teaching tools, curricula, and methodologies.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to voice my concern over this legislation that will double the National Science Foundation's (NSF) budget in five years. I feel that while we have taken the effort to double the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and now NSF, this committee has neglected NASA. I am supportive of our commitment to NSF and have a history of such support. At this time, however, given the lack of attention this committee has given NASA, I cannot support this particular piece of legislation.

NASA's budget has been neglected for over a decade. When one considers inflation, the NASA budget is not keeping pace. This sends the wrong message. As a medical doctor and scientist, I very much appreciate the work that NIH and NSF do, but to keep NASA out in the cold I feel is the wrong approach. No other agency has such a daring, exciting and public mission. It is time we treated NASA as a valued Federal agency instead of letting it wither on the vine.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 4664, the Investing in America's Future Act. Past investment in fundamental scientific research has fueled growth of our economy, trained our technological workforce, and provided the research needed for national and homeland security. It is time to ensure our future prosperity and security by recognizing the important work performed by the National Science Foundation (NSF), the only agency devoted to supporting basic science research in science, math, and engineering across all fields and science and math education at all levels.

This legislation will double the NSF's budget over the next five years. Increasing funding for the NSF demonstrates the recognition of the lasting benefits that basic research provides to our economic and national security. The increase would also be used to expand core science programs to fund highly ranked grant proposals, pursue new initiatives like nanotechnology and biocomplexity, and fully fund K–12 education programs that have been authorized by the House of Representatives. In addition, the bill provides greater transparency to the process through which major research and facilities construction projects are evaluated, prioritized, and selected for funding by requiring the Director to develop a list of proposed projects, ranking the relative priority of each for funding. This will allow Congress and NSF to expand its investments in cutting-edge research initiatives and to preserve its core research and education programs.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly believe that investing in basic science, math, and engineering research is essential to the future economic prosperity and global competitiveness of our country and an important investment for the future. For these reasons, I support this legislation and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of H.R. 4664, I rise in support of this important bill that will put the National Science Foundation on a track to double its budget in five years.

I thank Chairman BOEHLERT and my colleagues in the Science Committee for their hard work on this bill.

I think we all recognize that investing in basic research is critical for a strong economy and national security. In the past 50 years, half of U.S. economic productivity can be attributed to technological innovation and the science that has supported it. Despite this fact, over the last two decades Federal investment in R&D has fallen by one-third as a share of the GDP.

This bill will help put us on the right track. Federal investment in science underpins our global competitiveness and our prosperity. NSF-funded research made possible the discovery of the "ozone hole," developed the first Web browser, advanced the field of molecular genetics, and funded much of the early research leading to the development of speech activation and recognition technology. Less directly but no less importantly, NSF is often the major source of support for education and training of Ph.D. scientists and engineers, many of whom have gone on to make major private-sector contributions in the development of cell phones, fiber optics, and computer assisted design.

NSF provides fully 23% of total Federal support for university research—or nearly half excluding NIH sponsored biomedical research. From sources such as former science advisor to the first President Bush, Allen Bromley, and Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, to the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security, we hear that Federal funding for research is a necessary precondition for continued economic success and security in our high technology economy.

I think former Speaker Newt Gingrich said in best in a 1999 Washington Post op-ed. He wrote that "Out of our sense of patriotism and our own enlightened self-interest, we should . . . insist that Federal investment in scientific research be doubled over the next five years. . . . Anything less will weaken the future for all of us."

Mr. Chairman, I agree, and I urge support of this important bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the Members of the Science Committee, subcommittee, sponsor, and all the Members who worked so hard on H.R. 4664, the Investing in America's Future Act of 2002.

I would like to take this opportunity today to voice my strong support for this legislation.

This legislation authorizes additional funding to a very important organization, the National Science Foundation.

The bills directs NASA to jointly establish an Astronomy and Astrophysics Advisory Committee to assess and provide recommendations regarding the coordination of astronomy and astrophysics programs at each agency.

This is one of the several provisions in this bill that would strengthen NASA. NASA plays a huge role in the 18th Congressional District, as many of my constituents are employed there.

The continued development of this nation's science program ought to be one of this nation's top priorities. By establishing a joint committee on astronomy to assess coordination of astronomy programs between the agencies and to assess the activities of the agencies relative to recommendations of the surveys conducted by the National Academy of Sciences, this bill would further make the science program accountable to Congress.

As a member of the Science Committee, I can attest to the fact that we have held numerous hearings investigating and asking relevant questions on how to best fund the NSF and how to best make it accessible and accountable to Congress.

By focusing directly on the research initiatives such as information technology, nanoscale science and engineering, and mathematical sciences, as well as the Major Research Instrumentation program, H.R. 4664 further enhances the research and education departments of the National Science Foundation.

Let me also voice my strong support for the funding of minority institutions in science education. This provision will open the door for many future scientists to carry the torch for many years to come.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation, which will reauthorize the National Science Foundation for the next three years. This bill is of the highest priority to me and to many colleges and universities in my district. I've already heard from students, professors and administrators from the University of Wisconsin who have told me that a lack of serious commitment to science funding and research would not only stunt the growth and education of many qualified students, but would also seriously cripple some of their most critical research efforts. This is why I'm delighted with the commitment in this legislation to increase NSF funding by 15 percent each year for the next three years. This commitment is similar to the highly successfully funding commitment that doubled the National Institutes of Health budget over the past five years.

The NSF funds 25% of the basic research conducted in universities across the nation, and a considerably higher percentage in selected fields. The NSF funds 425 grants for well over $60 million at the University of Wisconsin-Madison alone, helping to make UW-Madison one of the top research universities in the country. NSF grants and fellowships also help train over 24,000 graduate students each year, many of whom go on to make major contributions in academia and industry. University research funded by the NSF trains new generations of scientists and engineers, but without the type of funding increase outlined in this legislation, universities will be forced to limit the number of graduate students that they are able to admit to these programs.

One example of a thriving NSF project in my district is the IceCube Neutrino telescope, which is headed by UW-Madison. When completed, this groundbreaking new telescope will look deep into our universe in ways that traditional telescopes cannot. It is truly on the cutting edge of astronomical research and will allow us to view the universe in an entirely new and innovative manner. Furthermore, IceCube has been subjected to exhaustive peer review and is one of many shining examples of the sound science and basic research that the NSF successfully fosters.

It is my sincere hope that funding levels outlined in this legislation are met when it comes time to fund the NSF. Science funding for research should be and often is a result of bipartisanship. I am pleased that this is the case today. In that spirit, I urge a yes vote on this legislation and urge appropriators to fully fund the NSF at these new levels.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of a bill designed to improve the security, economy, and standard of living of all Americans, the Investing in America's Future Act, H.R. 4664. The bill accomplishes this by putting the nation's premier science agency, the National Science Foundation, on track to double its budget in five years.

Mr. Chairman, it is no secret that America has long recognized that its long-term strength and security, and its ability to recover and sustain high levels of economic growth, depends on maintaining its edge in scientific achievement and technological innovation. Biomedical advances have permitted us to live longer, healthier, and more productively. Advances in agriculture technology have permitted us to be able to feed more people at a cheaper cost. The information revolution can be seen today in the advanced instruments schools are using to instruct our children and in the vast information resources that are opened up as a result of the linkages created by a networked global society. Our children today can grow up to know, see, and read more, be more diverse, and have more options in their lives for learning and growing. Other emerging technologies—such as nanotechnology—have untold potential to make our lives more existing, secure, prosperous, and challenging.

Many companies also recognize this and they, therefore, focus their industrial, economic, and security policies on the nurturing and diffusion of technological advancement through all levels of society in a deliberate fashion. Countries that follow this path of nurturing innovation focus a lot of their efforts into recruiting and training the very best engineers and scientists, ensuring that a pipeline which pumps talented and imaginative minds and skills is connected to the needs of the country's socio-economic and security enterprise.

It always pays to be mindful of the fact—especially in the wake of the September 11 events—that there is a strong and tight linkage between our national security and the level of science and technology proficiency in America. Our strength and leadership in the world is based on the might of our defense, strength of our economy, and the quality of our education system. Without any one of these three components the global preeminence of the nation suffers. These three components are, in turn, maintained on a foundation of strong leadership in the business of scientific and technological innovation, which keeps the engines of progress moving forward.

To remain a strong nation, we must ensure that the single most important element that keeps us dynamic, innovative, prosperous, and secure—and therefore strong—is there for us: our science and technology enterprise. In short, we need to support the NSF and we need to support this bill.

I am honored to be a sponsor of this important legislation in the United States House of Representatives and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 4664, the "Investing in America's Future Act." This bill reauthorizes the National Science Foundation (NSF) for three years, increasing its funding by 15% each year. Today we are taking an important step forward by enhancing our commitment to our nation's science enterprise and setting a long-term goal of doubling the budget of NSF.

The National Science Foundation is the only Federal agency devoted to supporting basic research in science, math, and engineering across all fields and science and math education at all levels. In fact, NSF funds 25% of the basic research conducted in U.S. universities, and a considerably higher percentage in selected fields. NSF grants and fellowships help train over 24,000 graduate students each year, many of whom go on to make major contributions in academia and industry.

My district is home to one of our nation's premier scientific research institutions, the California Institute of Technology (Caltech), and one of the most prominent beneficiaries of NSF grant funding. In fiscal year 2001, Caltech received 31% of its total federal agency research support from NSF, totaling near $44 million. And Caltech is not alone. In fiscal year 1999, NSF provided 16% of the total federal research and development funds provided to ALL California universities, an impressive sum of $367 million.

By increasing NSF funding, we will enable this fine institution to expand core science programs, fund highly ranked grant proposals that would otherwise go unfunded, and pursue new initiatives such as nanotechnology and biocomplexity. We must continue to support the backbone of our new economy—fundamental scientific research and education—by supporting the National Science Foundation and its many groundbreaking endeavors.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4664 and to remain steadfast in our commitment to our nation's science enterprise.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and each section is considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there any amendments to section 1?

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the National Science Board established under section 2 of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 (42 U.S.C. 1861).

(2) DIRECTOR.—The term "Director" means the Director of the National Science Foundation.

(3) FOUNDATION.—The term "Foundation" means the National Science Foundation.

(4) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term "institution of higher education" has the meaning given that term in section 101(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001(a)).

(5) NATIONAL RESEARCH FACILITY.—The term "national research facility" means a research facility funded by the Foundation which is available, subject to appropriate policies allocating access, for use by all scientists and engineers affiliated with research institutions located in the United States.

(6) UNITED STATES.—The term "United States" means the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) FISCAL YEAR 2003.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation $5,515,260,000 for fiscal year 2003.

(A) $4,138,440,000 shall be made available to carry out Research and Related Activities, of which—

(i) $704,000,000 shall be for networking and information technology research;

(ii) $238,450,000 shall be for the Nanoscale Science and Engineering Priority Area;

(iii) $60,090,000 shall be for the Mathematical Sciences Priority Area; and

(iv) $75,900,000 shall be for Major Research Instrumentation;

(B) $1,006,250,000 shall be made available for Education and Human Resources, of which—

(i) $50,000,000 shall be for the Advanced Technological Education Program established under section 3 of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i); and

(ii) $30,000,000 shall be for the Minority Serving Institutions Undergraduate Program;

(C) $152,350,000 shall be made available for Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction;

(D) $210,160,000 shall be made available for Salaries and Expenses; and

(E) $8,060,000 shall be made available for the Office of Inspector General.

(b) FISCAL YEAR 2004.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation $6,342,550,000 for fiscal year 2004.

(A) $4,735,600,000 shall be made available to carry out Research and Related Activities, of which—

(i) $774,000,000 shall be for networking and information technology research;

(ii) $286,140,000 shall be for the Nanoscale Science and Engineering Priority Area;

(iii) $90,090,000 shall be for the Mathematical Sciences Priority Area; and

(iv) $85,000,000 shall be for Major Research Instrumentation;

(B) $1,157,190,000 shall be made available for Education and Human Resources, of which $55,000,000 shall be for the Advanced Technological Education Program established under section 3 of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i);

(C) $225,000,000 shall be made available for Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction;

(D) $216,460,000 shall be made available for Salaries and Expenses; and

(E) $8,300,000 shall be made available for the Office of Inspector General.

(c) FISCAL YEAR 2005.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation $7,293,930,000 for fiscal year 2005.

(A) $5,445,940,000 shall be made available to carry out Research and Related Activities;

(B) $1,330,770,000 shall be made available for Education and Human Resources;

(C) $285,710,000 shall be made available for Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction;

(D) $222,960,000 shall be made available for Salaries and Expenses; and

(E) $8,550,000 shall be made available for the Office of Inspector General.

SEC. 4. OBLIGATION OF MAJOR RESEARCH EQUIPMENT FUNDS.

(a) FISCAL YEAR 2003.—None of the funds authorized under section 3(a)(2)(C) may be obligated until 30 days after the first report required under section 7(a)(2) is transmitted to the Congress.

(b) FISCAL YEAR 2004.—None of the funds authorized under section 3(b)(2)(C) may be obligated until 30 days after the report required by June 15, 2003, under section 7(a)(2) is transmitted to the Congress.

(c) FISCAL YEAR 2005.—None of the funds authorized under section 3(c)(2)(C) may be obligated until 30 days after the report required by June 15, 2004, under section 7(a)(2) is transmitted to the Congress.

SEC. 5. ANNUAL PLAN FOR ALLOCATION OF FUNDING.

Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of legislation providing for the annual appropriation of funds for the Foundation, the Director shall submit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a plan for the allocation of funds authorized by this Act for the corresponding fiscal year. The portion of the plan pertaining to Research and Related Activities shall include a description of how the allocation of funding—

(1) will affect the average size and duration of research grants supported by the Foundation by field of science, mathematics, and engineering;

(2) will affect trends in research support for major fields and subfields of science, mathematics, and engineering, including for emerging multidisciplinary research areas; and

(3) is designed to achieve an appropriate balance among major fields and subfields of science, mathematics, and engineering.

SEC. 6. PROPORTIONAL REDUCTION.

(a) OVERALL AMOUNTS.—If the amount appropriated pursuant to section 3(a)(1), (b)(1), or (c)(1) is less than the amount authorized under that paragraph, the amount available under each subparagraph of paragraph (2) of that subsection shall be reduced by the same proportion.

(b) RESEARCH AND RELATED ACTIVITIES AMOUNTS.—If the amount appropriated pursuant to section 3(a)(2)(A) or (b)(2)(A) is less than the amount authorized under that subparagraph, the amount available under each clause of that subparagraph shall be reduced by the same proportion.

SEC. 7. NATIONAL RESEARCH FACILITIES.

(a) PRIORITIZATION OF PROPOSED MAJOR RESEARCH EQUIPMENT AND FACILITIES CONSTRUCTION.—

(1) DEVELOPMENT OF PRIORITIES.—

(A) LIST.—The Director shall develop a list indicating by number the relative priority for funding under the Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction account that the Director assigns to each project the Board has approved for inclusion in a future budget request. The Director shall submit the list to the Board for approval.

(B) UPDATES.—The Director shall update the list prepared under paragraph (1) each time the Board approves a new project that would receive funding under the Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction account and as necessary to prepare reports under paragraph (2). The Director shall submit any updated list to the Board for approval.

(2) ANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and not later than each June 15th thereafter, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report containing—

(A) the most recent Board-approved priority list developed under paragraph (1);

(B) a description of the criteria used to develop such list; and

(C) a description of the major factors for each project that determined its ranking on the list, based on the application of the criteria described pursuant to subparagraph (B).

(3) CRITERIA.—The criteria described pursuant to paragraph (2)(B) shall include, at a minimum—

(A) scientific merit;

(B) broad societal need and probable impact;

(C) consideration of the results of formal prioritization efforts by the scientific community;

(D) readiness of plans for construction and operation;

(E) international and interagency commitments; and

(F) the order in which projects were approved by the Board for inclusion in a future budget request.

(b) FACILITIES PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 201(a)(1) of the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 1998 (42 U.S.C. 1862l(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall prepare, and include as part of the Foundation's annual budget request to Congress, a plan for the proposed construction of, and repair and upgrades to, national research facilities, including full life-cycle cost information.".

(2) CONTENTS OF PLAN.—Section 201(a)(2) of the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 1998 (42 U.S.C. 1862l(a)(2)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by inserting ", including costs for instrumentation development" after "described in paragraph (1)";

(C) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting a semicolon; and

"(D) for each project funded under the Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction account—

"(i) estimates of the total project cost (from planning to commissioning); and

"(ii) the source of funds, including Federal funding identified by appropriations category and non-Federal funding;

"(E) estimates of the full life-cycle cost of each national research facility;

"(F) information on any plans to retire national research facilities; and

"(G) estimates of funding levels for grants supporting research that will make use of each national research facility.".

(3) DEFINITION.—Section 2 of the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 1998 (42 U.S.C. 1862k note) is amended—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (5) as paragraphs (4) through (6), respectively; and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) FULL LIFE-CYCLE COST.—The term 'full life-cycle cost' means all costs of development, procurement, construction, operations and support, and shut down costs, without regard to funding source and without regard to what entity manages the project.".

(c) PROJECT MANAGEMENT.—No national research facility project funded under the Major Research Equipment and Facilities Construction account shall be managed by an individual whose appointment to the Foundation is temporary.

SEC. 8. MAJOR RESEARCH INSTRUMENTATION.

The Foundation shall conduct a review and assessment of the Major Research Instrumentation Program and provide a report to Congress on its findings and recommendations within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act. The report shall include—

(1) estimates of the needs, by major field of science and engineering, of institutions of higher education for the types of research instrumentation that are eligible for funding under the guidelines of the Major Research Instrumentation Program;

(2) the distribution of awards and funding levels by year and by major field of science and engineering for the Major Research Instrumentation Program, since the inception of the Program; and

(3) an analysis of the impact of the Major Research Instrumentation Program on the research instrumentation needs that were documented in the Foundation's 1994 survey of academic research instrumentation needs.

SEC. 9. ASTRONOMY AND ASTROPHYSICS ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Foundation and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall jointly establish an Astronomy and Astrophysics Advisory Committee (in this section referred to as the "Advisory Committee").

(b) DUTIES.—The Advisory Committee shall—

(1) assess, and make recommendations regarding, the coordination of astronomy and astrophysics programs of the Foundation and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration;

(2) assess, and make recommendations regarding, the status of the activities of the Foundation and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration as they relate to the recommendations contained in the National Research Council's 2001 report entitled "Astronomy and Astrophysics in the New Millennium", and the recommendations contained in subsequent National Research Council reports of a similar nature; and

(3) not later than March 15 of each year, transmit a report to the Director, the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Congress on the Advisory Committee's findings and recommendations under paragraphs (1) and (2).

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—The Advisory Committee shall consist of 13 members, none of whom shall be a Federal employee, including—

(1) 5 members selected by the Foundation;

(2) 5 members selected by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; and

(3) 3 members selected by the members selected under paragraphs (1) and (2).

(d) SELECTION PROCESS.—Initial selections under subsection (c)(1) and (2) shall be made within 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act. Initial selections under subsection (c)(3) shall be made within 5 months after the date of the enactment of this Act. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner as provided in subsection (c).

(e) CHAIRPERSON.—The Advisory Committee shall select a chairperson from among its members.

(f) COORDINATION.—The Advisory Committee shall coordinate with the advisory bodies of other Federal agencies, such as the Department of Energy, which may engage in related research activities.

(g) COMPENSATION.—The members of the Advisory Committee shall serve without compensation, but shall receive travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in accordance with sections 5702 and 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(h) MEETINGS.—The Advisory Committee shall convene, in person or by electronic means, at least 4 times a year.

(i) QUORUM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a majority of the members serving on the Advisory Committee shall constitute a quorum for purposes of conducting the business of the Advisory Committee.

(2) EXCEPTION.—The selection of a member under subsection (c)(3) shall require a vote of ¾ of the members appointed under subsection (c)(1) and (2).

(j) DURATION.—Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Advisory Committee.

SEC. 10. BOARD MEETINGS.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to ensure that the Board complies with the requirements of section 552b of title 5, United States Code, that all meetings, with the exception of specific narrow statutory exemptions, be open to the public.

(b) COMPLIANCE AUDIT.—The Inspector General of the National Science Foundation shall conduct an annual audit of the compliance by the Board with the requirements described in subsection (a). The audit shall examine the extent to which the proposed and actual content of closed meetings is consistent with those requirements.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than February 15 of each year, the Inspector General of the National Science Foundation shall transmit to the Congress the audit required under subsection (b) along with recommendations for corrective actions that need to be taken to achieve fuller compliance with the requirements described in subsection (a), and recommendations on how to ensure public access to the Board's deliberations.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. RIVERS

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. RIVERS:

SEC. 11. SCHOLARSHIP ELIGIBILITY.

The Director shall not exclude part-time students from eligibility for scholarships under the Computer Science, Engineering, and Mathematics Scholarship (CSEMS) program.

Ms. RIVERS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment that will offer relief in some very complicated lives. The NSF currently administers the Computer Science, Engineering and Mathematics Scholarships program, which was established by the American Competitiveness and Workforce Improvement Act of 1998.

This program assists students training to enter the high-tech workforce in computer science, computer technology, engineering, engineering technology. or mathematics. Unfortunately, NSF requires that students be enrolled full time as students, precluding working students, especially older students who have full time jobs and families, from qualifying for these scholarships. As someone who attended college and law school while juggling work and family obligations, I know firsthand how much good a change like this would do for folks who are working so hard.

The data clearly shows that traditional full-time students are no longer the overwhelming majority of those attending undergraduate institutions. The U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Education Statistics found in 1999, the most recent data available, that of the 15 million students here in the United States, nearly 6 million, or 41 percent, were attending on a part-time basis. According to the current population survey conducted by the Census Bureau, the greatest percentage rise in college attendance was by women 30 and over, 2.3 million new students. Approximately 23 percent of all male college and graduate students were age 30 or older.

The National Center for Education Statistics has estimated that in 2000, students 25 or older outnumbered those younger than 25. And according to the American Association of Community Colleges, community colleges in this country enroll over 10 million students, that is 44 percent of all United States undergrads, and 63 percent of those attending community college are part-time students.

The average age of a student at a community college is now 29 years old. Furthermore, more than 80 percent of community college students balance studies with full-time or part-time work.

My amendment simply states that NSF's CSEMS program would be open to students enrolled in appropriate programs less than full time. The expansion of the CSEMS program will open the doors of opportunity to those who want to acquire or finish degrees in the very fields we need the most workers, high technology. Add flexibility to the program and allow university administrators the discretion to help those who need the help most, regardless of whether they are an 8-, 10-, 12-, or 16-credit student per quarter. It would also enable NSF to administer all of the scholarship funds it currently has available under this program.

I understand that much of this money sits unused due to lack of advertising, which is compounded due to the exclusion of part-time students. This amendment would fix the problem.

In my home State of Michigan, several schools have received CSEMS program grants, including the University of Michigan that I represent, Grand Valley State University, Western State University, Central Michigan University, Kettering University, Lake Superior State University, and the University of Detroit. All of these institutions enroll part-time students, but none of those students are eligible for this program.

We should extend the same assistance to them as their full-time colleagues receive. Having access to the CSEMS scholarship can make a significant difference when it comes to making a choice about pursuing a degree or not. The availability of Federal help in financing my education allowed me to go from being a teen mom working in low-wage jobs to being a Member of this august body. Education made the difference.

Let us open the door to success just a little bit wider so more Americans can walk through it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. RIVERS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman is correct. More and more of our students are adult and are part-time. It is a good amendment, and we accept the amendment.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my colleague from Michigan's amendment. This amendment seeks to expand educational opportunities for working Americans in the sciences, mathematics, and engineering.

NSF's Computer Science, Engineering, and Mathematics Scholarship (CSEMS) Program was established to support financially needy post-secondary students pursuing careers in the high-tech sector. The acute shortage of trained scientists and engineers in our country is well documented, and critical sectors of our economy find it necessary to import high-tech labor from other countries under the H–1 B visa program.

NSF is doing a great deal to address the shortage of home-grown scientists and engineers, but currently, the CSEMS program is only eligible to full-time students. The expansion of the eligibility of the CSEMS program to include part-time students will have two important results. The first is that it addresses our nation's need for more scientists and engineers in key sectors of our economy. The second is that it provides talented, motivated, and economically needy students with the resources they need to improve their quality of life and fulfill their dreams.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. WOOLSEY

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. WOOLSEY:

(d) BIOSAFETY RESEARCH.—Of the amount authorized under subsection (a)(2)(A), $15,000,000, and of the amount authorized under subsection (b)(2)(A), $20,000,000, shall be available for support of fundamental research in areas related to assessing biosafety. For purposes of this subsection, the term "biosafety" means safety with respect to the effects of biological research on organisms and the environment.

Ms. WOOLSEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would create a research program within the National Science Foundation to address a significant gap of knowledge on biosafety, a gap of knowledge that must be filled. The amendment establishes the Biosafety Research Program, so we can understand in scientific terms the effects of altering biological systems. It funds the basic science needed to understand the effects of introducing new plant and animal varieties through both traditional breeding techniques and through new methods of biotechnology in our agriculture, horticulture and aquaculture systems.

For thousands of years we have experimented with plants, animals, microbes, and ecological systems in an effort to survive and prosper through the development of food and fiber sources, medicines and other materials essential to our well-being.

Essentially, we have been moving our biological system around, sometimes intentionally, sometimes not intentionally.

Here I use the term "biological systems" in the broadest sense. A biological system could be a set of genes, a whole organism, an ecosystem, or a group of ecosystems that co-exist in the landscape. It is no secret, Mr. Chairman, that a contentious debate has surrounded the introduction of biotechnology products. The debate has been characterized more by statements of hope by the advocates and fear from opponents than by science-based information. It is time we replace the rhetoric, the rhetoric on both sides, with a firm understanding of how these varieties are likely to operate in the real world.

With the adoption of my amendment, the Biosafety Research Program will provide an identifiable pool of research funds for scientists to ask the basic research questions that could prevent unintended scenarios. I want my colleagues to know that this program will not fund risk assessment. It will not fund monitoring or the development or evaluation of risk-management strategies. Those activities in the area of applied research are not within the NSF mission. They are and should be supported by programs at USDA, EPA, and FDA, the entities charged with reviewing and regulating products being introduced into the market.

The program my amendment creates in NSF is not a substitute for increased funding in these other agencies; however, I do believe that the applied research programs of these agencies need to be increased also to address the questions the public is asking about these new products.

Before I close, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to several recent reports from the National Academy of Sciences on invasive species and agriculture biotechnology that have called for more research in this areas, including one released earlier this year. My amendment closely follows the recommendations contained in these academy reports. I also have a series of excerpts from these recent reports that I will insert into the RECORD at this time.

QUOTATIONS FROM NAS REPORTS

"The committee realizes that there remain some uncertainties regarding the use of pest-protected plants, including transgenic pest-protected plants. These uncertainties can lead to ambiguities in regulation and often force agencies to base their decisions on minimal data sets. Additional research should continue to refine and improve risk assessment methods and procedures and continue to develop additional data on both conventional and transgenic pest-protected plant products." (p. 139, NAS 2000)

"Research to increase our understanding of the population biology, genetics, and community ecology of the target pests should be conducted, so that more ecologically and evolutionary sustainable approaches to pest management with pest-protected plants can be developed. Knowledge of pests' roles in the larger biological community (for example, their role as food sources for non-target organisms or their roles as predators of other agriculturally relevant pests) will allow us to anticipate better the indirect effects of declines in the pests due to both conventional and transgenic pest-protected plants. Knowledge of the pest population biology will enable prediction of the types of pest-protection mechanisms that would most efficiently reduce a target organism's pest status and would help us to design more accurate resistance management plans.

Research to assess gene flow and its potential consequences should be conducted . . . more ecological and agricultural research is needed on the following: weed distribution and abundance (past and present), key factors that regulate weed population dynamics in managed and unmanaged areas, the likely impact of specific, novel resistance traits on weed abundance in managed and unmanaged areas, and rates at which resistance genes from the crop would be likely to spread among weed populations." (p. 140–141 NAS 2000)

RECOMMENDATIONS

"In cases when crucial scientific data are lacking about the potential impacts of gene flow on wild or weedy relatives, the committee recommends delaying approval of deregulation pending sufficient data, establishing a scientifically rigorous monitoring program in key areas to check for undesirable effects of resistance transgenes after the transgenic pest-protected plant is commercialized, or restricting the initial areas where the plants can be grown." (p. 141–142 NAS 2000)

"APHIS jurisdiction has been restricted to the U.S. borders. However, in an era of globalization, environmental effects of transgenic crops on the ecosystems of developing countries will be an important component of risk analysis. As exemplified by the effects of the Green Revolution varieties of wheat and rice, novel crop genes often have indirect effects on the environment. These indirect effects can occur because the new crop traits enable changes in other agricultural practices and technologies that impact the environment. They also can indirectly affect vertical integration of agriculture and equality of access to food. Society cannot ignore the fact that people who lack food security often cause major effects on both agricultural and nonagricultural environments, so in a broad context the positive or negative effects of transgenes on human well-being can be seen as an environmental effect.

"Environmental concerns raised by some of the first transgenic crops (e.g. gene flow, disruption of the genome, non-target effects) could be ameliorated by expanding our knowledge base in specific areas of molecular biology, ecology, and socioeconomic. Furthermore, such an expanded knowledge base could lead to the production of transgenic plants that would improve the environment. To increase knowledge in relevant areas the committee recommends substantial increases in public-sector investment in the following research areas: (1) improvement in precommercialization testing methods; (2) improvement in transgenic methods that will minimize risks; (3) research to identify transgenic plants traits that would provide environmental benefits; (4) research to develop transgenic plants with such traits; (5) research to improve the environmental risk characterization processes; and (6) research on the social, economic, and value-based issues affecting environmental impacts of transgenic crops." (p. 16 NAS 2002)

"The committee cannot presently judge whether extensive commercialization of transgenic—and other crops bearing novel traits—will significantly perturb agroecosystems or neighboring ecosystems because of major gaps in our knowledge of these systems." (p. 23 NAS 2002)

"The committee finds, . . . that specific types of transgenic and conventional crops can pose unique environmental hazards. Also, the committee finds that there are good arguments for regulating all transgenic crops. To be effective such a regulatory system must have an efficient and accurate method for rapidly evaluating all transgenic plants to separate those that require additional regulatory oversight from those that do not." (p. 52 NAS 2002)

"Perhaps more than anything else, the experience with commercialization of transgenic crops has revealed gaps in the knowledge base for understanding and measuring the environmental risks of crop production, irrespective of whether recombinant DNA technologies have been applied." p. 254 NAS 2002

"Formal research support in the United States for the study of environmental impacts of transgenic plants has been sparse." p. 255 NAS 2002

In reference to USDA's Biotechnology Risk Assessment Research Grants program:

". . . The program has allocated no more than a few million dollars for research each year. Recently, the USDA's Initiative for Future Agriculture and Food Systems (IFAFS) program has included a competition for funding research, education, and extension on the management of environmental risks of agricultural biotechnology. Both funding programs have substantial limitations—BRARGP because its focus is only on assessment and because the total amount of funding is so low; IFAFS because the focus is only for risk management and the funding program itself is anticipated to have a short life. Neither program funds monitoring or research related to monitoring.

"Research on the environmental impacts of transgenic plants can be accomplished through other funding sources if the research questions asked have general significance. For example, issues directly associated with the impacts of transgenic plants may often be associated with critical, but largely unanswered, questions in other fields. For example, whether or not the introgression of pest resistance transgenes into wild populations will result in the evolution of weediness or invasiveness is directly associated with important questions in population biology regarding the genetic and ecological causes and correlates of invasiveness (Traynor and Westwood 1999)." (p. 255 NAS 2002)

"Recommendation 7.3: Significant public-sector investment is called for in the following research areas: improvement in risk analysis methodologies and protocols; improvement in transgenic methods that will reduce risks and improve benefits to the environment; research to develop and improve monitoring for effects in the environment; and research on the social, economic, and value-based issues affecting environmental impacts of transgenic crops." Mr. Chairman, we all live in a world in which we move things around with increasing frequency and speed. So we must make at least a modest investment in understanding how those movements are likely to affect our world. That is why I am asking my chairman and my colleagues to support this amendment, because it is the right thing to do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we must reluctantly rise in opposition to the amendment from my very good friend from California. I certainly agree with the gentlewoman that the National Science Foundation should conduct basic research that will enable us to understand better the impacts of biotechnology and other biological research on organisms and on the environment. In fact, NSF already conducts such research. Indeed, this House passed a bill just a few weeks ago that charged NSF, again, with conducting such research. That bill introduced by myself and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), had been approved by the Committee on Science. So I wholeheartedly endorse the idea that NSF should fund this kind of research and they will.

My problems with the amendment are narrower, but still significant. First the numbers in the amendment are entirely arbitrary. They may be too large; they may be too small. We have no idea. We have never looked into it. In an area this important, I do not think we should be pulling numbers out of thin air.

Second, NSF funds a lot of different scientific disciplines and subdisciplines. We chose not to pick out many of these specific areas in this bill for congressionally or politically targeted spending levels because once we go down that road, there is no end to it. We want to give the foundation, the scientific community the maximum flexibility that has served us so well.

So generally we have limited ourselves to initiatives proposed by the President in areas on which the House has previously acted. The kind of research that the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is highlighting is important, but not necessarily more important than areas of research we are not citing by name in this bill. We need to limit the number of areas of science that we single out for set-asides in this bill.

Let me say in conclusion, and maybe thirdly, I have a process problem with this amendment.

We have worked on this bill in a bipartisan manner for almost 2 years. The bill passed unanimously in committee because of lengthy bipartisan discussions. I am not eager to add new issues on the House floor. We are poised now to pass a bill that can move swiftly through both the House and the other body, and I think many of us do not want to add anything that has even the potential to slow our progress.

So I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment. It is unnecessary and could slow passage of an important measure, and I will work with the gentlewoman to ensure that the area of science she is seeking to protect continues to receive its due from the National Science Foundation.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, two things. First, this would have been part of the debate in the committee had I not been asked not to bring it up in committee but to bring it as an amendment to the floor, and I was asked by the majority party to do that. So please be clear, this is not something I did not want to bring to the committee.

Second of all, when my colleague talks about the funding being arbitrary, our decision on this funding came from the same place that our whole committee's decision to double the funding for NSF came from. We do not know how much money we need. We know we need more, and I know with my amendment we need something. So I want to get started and the public wants to get started so that we can scientifically decide what is good and what is not good.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, to make it clear, it is somewhat of a different amendment than the gentlewoman submitted in the Committee on Science, but even more and above that, it seems to me like we should agree that if we can leave NSF and the scientific community and the peer review process to do and decide on these initiatives and how much is reasonable, the legislation that we passed recently by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) and myself does not say we are going in one area or the other. It says do more research. Let us leave that up to the scientific community in deciding how much money should be spent in any particular area of this biological research.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in support of this particular amendment, but I would like to ask a specific question relative to an area of research that might be related to this program, and so I offer to the sponsor this question. Is it the gentlewoman from California's (Ms. WOOLSEY) anticipation that this particular biosafety research program would provide research that would better understand why plants and animals become invasive pests when they are introduced in new habitats?

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. RIVERS. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly my intention.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for her response.

I note that the National Academy of Sciences recently released a report called Predicting Invasions of Nonindigenous Plants and Plant Pests. In that document they state, "In spite of a long history of interest in biological invasion, scientific inquiry in invasion is still nascent. Progress in understanding and predicting invasions will depend on how well the insights of investigators with diverse training can be coalesced and directed to decipher the myriad combinations of immigrant species, new ranges, and novel circumstances that can produce a biological invasion. The last 10 years has seen the emergence of a broad consensus that the prediction of biological invasion is a field presenting national need. It will take some time, however, to generate the predictive principles on which policy-makers, regulators, the scientific community, and the public can have confidence."

They go on to say that, "The challenge of constructing a scientific basis for predicting the risk associated with nonindigenous species needs to be met by a significant national effort, including other agencies within the USDA, other branches of the Federal Government responsible for research and land management, agricultural and natural resource agencies of State governments and the scientific community at large."

I am very pleased to support this bill, with emphasis on invasive species, because in Michigan we have a terrible problem. When the zebra mussels hitched a ride in ship ballast water and were introduced to the Great Lakes and other bodies of water, their populations exploded. These animals are continuing to cause serious ecological and economic damage in my region, and I believe we need much more research to understand the basic biology and ecology of this organism if we are ever to hope to control it.

I also believe that we need much more information to help us identify potentially invasive species before they are introduced to new ecosystems. We could avoid a great deal of harm and expense if we were able to devise means to evaluate the potential invasiveness of new plants and animals.

I believe that the gentlewoman from California's (Ms. WOOLSEY) proposal is a sound one that will bring us forward in the debate around invasive species and understanding our ecology in general. I urge Members to support this amendment.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) might also be relating to this, but in the bioterrorism bill that we passed a couple of weeks ago, we did include over $190 million to USDA, additional funding to the Department of Energy, specifically for this purpose. So that bioterrorism bill included a lot of the goals that I hear some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle suggest we need.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I know that the author and the supporters of this amendment are very sincere. They feel very strongly about the issues, but I want to clarify something here for the rest of the Members.

We are really not talking about zebra mussels in this amendment, and we are not talking about purple loosestrife. What we are really talking about is whether or not we are going to take actions on the floor of the House of Representatives to limit the amount of research that can be done on biology and new plant species and things that are happening in biotechnology.

What that says is we are not spending enough on that area now, and the truth of the matter is there is nothing in this authorization today that would limit the amount that the National Science Foundation could spend on these kinds of programs, but it is, in fact, a way of tinkering. So this is redundant. It is unneeded and, worse than that, it is politicizing what I think has been a very nonpolitical markup and as we have worked through this process.

Historically, we in Congress, I think, have done a very good job of not trying to politicize or get our fingers into these kinds of decisions. We have had an awful lot of research about biology and new biotechnology, and all of it has come to this same conclusion, and that is, that the work that is being done in both the government-funded labs, as well as in private labs, is both safe and has no detrimental impact on the environment.

We have had all kinds of scares. What the authors are trying to do really is they are once again introducing the idea that we can somehow disprove the negative. They know that that cannot happen, and this is a toe in the door for some of these researchers to say, well, the answer, of course, is we have to have more money, but understand that when those particular researchers, attempting to disprove a negative which cannot be disproved, when they take more money, it comes at the expense of other important research.

I believe this research has to go forward. I think the USDA, the National Science Foundation, other groups that are doing this kind of research, they are doing it with very good scientists who understand that there are consequences, but more importantly, if we try to limit the work that is done in biotechnology, what we are working on today is developing plant species that can actually cure diseases.

That is amazing. It is wonderful. We should not try to stymie that kind of research. We are developing new plant species which are much more resistant to pests and other problems they might encounter so we can use less in terms of pesticides on those plants. That again is a wonderful discovery.

And also understand, most of the food that we eat today is a result of biotechnology. The Native Americans did a wonderful job in creating what we now know is corn. They actually developed that from what was formerly known as maize. The potato was something that was actually crossbred and developed by the American Indian. All that we enjoy, much of what we enjoy today in terms of things that we take for granted, were developed with biotechnology.

This is a thinly veiled attempt to politicize what has been a very nonpolitical markup, and the way that the Congress has dealt with it, I think it is a bad idea. It sets a very bad precedent because if this amendment is adopted, I promise my colleagues we will see more and more amendments by Members attempting to advance a political cause they believe in. I think it is a very big mistake, and I hope the Members will join me in opposing this amendment.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas for yielding to me. I have two responses to the gentleman from Michigan's (Mr. SMITH) objections to my amendment.

First, in talking about the changes that differed from what my amendment was in committee and to what we have brought to the floor, my changes were based on the committee's objections. So I came here prepared to improve upon what we had talked about earlier.

In the amendment in committee, we had the funding come from a small account in the plant genome program, and now my amendment would allow the NSF director to decide where within an $11 billion research account my $35 million program could be funded. That is not a lot of money within a large account, and so I wanted to make sure my colleague knew why that had changed.

It is $15 million in the first year of the bill, $20 million in the second year of the bill, and nothing specified in the third year because we have required a report from the NSF with their recommended levels for future years. So we are not assuming beyond the first 2 years.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) has said that his bill already covers this, his bill that I voted for, H.R. 2051, to establish plant genome research centers which also authorizes research on basic research and dissemination of information on the ecological and other consequences of genetically engineered plants. His does that. My amendment expands upon the gentleman's bill, and my program covers plants and animals that would not be restricted to research on genetically engineered plants and animals. So it expands his good ideas but makes it larger.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a couple of reactions, one supporting this concept. I am informed that the language of the gentlewoman's amendment limits the amount that can be spent on this effort, and who is to say it should be more, and I just suggest rather than let politicians deciding, let us let the scientific community make that decision, not limit it or pre-guess what is the right amount.

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond that I think I am sitting on the wrong side of the aisle when it is this side of the aisle who would limit a budget, and it is the gentleman's side of the aisle challenging that.

So this is the beginning of something that the public wants us to do, and I think we are making a great mistake if we do not vote for this because it is the right thing to do, and it is the environmentally friendly thing to do, and it would help our public know what is safe and what is not safe by having scientific studies, not emotional rhetoric, about what is going on with these programs.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise to enthusiastically support the distinguished gentlewoman from California's (Ms. WOOLSEY) amendment, and let me say to the proponents, this is a good bill, and I appreciate the leadership of the Committee on Science for the collaborative way in which this bill, the authorization of the National Science Foundation, has been done.

Let me comment that the importance of science in America could not be more important now. When we begin to talk about homeland security and the new challenges that we will face in the 21st century to ensure safety in our community, science is important. Training of girls and boys and the training of minorities in science, preparing them for the 21st century, funding those kinds of institutions, providing such programs is important.

That is why I connect the value of the gentlewoman from California's (Ms. WOOLSEY) amendment because it is a simple, common sense amendment. If we could sort of move away from issues of politicizing and depoliticizing, let me say what this amendment does.

It simply provides a steady stream of funding to study the impact of biotechnology on plants and ecosystems where there is not.

I would say to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) that we all supported his legislation that was recently passed: 2051. In that legislation, the gentleman did in fact earmark, and that is simply what is going on here. What we are responding to, however, is our instructor, our instructor is the National Academy of Sciences, which has called for implicit and significant increased funding for the particular aspect of the Woolsey amendment.

So, in fact, what is occurring is that the Woolsey amendment supports the National Academy of Sciences to provide monies for this kind of research. In fact, it has recommended this kind of research to study the ecological impact of plants bred conventionally and through biotechnology.

I would also simply say to my good friend from Minnesota that depoliticizing the issue is what we are doing. We are not politicizing it. What we are simply trying to do is to give the funding stream to get good science in order to be able to regulate properly. And that means if we get the research, the basic research, we know how to do the job.

I believe the American public is more than prepared now to understand that this is not a question of limiting the funds. The Woolsey amendment does not limit it; it gives it a funding stream. If we need more monies, I am sure that with an intelligent response by the Congress we can add more money. So this is not a limit. This is providing a continuous funding stream in order to be able to do the kind of research.

Might I just restate the utilization of H.R. 2051, the bill of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), was to establish plant genome research centers and which authorize research on basic research and dissemination of information on the ecological and other consequences of genetically engineered plants. This program would cover plants and animals and would not be restricted to research on genetically engineered plants and animals. This, however, has to be expanded; and the Woolsey amendment, I am very glad to say, goes a step further and begins to do the research that is necessary, the impact of biotechnology on plants and the ecosystems.

I close this by simply saying this, Mr. Chairman. It is interesting how as we mature and learn we find out that what we used to ridicule we find is truth. It is interesting that the present administration and others who support their policies ridiculed global warming, but just the other day those representatives of this administration put forward a report that said, you know what, global warming exists. Good science tells us that global warming exists and we have a problem. Interestingly enough, the present administration had to concede. And, of course, we understand that it was refuted and that individuals who put forward the report were called a bunch of bureaucrats. But truth will find a way.

This is what the Woolsey amendment offers to do, gives us the truth and the information that allows us to go forward and make an effective determination on how we can regulate this particular issue. And I would believe that our instructor, the National Academy of Sciences, could not be wrong in insisting that we need a significant increase in funding. I would ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. I do not even rise reluctantly to oppose it, because I think it is ill advised.

It is ill advised for several reasons. The type of research that is being outlined here is already being conducted, not just in the NSF but in various other agencies that are interested in it, the Department of Agriculture, the EPA; and I am sure NIH is looking at some aspects of it as well.

But my main reason for objection has to do with the history of the National Science Foundation. The National Science Foundation arose out of a report written by Vannevar Bush at the request of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1945. That report set out the basic structure of the National Science Foundation, and the basic idea of that report was that this would be an agency that would do scientific research, the priorities would be set by the scientists based on the scientific evidence, and that the research to be conducted would be peer reviewed by other scientists so that we would have good science done in this country.

It has an outstanding record. We have heard already that we have had over 100 Nobel prizes awarded to people who have received National Science Foundation grants. The basic idea is that the Congress would keep its hands off of specific appropriations for specific projects. It is very disappointing that this bill, which received unanimous support in committee and appears to have received unanimous support in debate on the floor, has this introduced where we are trying to earmark money for a specific pet project.

I can tell my colleagues that I can quickly list 20 pet projects that I think the NSF should be conducting research on and that they should be spending more money on. But the idea behind the NSF is that we do not allocate that money here, particularly in authorization bills; that, in fact, the work done there is based on the scientific judgments collectively gathered from the scientific community in this Nation.

It is entirely inappropriate for us to sit here on the House floor in an authorizing bill and try to designate funding for a particular project which a few Members of this body believe is important above and beyond all the other scientific research that we are considering in this Nation.

I object to this amendment. I hope that it is defeated, and I urge my colleagues to vote against it.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARDIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and I would like to point out, in responding to the statement that we are doing this already, that I have a quote on page 255 of the National Academy of Sciences Report of 2002, and I quote "Formal research support in the United States for the study of environmental impacts on transgenic plants has been sparse." In other words, we are not doing enough.

And in responding to the statement of my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), that we do not identify how we spend NSF funds, we just give them a big pot of money, we do have other programs that are identified. We spend money on advanced technological education, on Noyce scholarships, math and science scholarship programs, minority-serving institutions and undergraduate programs, and the Presidential Science Teacher awards, for example. That is just a list of the few things that we do.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARDIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, the items the gentlewoman has mentioned are all, if I heard them correctly, are all in the educational area, and are not directing research within the agency.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. CARDIN. I yield once again to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I would respond that they are still in NSF, and that is what we are saying. The gentleman is saying we do not identify programs that we invest money in other than just general funds. We do decide what is important under NSF when we choose to.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and let me just say that I have a great deal of fear that the money that is going into science is quite often politicized, and there is evidence of that around. I think the amendment that the gentlewoman is suggesting would lead in that direction and we should be very wary of these types of earmarks.

What I think the gentlewoman would actually do is create a situation where money was earmarked for this particular biotechnology type of research and the word would go out that if anyone wants to create scares about biotechnology they should come and get their grant because this is what this money is for.

We have seen the same sort of thing happen before. We saw it happen with global warming. My fellow colleague and friend, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), suggested there has been a "change" in administration policy on global warming. Well, I am not sure what that change in policy is, but it is very clear that that issue has been so politicized by the introduction of tax dollars through the various National Science Foundation, NASA, et cetera, that the public has not been getting pure science, but it has been getting politicized science.

In the early 1980s, there was a consensus, and in fact there were hearings in this Congress, in our committee, reaffirming the great threat that the global climate change posed to humankind. In fact, we had hearings in which the Democratic leaders of the committees at that time, because the Democrats controlled the House, they controlled the committees, made statements about the horrible threat of this global climate change. The only trouble was the climate change they were talking about and the scientists they brought in to verify it were warning us of global cooling.

Some of those scientists, I might add, are now on the payroll advocating that we have to fear global warming. Now, all of that in a 20-year time period. They reversed themselves on this important issue in a 20-year period. Now, supposedly the global warming trend and the global cooling trend, whatever it is, has been going on for thousands and thousands of years, yet they reversed themselves in a 20-year period as to what the government had to emphasize in order to save humankind.

If we had taken their prescriptions, obviously we would have been going in exactly the wrong direction. And I would predict in about 5 years from now there will be some other major revelation to the scientific community, as government grants are given in this way or that way; and we might find that it is neither global warming nor global cooling, but something to do with the Earth on its axis or something going towards the Moon or the sun, or something else we deserve to spend billions of dollars and direct it towards the scientists who will be able to warn us about it.

Let me just note that we have seen the glaciers in our country and other countries receding for about 100,000 years now. There has been climate change in the world, and it has been getting warmer for hundreds of thousands of years. Yet in order to prove that humankind in the last 5,000, or actually the last 500 years is causing this global climate change, we are spending billions and billions of science dollars.

We have got to quit politicizing science. This amendment, I believe, goes in exactly the wrong direction. But let me note this. Politicized science is probably the worst threat that we have right now to understanding the actual perils that might face us in the future.

I still remember the "Global 2000 Report," and I would recommend that my colleagues read the "Global 2000 Report" that was put out in 1980, financed of course by tax dollars. The "Global 2000 Report," I believe, warned us against global cooling, but my colleagues can check into that. I do not remember that precisely, but I do remember they said we would be totally out of oil by the year 2000 and that gasoline would cost about $150 a gallon, or something like that, and all of our natural resources would be depleted. In other words, there was this great threat, this great scare that was put out in the "Global 2000 Report," and every one of their conclusions were wrong, now that we have passed the year 2000. Do my colleagues know why it was wrong? It is because it was politicized science.

I think that we have to, and we are dealing with this committee and we are dealing with our expenditures, we have to go out of our way, bend over backwards to ensure that we are not politicizing science; that we are not taking up a trendy issue and asking the scientific community to verify it in order to get government grants. That is why I would oppose the Woolsey amendment.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and I would like to respond to the gentleman from California when he talks about biotechnology research and global climate reports that our President and his administration put forth a report this weekend to the U.N. acknowledging global climate change, and telling the world to adapt, just get used to it.

Mr. Chairman, what are we going to tell the monarch butterflies when they are having to adapt to genetically modified corn? They cannot adapt. They are dying. We have to look into what we can do about that, and that is what this amendment is about. It is about good science, not about emotions.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I generally agree with the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), but I do have to correct one thing the gentlewoman said, the President and the administration put out a report. Actually, the administration put out a report. The President seemed to be quite surprised by it, not to the point of actually reading it, because I think it would take more than that to get him to read it; but I was struck by the President's bemusement by the report.

So just because the EPA and a group of scientists have said something does not mean that the President chooses to associate himself with it. That does not detract from the validity of the report, but it did seem to me to be a rather interesting precedent being set of a President expressing his surprise that a report issued in his administration's name ought to be noted.

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will count for a quorum.

Does the gentlewoman withdraw the point of order?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry. Is an insufficient number standing, in your opinion, for a recorded vote?

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 165, noes 259, not voting 10, as follows:

Messrs. SAXTON, HALL of Ohio, SIMMONS, SHOWS, CRAMER, Mrs. THURMAN and Messrs. RYUN of Kansas, CRENSHAW and COX changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON) having assumed the chair, Mr. BONILLA, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4664) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 432, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, on final passage of H.R. 4664, Investing in America's Future Act, I was on the House Floor and cast an "aye" vote for H.R. 4664.

I later learned my vote was not recorded. I wanted to advise the House that had my vote been recorded, I would have voted "aye" on final passage for H.R. 4664.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present for rollcall votes 209, 210, 211, and 212. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on each of them.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4664, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2143, PERMANENT DEATH TAX REPEAL ACT OF 2001

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107–494) on the resolution (H. Res. 435) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2143) to make the repeal of the estate tax permanent, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTENTION TO OFFER RESOLUTION RAISING QUESTION OF PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I give notice of my intention to raise a question of the privileges of the House under rule IX of the rules of the House.

> Whereas the President's constitutional duty is to faithfully execute the laws of the United States, and
>
> Whereas, under the Constitution, treaties have the status of "supreme law of the land," equally with other laws, and
>
> Whereas, the President does not have the authority to repeal laws, and
>
> Whereas, the President is not authorized to withdraw unilaterally from treaties in general, and the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in particular, without the consent of Congress, and
>
> Whereas, the President unilaterally withdrew the United States of America from the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 without seeking or obtaining the consent of either house of Congress;
>
> Therefore be it resolved,
>
> That the President should respect the Constitutional role of Congress and seek the approval of Congress for the withdrawal of the United States of America from the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under rule IX, a resolution that is offered from the floor by a Member other than the majority leader or minority leader as a question of the privileges of the House has immediate precedence only at a time designated by the Chair within two legislative days after the resolution is properly noticed.

Pending that designation, the form of the resolution noticed by the gentleman from Ohio will appear in the RECORD at this point.

The Chair does not at this point determine whether or not the resolution constitutes a question of privilege. That determination will be made at the time designated for consideration of the resolution.

AUTHORIZING SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESS ON WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 2002, FOR PURPOSE OF RECEIVING IN JOINT MEETING THE HONORABLE JOHN HOWARD, PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order at any time on Wednesday, June 12, 2002, for the Speaker to declare a recess subject to the call of the Chair for the purpose of receiving in joint meeting the Honorable John Howard, Prime Minister of Australia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

RECOGNIZING WOMEN WHO HAVE SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES THROUGHOUT AMERICA'S HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, recently, back in my district in central Pennsylvania, I had occasion in connection with the armed services holidays and celebrations to appear with a group of women right in the center of the action of Harrisburg, at the capital area, who were celebrating long service on the part of women in the Armed Forces of the United States.

What was brought to bear at that function was the memory of Oveta Culp Hobby, who was from Texas and who was the first Women's Army Corps general; she did not make general, but she was commander of the Women's Army Corps. That is one of the first visions we have had of actual women serving in the service in the modern era.

But women have served in the Armed Forces ever since the Revolution. Many of them served, of course, as nurses throughout all the conflicts, and they were Army and Navy and Air Force nurses, actually, so they were part of the Armed Forces. But we have had many, many different examples in the Revolutionary War, in the Mexican War, in the Civil War, and all the modern wars, so to speak, of women posing as men for the sole privilege on their part of wielding a weapon and engaging in fierce combat. Hundreds and maybe thousands of such cases can be found in the history of armed conflict in the United States.

The remainder of the function in which we participated was to give recognition to modern day women participants in the current ranks of the Armed Forces, so it was a splendid day.

One thing that was evident throughout all of this was that the women exhibited extreme pride in their current status as members of the Armed Forces and in the reverence with which they spoke about their predecessors, and the same women about whom I have made reference in the history of armed conflict in the history of our country.

So we ought to know that when we celebrate the national holidays, like the one now coming up, Independence Day on July 4, that we include in our celebration the thought and memory of the gallant women, as well as our men; the women who, from the Declaration of Independence until the current season of the war on terrorism, when women are flying combat missions, women are participating in practically every form of armed conflict or preparation therefor; and that we should not anymore, throughout the remainder of the history of the Nation, conduct the holiday and celebrate our history without due concern and mention and recordation of the deeds of the women of our society who plunged themselves into armed conflict along with the men that we have honored for so many years.

INNOVATIVE SOLUTION TO PROBLEM OF SCARCITY OF NATIONAL BURIAL SPACE FOR VETERANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for a few minutes to a problem that I know faces congressmen all over this Nation. That is the lack of national burial space for our veterans of our Armed Forces.

I live in San Diego County, where we have almost 300,000 veterans. The national cemetery at Fort Rosecrans is out of space. There is no place for an honorable burial of a veteran in his or her hometown. We have to drive 100 miles or so to Riverside County, and that is just not what most families want to do with their loved ones.

We have figured out an innovative solution in San Diego County that I want to share with my colleagues and hope that they help us pass a resolution from this Congress which would instruct the Department of Veterans Affairs to help us with this innovative solution.

I have introduced H.R. 4806, the Honorable Burial for Veterans Act, along with my colleagues and the San Diego County delegation, the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM), the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. Davis), and the gentleman from California (Mr. ISSA).

Each and every veteran in our county is concerned that upon his or her demise, interment may become a source of frustration for family and close friends. Many families are left with an impossible dilemma: cremation, where only a few spaces actually exist in the columbarum, or a ground burial at a cemetery a 2-hour drive away.

We should not force this decision on the families of our Nation's veterans. When we called on them to serve, they did not hesitate. Now, in their last hour, a grateful Nation should not hesitate to assist their families.

My colleagues and I want to build a second National Cemetery in San Diego, and we are on the list to do that. In fact, it may take a decade or more before we get around to doing that cemetery on the VA list. In the meantime, we should not abandon our veterans' families in their time of grief.

My bill would provide San Diego with an interim solution. A local effort among the private sector and local authorities and veterans' organizations has produced what I would consider to be an excellent pilot program. Two parcels of land, about 20 acres each, have been identified in the northern and southern parts of our county in what are now private cemeteries. They have offered this land to the Veterans Administration free of charge to become what we will call satellite cemeteries to the National Cemetery in our county.

We have a generous offer of land from the Service Corporation International which would be donated to a 501(c)(3) organization, the Veterans Memorial Center and Museum in San Diego, who will then turn that over to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I thank all the folks who have tried to come up with this solution back in San Diego: the general manager of the Glen Abbey Memorial Park; the regional president, western regional president of Service Corporation International, Richard Sells; and to Colonel Jesse Ugade, Brigadier General Robert Cardenas, Captain Tom Splitgerber, and David Brown, co-publisher and editor of the Veterans Journal of San Diego County, because they have devoted enormous hours in an attempt to find a solution for San Diego's veterans.

My bill would authorize the establishment of this satellite cemetery pilot project. It is not the ideal solution, but we have to wait for two decades to get that ideal solution for families who have served our Nation. With our limited Federal budget, families can in fact be helped by an innovative and creative effort to meet our national needs.

The Veterans Administration had a negative reaction when this first was broached to them. Any bureaucracy, it seems, does not look at innovative ideas with a very encouraging light.

So I hope to get a bill passed by Congress which would direct the VA to do this. Certainly providing a final resting place for our brave veterans must be one of our top priorities. I hope my colleagues will support this bill to see how it works in San Diego because it might be useful in their own communities also.

BEWARE DOLLAR WEAKNESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHROCK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I have for several years come to the House floor to express my concern for the value of the dollar. It has been, and is, my concern that we in the Congress have not met our responsibility in this regard. The constitutional mandate for Congress should only permit silver and gold to be used as legal tender and has been ignored for decades and has caused much economic pain for many innocent Americans. Instead of maintaining a sound dollar, Congress has by both default and deliberate action promoted a policy that systematically depreciates the dollar. The financial markets are keenly aware of the minute-by-minute fluctuations of all the fiat currencies and look to these swings in value for an investment advantage. This type of anticipation and speculation does not exist in a sound monetary system. But Congress should be interested in the dollar fluctuation not as an investment but because of our responsibility for maintaining a sound and stable currency, a requirement for sustained economic growth.

The consensus now is that the dollar is weakening and the hope is that the drop in its value will be neither too much nor occur too quickly; but no matter what the spin is, a depreciating currency, one that is losing its value against goods, services, other currencies and gold, cannot be beneficial and may well be dangerous. A sharply dropping dollar, especially since it is the reserve currency of the world, can play havoc with the entire world economy.

Gold is history's oldest and most stable currency. Central bankers and politicians hate gold because it restrains spending and denies them the power to create money and credit out of thin air. Those who promote big government, whether to wage war and promote foreign expansionism or to finance the welfare state here at home, cherish this power.

History and economic law are on the side of the gold. Paper money always fails. Unfortunately, though, this occurs only after many innocent people have suffered the consequences of the fraud that paper money represents. Monetary inflation is a hidden tax levied more on the poor and those on fixed incomes than the wealthy, the bankers, or the corporations.

In the past 2 years, gold has been the strongest currency throughout the world in spite of persistent central banks selling designed to suppress the gold price in hopes of hiding the evil caused by the inflationary policies that all central bankers follow. This type of depreciation only works for short periods; economic law always rules over the astounding power and influence of central bankers.

That is what is starting to happen, and trust in the dollar is being lost. The value of the dollar this year is down 18 percent compared to gold. This drop in value should not be ignored by Congress. We should never have permitted this policy that was deliberately designed to undermine the value of the currency.

There are a lot of reasons the market is pushing down the value of the dollar at this time. But only one is foremost. Current world economic and political conditions lead to less trust in the dollar's value. Economic strength here at home is questionable and causes concerns. Our huge foreign debt is more than $2 trillion, and our current account deficit is now 4 percent of GDP and growing. Financing this debt requires borrowing $1.3 billion per day from overseas. But these problems are ancillary to the real reason that the dollar must go down in value. For nearly 7 years the U.S. has had the privilege of creating unlimited amounts of dollars with foreigners only too eager to accept them to satisfy our ravenous appetite for consumer items. The markets have yet to discount most of this monetary inflation. But they are doing so now; and for us to ignore what is happening, we do so at the Nation's peril. Price inflation and much higher interest rates are around the corner.

Misplaced confidence in a currency can lead money managers and investors astray, but eventually the piper must be paid. Last year's record interest rate drop by the Federal Reserve was like pouring gasoline on a fire. Now the policy of the past decade is being recognized as being weak for the dollar; and trust and confidence in it is justifiably being questioned.

Trust in paper is difficult to measure and anticipate, but long-term value in gold is dependable and more reliably assessed. Printing money and creating artificial credit may temporarily lower interest rates, but it also causes the distortions of malinvestment, overcapacity, excessive debt and speculation. These conditions cause instability, and market forces eventually overrule the intentions of the central bankers. That is when the apparent benefits of the easy money disappear, such as we dramatically have seen with the crash of the dot-coms and the Enrons and many other stocks.

It is back to reality. This is serious business, and the correction that must come to adjust for the Federal Reserve's mischief of the past 30 years has only begun. Congress must soon consider significant changes in our monetary system.

Congress must soon consider significant changes in our monetary system if we hope to preserve a system of sound growth and wealth preservation. Paper money managed by the Federal Reserve System cannot accomplish this. In fact, it does the opposite.

AMERICA SHOULD NOT INSTIGATE WAR AGAINST IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, ever since the Gulf War ended in 1991, the U.S. has been spending about $4 million a day enforcing a no-flight zone in Iraq, $4 million a day. This has been a tremendous waste of money and manpower.

I believe almost all Americans would have preferred that this $12 or $13 billion that has been spent over these years would have been spent in almost any other good way. Most Americans have not even noticed that we have been dropping bombs and still shooting at missile sites all these years in Iraq. I remember reading a front page lengthy story about a group of Iraqi boys we accidentally killed there.

Now there are some people here in Washington who seem to be clamoring for us to go to war against Iraq. I represent a very patriotic pro-military district in Tennessee. My people will strongly support our troops if we go to war. But I can assure you that as I go around my district I hear no clamor or even a weak desire to go to war against Iraq.

Saudi Arabia had much more to do with the September 11 tragedies than Iraq did. I heard yesterday that one of the main financial backers of the terrorists is from Kuwait. Yet we are not talking about going to war against Saudi Arabia or Kuwait, nor should we. We have been too quick to get involved in ethnic or religious disputes around the world. We have been too quick to drop bombs on people who want to be our friends. We turned NATO from a defensive organization into an offensive one in Bosnia.

Chris Matthews on "Hard Ball" the other night said, "In the past we always had the world on our side because we did not go to war unless we were attacked."

He strongly questioned this eagerness to go to war against Iraq. He said in a recent column that the American people are being "herded into war." A war that he says will just lead to more hatred of the U.S.

David Ignatius, the nationally syndicated columnist for the New York Herald Tribune and The Washington Post wrote on March 15: "How can the United States sell a war against Iraq to skeptical Arabs and Europeans? A good start would be to level with them and admit there is no solid evidence linking Baghdad to Osama bin Laden's terrorists attacks against America."

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have questioned this eagerness to go to war against Iraq. Yesterday, William Raspberry, the very highly respected columnist for The Washington Post, in a nationally syndicated column repeated words he had written a dozen years ago. He wrote: "The prospect of a bloody war with no price worth the tens of thousands of American lives it would cost can make you a little nervous. I am getting a little nervous. It is not that I doubt the ability of America's fighting forces to take out a third-rate power like Saddam Hussein's Iraq. My doubts concern the purpose for doing so. Saddam is being described as a ruthless and power-mad tyrant bent on achieving political control of the Arab world. I do not question the description, but it does seem to me that most of the current saber rattling is coming from Washington, not Bagdad." And Mr. Raspberry continued: "I wrote those words a dozen years back when the first President Bush was contemplating the invasion of Iraq. Why are we rattling sabers now? The reason I recall my earlier doubts is that they are so much a carbon copy of my present ones." Mr. Raspberry says: "Maybe it was a mistake not to wipe out the last scrap of Iraq's military power back then, not to mow down the surrendering republican guard like shooting fish in a barrel. But surely the failure to do so then cannot justify a unilateral attack now."

Mr. Raspberry said: "We should not become the playground bully of the word." In 1990, Saddam Hussein, who I am not praising or defending in any way, had invaded Kuwait and was threatening to go further.

We had to act and I voted for the original Gulf War. However, we later found out the Iraqi military strength had been greatly exaggerated. The so-called "elite" Praetorian Guards were surrendering to CNN camera crews or anybody who would take them. Hussein has been greatly weakened since then in almost every way. Let us not exaggerate his strength this time. If he starts to attack us, I will be the first to support a war effort, but please let us not provoke war. Let us not change the name of the Department of Defense into the War Department once again. We should not try to be the policemen of the world. We should try as hard as we can to reestablish our reputation as the most peace-loving Nation on the face of the Earth.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG BENEFIT

(Ms. WATSON of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, Medicare does not cover the cost of prescription drugs, and as a result, approximately 10 million medical recipients nationwide lack any prescription drug coverage. It is estimated by the Kaiser Foundation that seniors spend on average $1,756 per year for prescription drugs.

Due to the extraordinary cost of prescription drugs, millions of seniors will, A, have to choose between proper medication and rent; B, have to choose between proper medication and groceries; or, C, have to suffer because of improper doses of unaffordable medicines.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge this Congress. How dare we. How dare we affect the quality of life for our seniors by withholding funding for prescription drugs. How dare we dismiss our seniors with a poorly funded mandate that will not cover their needs. How dare we allow our Medicare seniors to be squeezed by an industry lobby when life and death is on the line.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to honor our seniors, respect their age and wisdom and their contributions to America. Fully fund medical prescription drug coverage.

PERMANENT ESTATE TAX REPEAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House of Representatives will consider a proposal by the Republican majority to permanently repeal the estate tax.

Now, we had a vigorous debate over the estate tax last year; and I along with many others supported a reform of the estate tax that would lead to the exemption of 99½ percent of the estates in the United States of America. But to take and permanently repeal the tax as will be proposed tomorrow for the largest estates will be an extraordinarily expensive measure and add dramatically to the deficit of the United States and ultimately undermine the Social Security trust fund of the United States.

Permanent repeal would cost $740 billion, B, billion dollars, over the next decade after 2012. But if we were to instead say, well, let us exempt the first $5 million of everybody's estate, now that seems like a pretty reasonable step. We do not want people, for instance, in my district or in Oregon who own forestry, tree farms, to go out and prematurely harvest the trees so they have to pay their estates taxes. We do not want people to have to break up their small businesses so they can pay their estates taxes. Those things are well and good. We could do that. We could easily do that.

The current law will exempt by the year 2009 the first $3.5 million of each estate. So let us just round that up to $5 million. So if we did that, that would reserve $400 billion in taxes or $400 billion of money that would not be drained from the Social Security trust fund to help pay for the retirement of the baby boom.

Now, it is true that there would be some 4 or 500 estates a year worth more than $5 million who would have to pay taxes to support the 53 million people on Social Security.

I believe that they can afford that burden. Some say, well, we know they should not pay taxes twice. Well, guess what, most of them will not pay taxes twice. In fact, the way the current laws are set up, many of these estates have unrealized capital gains, and if those estates are exempt from taxation, not even the lower rate of capital gains will be paid.

The American working people have to pay day in, day out a substantial portion of their income to Social Security, day in, day out a substantial portion of their income in income taxes, but these people with the estates worth more than $5 million would never, ever pay a penny in taxes. The unrealized capital gains would be rolled over into the estates, the estates would be tax-exempt, all at a cost of $400 billion to the rest of the United States of America, the rest of the taxpayers in this country.

This is not fair. It is not fiscally prudent, and the Republican majority should be ashamed of pushing this through at this time of financial crisis. We are looking at a $300 billion deficit this year. The Social Security lock box that they had us vote on seven times, which I voted for seven times, has been busted open and depleted. There is nothing, nothing going into it over the next 10 years, and for the next 10 years after that; if they permanently repeal the estate tax for estates worth more than $5 million, in fact, the Social Security trust fund will continue to be drained.

So we will threaten the benefit of 53 million Americans' Social Security benefits to benefit a handful of extraordinarily wealthy families. This is not the America that I know and I love.

The estate tax was put in place nearly a century ago by a Republican president because the accumulation of wealth generation to generation was creating extraordinary disparities in our society, and the idea was, well, those people should help carry a little bit more of the burden, but if this becomes law, if they are successful tomorrow, as I suspect they might be, then many of these estates, many of these families will never, ever contribute to the collective burdens of citizenship in the United States, much as many corporations are now setting up phony overseas offices in Bermuda and Luxembourg to avoid paying taxes on overseas or U.S. earnings.

We will ultimately, if they are successful, be a country where only wage-earning Americans pay taxes and those that live off the accumulated wealth of their predecessors and the largest corporations will not contribute a penny. This is not right, and my colleagues should vote against this legislation tomorrow for fiscal prudence and for fairness.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG COSTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHROCK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about outrageously high drug prices and what we pay for drugs in the United States compared to what the rest of the world is paying.

There is a group down in Florida, and they have been doing this research for a number of years, called the Life Extension Foundation or the Life Extension Network, and they have been doing research in terms of what Americans pay for prescription drugs and what the average European price for those same drugs, made in the same FDA-approved facilities, under the same FDA-approved methodology. These are the exact same drugs, and let us look at some of these.

One that we became very familiar with in the last several months is a drug that is made in Germany. It is called Cipro. We bought an awful lot of Cipro when we started having anthrax mailed to places in Washington and New York. Cipro is a very effective antibiotic. The average United States price for a 30-day supply is $87.99. That same drug in Germany sells for $40.75.

The story gets worse when we look at some of the more expensive drugs. Let us take the drug Claritin, for example, which is going off patent here in the United States, but it still sells for about an average of $89 for a 30-day supply in the United States. That exact same drug sells for $18.75 over in Europe.

A drug that is technically off patent in the United States, the FDA has approved what they call a special extension of the patent, Glucophage, one of the most commonly prescribed drugs for diabetes sufferers, which is one of the most common diseases in the United States, but Glucophage, a 30-day supply in the United States sells for $124.65. That same drug in Geneva, Switzerland, sells for $22.

Mr. Speaker, as we look down this list, it becomes almost embarrassing that we allow this situation to exist, and the real culprit is not so much the pharmaceutical industry. They are doing what any industry would do, and that is, taking advantage of market opportunities. No, the real problem is that our own FDA stands between Americans and lower drug prices. It is not so much shame on them. It is shame on us.

Now we passed a very important amendment last year on a vote of 324 to 101 saying that as long as it is an FDA-approved drug made in an FDA-approved facility, that those drugs can be imported and reimported by both consumers and wholesalers and a local pharmacist.

Let me show my colleagues one other drug that is fairly near and dear to my heart. It is a drug that my 85-year-old father takes. It is called Coumadin. When I first started putting these charts up a few years ago, the average price for a 30-day supply of Coumadin was about $38. In just a little over 2 years, that price is now over $64.

Now, we asked the drug companies what has changed. I mean, do we have new doctoring regulations or new lawsuits that they have to settle? Have they had to spend more money getting approval? The answer is no, nothing has changed, except the price. It has gone from about $38 to about $64, almost $65 in the United States, but here is what really frosts me. The price over in Europe averages only $15.80 for the same drug.

We are going to have some pitched debates over the next several weeks about prescription drugs, whether or not we should extend coverage, and I believe that we need to do something to help people who are currently falling through the cracks, but if we fail to deal with the critical issue of price, then it is shame on us.

Let me explain how this gets important. Let me first of all show this chart. This is according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the National Institutes of Health Care Management, the last year we have full numbers for the average Social Security recipient in the United States got a 3½ percent increase in their COLA on their Social Security. At the same time, prescription drug prices in the United States went up by 19 percent. Nineteen percent. That is unsustainable, and ultimately, we in Congress need to do something about it.

My answer is let us open markets, let us allow some competition to exist, and we will see a real change.

I think it is important that we do address the issue of prescription drugs, but according to the Congressional Budget Office, and they are our official scorekeepers, they are the ones who are bean counters, prognosticators, they tell us over the next 10 years their best estimate is that seniors, people over the age of 65, and look at all these numbers, this is how much they estimate seniors will pay for prescription drugs over the next 10 years. That is $1.8 trillion. There is not enough money in the Federal Treasury to come up with that and continue to fund the other legitimate needs of people here in the United States of America.

The reason I put 35 percent under that, to give a point to why it is important that we do something on reimportation this year, is that I estimate we can save at least 35 percent. Here in Washington a billion dollars gets lost once in a while. In fact, the old expression, a billion here, billion there, pretty soon you are talking about real money, but if we multiply the 35 percent minimum savings that I think we can get with reimportation times $1.8 trillion over the next 10 years, we can save American consumers $630 billion. That is real money, and that is real money out of the pockets of either our seniors or the taxpayers here in the United States.

I believe that we as Americans ought to pay our fair share of the research cost for pharmaceuticals. I am not here to beat up on the pharmaceutical industry because they have done a lot of wonderful things. There are millions of American that are alive today and living better lives because of what they have done with their research. I think we should pay our fair share, but shame on us if they continue to force us to subsidize the starving Swiss.

PRESIDENT'S EDUCATION BUDGET IS A BROKEN PROMISE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to question the fiscal responsibility of the current administration and to question their priorities.

On May 23, I came to this great House floor to vote for positive sweeping changes to our Nation's education programs, along with 384 of our colleagues who passed H.R. 1, the Act to Leave No Child Behind. H.R. 1 passed this House and it also passed the other body and was signed by the President this past January. Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle stood next to the President to sign the legislation we believed would finally make education what it should be, a number one priority.

Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor this evening because the administration's budget, its budget for next year, does not make education a priority. The President's education budget is a broken promise. President Bush has stated that he is the education president. Yet resources in his education budget did not match his rhetoric.

Last month, President Bush visited my home State of Ohio and told a crowd of citizens in Cleveland that we must make sure every child in America gets educated. However, the President's rhetoric does not match the resources in his budget.

President Bush did not mention the education programs that would not receive funding in the State due to his budget cuts. Indeed, the education budget that President Bush sent to Congress falls $7.2 billion, not million, billion short of the funds needed to implement programs that we passed in H.R. 1.

The most troubling aspect of the President's budget to me is that it spends 50 times more on tax cuts for the wealthiest 1 percent of Americans than the total of new education spending, 50 times more for those that already have extremely difficult choices for school districts across this country.

The President's budget cuts 57 education programs authorized in H.R. 1, 57 programs are cut, and his budget will fall short by $4.7 billion needed to support most academically needy students in our country, $4.7 billion short.

So one can rightly ask the question, is President Bush's education budget a broken promise?

Mr. Speaker, education must continue to be a priority. Couple this with the impact of the recession on State budgets which currently have deficits in aggregate of over $40 billion and there is no doubt that our governors are going to be forced to place major cuts on State education and spending at the elementary and secondary levels as well as the post-secondary. We already have seen this in States like Ohio.

State colleges are facing the worst State budget crunch in a decade. Frankly, I cannot understand why the college students across this country are not organizing to impact legislation in their State houses and here at the national level because we are witnessing the largest tuition hikes on our college students in recent history. Why are they so satisfied when, in fact, most of them are graduating with a debt of nearly $17,000 and in medical school over $100,000 debt for a new doctor coming out of med school?

A congressional survey found that 49 States made $1.5 billion in mid-year cuts to higher education funding. Public and private universities share a grim budget outlook indeed as public support dwindles during a faltering economy.

Ohio students will pay prices for higher education because the State of Ohio, as are many other States, is cutting support for higher education. Some State campuses, in fact, are facing increases in tuition of 3 to 15 percent.

In the wake of this news, it did not make any sense then for President Bush to propose ending the fixed-rate consolidations of Federal student loans earlier this spring. The administration stated that the funds, once allocated for the student loan program, would be used to cover the current $1.3 billion shortfall this year in the budget for the Pell grant program, so important for our lower-income students. But then the administration, after substantial criticism, rescinded that proposal.

Members of Congress continue to believe that education should be a number one priority. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I very much want to keep it a top priority, but we need the cooperation of the White House in this endeavor. And the barbecue tonight will not solve the problems of students and school districts across this country. Seven hundred thousand borrowers consolidate or refinance their total Federal student loans each year.

It is important to ask what other programs are going to be slashed, what other promises are going to be broken. Education should remain a number one priority.

REPEAL SUNSET PROVISION OF INHERITANCE TAX REPEAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the body regarding the very, very critical issue of repealing the sunset provision of the inheritance tax repeal. As many Americans know, last year we passed a very, very important tax bill. It reduced taxes on working families, it reduced marginal tax rates, it increased the child tax credit, and it had many, many, very, very good provisions.

Indeed, I have been hearing from constituents, particularly parents, in my congressional district about how the tax reductions, even though they are phased in and, for example, the child tax credit only went from $500 to $600 in the first year, are helping. They tell me, particularly parents, where one spouse works, typically the father, and the mother is home with small children, struggling with the burden of trying to raise a family, that these tax reductions are really helping them make ends meet.

Naturally, of course, with the Nation in a recession, these tax reductions have been very helpful in blunting the severity of the recession. Many economists claim that if our tax reductions had not gone into place, this recession would have been much, much worse. We just heard from the gentlewoman from Ohio how State income taxes being down because of the decline in the economy are hurting education expenses. Imagine where we would be as a Nation if this recession was much, much worse. And I think the tax reductions have been very, very helpful in putting more money into the economy and, therefore, helping create jobs and in protecting jobs.

But, Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight specifically to address one particular feature of that bill. In the other body there is a rule that says we cannot make any provisions of the Tax Code permanent unless we have 60 votes. So all of these tax reductions which are phased in over several years essentially sunset in 2011. This is an unfortunate feature, and I was disappointed that we were not able to get the necessary votes to make it permanent. Essentially, it is a tax increase that is hanging out there over the heads of the American people, somewhat like the Sword of Damocles.

For most Americans, I do not think it affects behavior. I do not think people will not have a child because their child tax credit might decline from $1,000 to $500 per child in 2011. I do not think that because marginal rates could potentially go up in 2011 that people will change their behavior in the sense that they will not pursue personal gain or they will not pursue career enhancements. But the one feature I think that is the most pernicious in all of this is the impact on the inheritance tax. The inheritance tax affects behavior now.

People, today, who are affected by the inheritance tax, engage in extensive planning to mitigate the severity of the inheritance tax on their business and on their family. This was driven home loud and clear to me when I called a constituent of mine who is an auto dealer. Bruce Deardorf is his name. Shortly after we passed the tax cuts of last year, I called Bruce and he said to me, I am glad you passed it, it is a great step; but, he said, I do not know what to do about my estate planning.

Bruce is like hundreds of thousands, probably millions, of small businessmen all over the country. He started out really with nothing. He scrimped and saved and managed to save up $60,000 and used that as the downpayment, then took out a big loan to open his first auto dealership many, many years ago. He has been successful and was able to acquire a second, a third, and now a fourth auto dealership. He employs 400 people. He has sent millions and millions of tax dollars to Washington, D.C., both from his personal withholding and all the jobs that he has created. All those 400 people of course pay Social Security tax.

Now, this is not a story that is unique to my congressional district in central Florida; it is common all over the country. Really, the prosperity that enables us to pay for all the features of our government, from defense to education programs to local taxes that are collected is generated by entrepreneurs and family farmers that are going out working every day and creating jobs and creating prosperity.

And Bruce Deardorf said to me over the phone, I do not know what to do with the estate plan I have established. This feature of the bill, this sunset provision, which basically repeals the inheritance tax by 2010 and then brings it back in 2011, makes it impossible for me to retire all the estate planning that I have generated, and I am going to have to keep it all in place.

This is very, very inefficient. Most of the estate planning, granted, generates work for estate planners, accountants, and lawyers; but it is not in the productive side of our economy. And, indeed, I think this is an inefficiency that we have burdened our economy with. So I believe very, very strongly that we need to make the repeal of the inheritance tax permanent. It is impossible for people to plan, and I think it is the right thing to do.

Now, I supported the bill that we passed last month that made all of the sunset provisions on all the features of the tax bill go away. If we cannot get that enacted into law, I think minimally we need to enact this provision.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to now recognize my colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. BROWN). I understand that the gentleman wanted to speak to this issue on the inheritance tax repeal, and so I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding; and I rise in support of making the death tax relief permanent and, quite frankly, with much puzzlement that we really need to debate this on the House floor today.

On the one hand, it is simply a matter of fairness. The taxes being wrenched from the families is money that has already been taxed before. As an issue of morality, it is hard enough for a family to lose a loved one without having to endure the additional grief and burden that the Federal Government delivers to them. Too often business owners are forced to sell their businesses, and family farms are broken up so families can come up with the cash they need to pay the death tax.

Moreover, as a practical matter, when people are planning their estates, it creates tremendous uncertainty when one does not know whether or not the death tax will resurrect itself within 10 years. Surely the Congress would never tell the American people that it is much more economic to die in the year 2010 than in the year 2011. But if nothing is done to make this relief permanent and the death tax is allowed to rise again, that is the sad reality of the policy we have created.

We must be decisive on this issue and continue the good work we did in enacting the President's tax cuts. Not acting to make this relief permanent would be a dereliction of duty to the constituents we represent.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Congress would do the right thing and make this death tax relief permanent.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for his very important input; and I believe the gentleman's colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. WILSON), also would like to add to the gentleman's statement on this very important issue; and so I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it is a real honor for me to be here with my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON), and an honor to be here with my colleague, the gentleman South Carolina (Mr. BROWN). I was very honored to serve with him in the General Assembly of South Carolina. He served as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, which was one of the highest positions of our State, and we are just very fortunate that he was elected 2 years ago to serve here in Congress. Those of us from South Carolina are proud of the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. BROWN).

I am very happy and honored to have been elected more recently. I ran in the primary last October. I was elected on December 18; and, in fact, I am the second most recent Member of Congress. I am number 434 out of 435. And with that distinction, the point I want to make is that I also have the most recent experience, some of us would call it real-life experience, of being with the public in a private position in my job. And I was very proud of my employment as an attorney. I served as a real estate attorney, and I was a probate attorney until December 18 last year when I was elected to Congress.

My experience in civilian life of being a real estate attorney, probate attorney, is that I heard so much about death taxes and that is why I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Florida, for his leadership in working to eliminate death taxes in the United States. This needs to be done. Because I know firsthand how this has chilled the value of real estate, it has chilled development, it has chilled home building, and it has had a negative effect for businesses, particularly small businesses in our country.

Additionally, I know that it has created confusion for those of us who work in preparing wills and assisting people in preparation of wills. But the ultimate confusion has been a law which will provide, as the gentleman correctly indicated, a tax increase. That tax increase will take place on January 1, 2011, when it just kicks in. So what we have is an indeterminate law, in effect, which is the worst kind.

I know from being recently in campaigns, talking with people, meeting with people in their businesses, in their homes, on the street, at meetings, that this is a key issue. And I want to commend the gentleman for bringing this up, and I really look forward to the vote tomorrow.

I also had the experience of looking back at the debate involving a wonderful colleague, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH), who spoke on this last year. And I want to commend the membership for passing the tax cuts last year. It was a year ago, on June 6, 2001, when the reforms were put in place to eliminate the death taxes and reduce other taxes.

The way this tax cut would work that was passed provides that there would be a phase-out of the death taxes over the next 9 years, and then it would completely disappear in the 10th year. However, the sunset provision that the gentleman explained provides that after December 31, 2010, on the very next day, the taxes would be fully put back into place, a tax increase, as the gentleman has said correctly. So persons would almost have to plan, which cannot be done, and we do not want it to be done, to pass away on December 31, 2010. It is not only just illogical, it is immoral.

In other words, unless we want to make the tax elimination permanent, we need to vote positively tomorrow, and I look forward to doing so. What we have is a situation where if people did pass away prior to December 31, 2010, they would not pay a death tax. But if they live 1 day more, to January 1, 2011, they would pay a tax, possibly equal to 60 percent of all their assets.

I believe that the death tax is possibly the most ethically disgraceful tax which is levied by the Federal Government; and then, in fact, most States also have adopted this tax through tax conformity.

So this can really be beneficial. Not only what we are doing on the Federal level; the impact will be to eliminate death taxes at the Federal and State level. You have tax on assets already taxed. We need to vote tomorrow to permanently eliminate the death tax.

Another definition of the death tax would be taxes on the property owned at the date of death. When someone dies, the surviving family, not the deceased, and there is some debate, we can call it an inheritance tax, but the general term is death tax. The surviving family pays a tax up to 60 percent on all assets currently over $675,000.

When we hear about $675,000, I know from personal experience working with people who are of average means, they do not realize that their homes have appreciated substantially. They could immediately be put into a taxable situation. Many people do not realize that insurance is included within the estate and provides immediately for taxes to be assessed.

For the past 20 years, as a member of the Army National Guard, I have been traveling all over South Carolina with legal counseling teams assisting people in preparing wills and powers of attorney in the event that they were mobilized. Person after person has had property that has appreciated. It is real estate which was formerly in rural areas, and is now in resort areas. This could result in people having to cut timber early, which would be negative. Timber has been a phenomenal resource which appreciates in value so quickly that immediately people who are of average means become taxed upon the death of a loved one.

I think that another point that needs to be made is that the Federal death tax was enacted in 1916 to provide for funds to fight World War I. We heard a few minutes ago that it needs to be reformed and not eliminated. I will say that reform is simply a code word for keeping the door open for abuse.

The best way to handle any tax is to eliminate the tax. It may sound good that we would reform it and it would apply to a very tiny percentage, but we all know that that is leaving it alive so that in the future it could be increased and they could come back and have it on the books and simply say this is a technical amendment, we understand what that means, and suddenly we have taxes which are increased in all directions.

The real question on this is in regard to grandparents. They should be encouraged to save for their children and for their grandchildren. To me this is an assault on grandparents who have worked hard all their lives. They want to provide for their families and want to pass it on. Tomorrow I will be looking forward to voting on this for the grandparents of America.

The bottom line, a good question, is that normally government will tax gains. That is assets that are appreciating by gains. But why does the government have a right to tax the ultimate loss, which is someone's life?

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the leadership he is providing on this issue. I want to just underscore that this is also a jobs issue. This poster I have here says it quite clearly. More than 70 percent of family businesses do not survive to the second generation. I was talking earlier about an auto dealer in my district. He has created his dealership and three others, and 70 percent of family businesses passed from the founder to the children do not survive. Eighty-seven percent did not make it to the third generation.

Mr. Speaker, why is that? One of the principal reasons is the inheritance tax. When businesses go under, it means a loss of jobs. Sixty percent of small business owners report that they would create new jobs over the coming year if the estate tax were permanently repealed. Why is that? It is directly related to what I was talking about earlier.

My friend has estate planning in order to mitigate his death tax when he tries to pass his business on to his son. If he did not have to do that, to employ those kinds of vehicles, he would have more money, and most of his money is tied up in his business, what would he probably do? He would probably sow it back into the business and create more jobs, which generates more taxpayers.

The theme of the evening is the permanent repeal of the inheritance tax or death tax. Before we go on with that and before I recognize the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH), and I deeply respect his leadership on the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman has been instrumental in bringing this permanent repeal to the floor of the House, but I know that the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) wanted to speak to some of the education issues that were brought up earlier this evening.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) to speak to this issue.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for letting me go out of order to speak on education. I would tell the gentleman I grew up in Missouri, and many of the folks who pass away, they try to pass down their farms, and they have to sell off the farm that they have had in their family for 200 years because they cannot afford to pay the taxes on it, up to 55 percent.

Mr. Speaker, this is the silly season. It is election time. We hear tax breaks for the rich. We hear the Republicans are cutting education. The White House is cutting education. Do not let the facts get in the way of the truth. The gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) just spoke, and I would like to address some of the things that the gentlewoman said.

I was in the committee hearing with the gentlewoman when Secretary Paige came and she made the same accusations. The Secretary, point by point, refuted every single claim that the gentlewoman from Ohio was making that we are cutting education, or that the President's budget cuts education.

We here on the House floor had a very bipartisan H.R. 1 vote. The President's primary concern is that no child is left behind. My wife is a special assistant to the Secretary for Education for Management, a position that the Clinton administration totally did away with and caused a lot of the fraud, waste and abuse. The Secretary told the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) point by point where the gentlewoman is wrong. The Democrats have a number for education, an increased number for education. No matter what it is, the Democrats will add to that number. They claim to be the great fiscal responsibility party; but when we look, every single budget, except for defense, they want to increase it out here beyond the budget and actually take money out of Social Security.

We came up with an increase in education. We increased Pell Grants. We increased money for IDEA. The maximum amount that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle ever funded IDEA for was 6 percent. We quadrupled that.

Pell Grants, all the way down the line, we have increased dollars. And something else that the President did and now that the Department of Education is in Republican hands, what they are doing, they are driving the money to the local school districts so that the parents, the teachers, and the administrators can control those dollars instead of the bureaucrats that the Democrats want to control the money. They want more money in an election cycle so they can pass it down and have bigger bureaucracies. We want to get it down to the classrooms.

The President is also making sure that there is accountability with those dollars. My wife sits on the management team over there in the Department of Education. Do Members realize under the Clinton administration the folks that worked over there had over $400,000 on their credit cards? There were over 40 of them that charged houses and furniture and personal items on their credit cards. There is one lady still working with her job. The department may be afraid to go after her, but I am going to go after her donkey, and she is not going to have that job after I am through with her. It is fraud, waste and abuse.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, did I hear the gentleman correctly to say that there are employees at the Department of Education that have used government credit cards to charge personal items?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Personal items, furniture, housing equipment, personal items, movies, all kinds of things. One of them still is working over there, and I am going to make sure that she is not working there in the future.

But the bottom line is the President is not cutting education. Tax breaks for the rich, we will hear over and over. Again, do not let the facts get away with the truth. Alan Greenspan said the Democrats tried to go after the President for the recession and the economy. Guess what, tax relief helped stop that. That is not the Republicans talking, that is OMB, that is Alan Greenspan, our economist.

All Democrats want is an item for the election, and they cannot do it. They tried to get the President on Enron, and it did not work. They said he should have helped with Enron on the other end. That did not work. The majority leader in the Senate went after the President on the war, and that did not work. They are trying everything they can in this election year to have leverage and make an issue.

Mr. Speaker, we are not cutting education. The Secretary pointed out to the gentlewoman from Ohio point by point that her statements were false.

I would like to thank the gentleman. I ran over here because I serve on that committee, and it is upsetting in an election year to make false claims that the President is doing something when he is not. We may not be adding as much as the gentlewoman wants, but we are staying within the budget.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the issue at hand. Many Democrats want to increase it 10 percent, and we put through an increase of 5 percent or 4 percent, and they call that a cut. Indeed, we saw that for years and years and years in this body. I know the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) got elected with me in 1994. That was one of the things in 1994 that I campaigned on. For years politicians in Washington would increase something by 5 percent, but the bureaucrats at the agency would say that they needed a 10 percent funding increase.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. If the gentleman would yield, not only was the money increased, but the accountability was not there. The Department of Education had $50 million in student loans that they could not account for. Their books were unauditable. The Democrats and their group at the Department of Education, $12 million in direct student loans went to the wrong students, and so they then had to give another $12 million up. We are shoring that up. We are not only increasing the money for education, we are making sure that it gets down to the children, and that the parents have control of it.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the critical leadership he is providing on education. Educating our children is perhaps one of the most important issues that we perform here in Washington, although I believe that is really a priority for parents and local school districts, although we need to do everything that we can to try to help.

The issue of the evening is the very important debate we will be having tomorrow. Tomorrow the House of Representatives will take up a piece of legislation that I introduced last year. It is to make the repeal of the estate tax permanent. It is H.R. 2143. It would not have been possible to get this piece of legislation moved to the floor if we did not have the support of a lot of people. Obviously the leadership of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority leader, and all of our leadership team. Critical as well was the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that committee one of the people actively pushing to bring this bill to the floor was the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH). I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for allowing us to share this time. I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) who again talked about education and the importance, yes, of dollars, but also the importance of accountability. It is very interesting the differences we see. My son is now 8 years of age, and I remember when he came home from school at 7, and he was talking about the concept of infinity.

And he said, You know, Dad, you will never reach it because you can always add more to it. And indeed it seems, sadly sometimes, along partisan lines the notion is whatever figure is arrived at, oh, no, we can always spend more. The key of course is not just the right allocation of resources. It also of course is accountability. And, Mr. Speaker, now it is time to become accountable to the American family, to family-owned businesses, to ranches and farms and so many different concerns where the scourge of the death tax has come like a thief in the night, not only death robbing people of their lives but the death tax robbing families of their future.

Our good friend who sadly is departing this Chamber, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), once borrowed Patrick Henry's admonition. Said my good friend, "No taxation without respiration," and I think that is evocative not only of history but something very practical. It was one of our great founders, Ben Franklin, gifted in so many different ways, almost with the incredible prescience to see what would come in this constitutional Republic, but even Dr. Franklin with his incredible foresight never predicted that the constitutional Republic he helped to found would tax people upon their death. Remember his days as a humorist writing in "Poor Richard's Almanac," he said: "There are only two certainties in life, death and taxes."

But even Dr. Franklin did not foresee that this Republic would one day tax a person upon the event of his death and of course realty does not affect that person but that person's family. And lest anyone think this is a partisan issue, Mr. Speaker, we would thank those across the aisle who have joined with us to understand how this unfair tax should be eliminated; and we should point out for those, Mr. Speaker, who wonder why we are returning to this, it is because my colleague from Florida very capably pointed out that a rule difference, and again I am not directing this at the other body, but a rule difference did not allow for the implementation on a permanent basis of this particular repeal.

And so we have the curious situation, while we made a profound move to repeal the death tax, to roll it back, as my friend from South Carolina outlined, as my friend from Florida recognizes, we have almost an absurd situation now where if one is going to die, he had better do it in the year 2010 to realize the complete benefit of repeal of the death tax. For if we do nothing, whoom, here it is back again in the year 2011. That is why I salute my friend from Florida bringing forward this notion, serving as a catalyst to make this repeal permanent.

And again lest anyone think this is a partisan concern, I would point out that the one-time standard bearer of the Democratic Party in the State of Arizona for the office of Governor back in 1994 approached me 2 years ago saying "Congressman, you have got to get rid of this death tax." Why? Whatever political disagreements we had in other areas, the gentleman correctly understood his business, his livelihood, of family-owned enterprise, of grocery stores, the capital involved in that business, the fact that so much of the assets are tied up in bricks and mortar and quite literally in the groceries on the shelves, and unless the death tax is repealed, then a business that had been in his family would be in danger of having to be sold off to pay the taxman.

It is even more pronounced in the rural communities I have been honored to represent for the better part of a decade, with farmers and ranchers and so many small businesses owned by families but especially when we come to the whole notion of agriculture and farms and ranches and how quite literally so many families are land rich and cash poor. So much of their assets are tied up in real estate, tied up in farm machinery, tied up in those very tangible assets; and so often we have a situation where, to satisfy this tax bill, people were forced to liquidate their assets, to sell off the family farm, to sell off the family business to satisfy the tax needs of Uncle Sam.

While we are thinking about this, Mr. Speaker, something else we should point out, over the years it has become painfully apparent that the American people do not rely on this death tax. Indeed, as we look back over the last few years, the death tax on an annual basis only accounts for about 1 percent of the revenue that comes in to the Federal Government. Yet three-quarters of that 1 percent is spent pursuing the families of the farmers and ranchers who pass away, the families of the people who created these small businesses, to have them pay a bill that for them is insurmountable, it seems, but in the scheme of things only accounts for about 1 percent of the revenue that comes in to the Federal Government on an annual basis.

No, Mr. Speaker, we can be smarter. This House in a bipartisan way took that important step toward that great day with eventual repeal of the death tax, but we need to make it permanent. Permanency is important, for if we fail to do that, you will have the absurdity of in 2010 seeing it completely repealed but in 2011 the Grim Reaper comes back with a vengeance. I know none of us here advocate state-sponsored euthanasia; yet that is the absurdity we would have if we failed to move to enact permanent death tax relief.

Mr. Speaker, lest you think this is exclusively the domain of family-owned businesses, farmers and ranchers, certainly it is important and perhaps it is more pronounced there, but I would tell you the story of a lady I encountered in Tucson, Arizona. Down on a visit there to that part of our State, a lady came up and spoke of her father's experience. Here was a man who worked hard, indeed, in a career that very seldom do we see anymore with the modern marketing techniques, but he was a milkman. He worked for a dairy. He came back from World War II and worked hard delivering milk every day, not exactly a highbrow occupation. Certainly there is dignity in every form of work, but very few people would think about that gentleman as being a captain of industry or someone with vast financial resources, but what that gentleman did was incredibly exemplary and so symptomatic of the American experience. The money he made, he was able to save judiciously. He made some wise investments coming home from World War II, getting involved, working as a milkman. His hard work and wise investments paid off in an estate that was worth millions of dollars.

But there is just one catch here. As wise as he was with investments, he did not understand that, oh, gee, you have got to work on estate planning. He did not seek out a team of lawyers to sit down and make all the proper machinations to change the situation to save the funds. And so when he contracted a terminal illness, only then in the twilight of his days did he realize, despite such an exemplary life, hard work, thrift, industry, doing the right thing for his family, only then did he come to the shocking realization that somehow, despite that hard work and industry, his planning had been incomplete.

His daughter told me the story how her father called her in and her sibling in and not only the challenge and the pain of a terminal illness but the realization that he was leaving them in essence with a gigantic tax bill to pay because of this death tax.

Mr. Speaker, if you work hard and play by the rules, must we all be captains of high finance? I understand a modicum of estate planning. I understand the importance of insurance. Certainly having moved from broadcasting, into that profession before coming into public life, I understand the importance of life insurance and financial planning, but must we ask everyone to deal with the machinations and brain power and inner workings of complicated financial measures? No, it should be simple and this should be repealed permanently because it is wrong.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the story the gentleman told was very, very moving. Before I yield to my good friend from the great State of Nebraska, I want to tell another real-life story. I think it is so important when we make things like this understandable from real-life experiences.

I want to talk about a florist in Kissimmee, Florida. His name is Danny Sexton. A lot of people on the east coast have passed through Kissimmee because it is right outside Disney World. Danny started out with a floral shop. His uncle had been established in the floral business in Kissimmee for many years, had a much bigger shop; he had about 20 employees and his uncle died, and Danny was the sole heir. Danny inherited his uncle's floral shop.

Danny, like so many small businessmen, employed just a small number of people, five or six people. He had been involved in his community for years, giving to the United Way and other charitable programs. He really knew nothing about the death tax. Suddenly he found himself in charge of not only his floral shop, but his uncle's floral shop, which had been established many years earlier, was much bigger, had a lot of commercial accounts and he inherited all these employees. Lo and behold, he discovered that he was going to have to pay a tax bill, and the death tax was $160,000. But what was the real shocker, what was the real corker in all this is that you do not just take the floral shop and just give it to Danny, you have got to do a lot of other things. Lawyers got involved. There were $60,000 in lawyers' fees, there was $14,000 of accountants fees, there was a $15,000 bill for just miscellaneous expenses. And then this one here I thought was really kind of interesting, an IRS fee. I think that was to appraise the value of this floral business.

If anybody knows, if you run something like a floral shop, the margins are kind of tight and he had to go out and borrow $253,000 to be able to pay for all of this. It was a real burden on him. He ended up having to lay off, I think, two or three of the employees in the shop. He additionally had to ask a number of the employees that he retained to take a cut in salary. Indeed, it was so bad for him initially that they went the whole summer in the office without the air conditioner. The air conditioner broke. If any of you have ever spent a summer in Florida, you know it is very humid. It is not only hot, it is very humid. And they had to totally cut off charitable contributions and helping out the Boy Scouts and the United Way when they would come around and they would have a special banquet or an event.

Danny is pulling out of this. I know he is going to be okay. But this is really what it is all about. Danny's uncle had employed 20 people for years. Danny's uncle had paid a lot of money to the Federal Government in personal, Federal withholding, in the FICA tax. What is even more so is that all the employees who worked for him were also paying their taxes, their Social Security, their Medicare tax year after year after year. The Federal Government had actually gotten probably millions of dollars of revenue off of the enterprise that had been created by his uncle. And then for him to die and then for the Federal Government to come along and say, No, you've got to give us some more, I think, is taxing that is immoral. It is immoral to tax after you have taxed.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend from Nebraska, another Member whom I believe has played a critical role in helping us bring this issue to the floor of the House making the repeal of the inheritance tax permanent law, because until you do that, you are not going to affect really all the estate planning that has to go on to prevent people from being burdened with this tax on their death.

Mr. TERRY. I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, our good friend from Arizona here, he has been a great leader, like the gentleman from Florida has, on this important issue. It is important to a lot of people in Nebraska now.

Before I talk about some of the stories that I have heard as I have gone around and talked to businesses in Omaha, small businesses, family-owned businesses, and share our similar experiences, the gentleman from Arizona mentioned that in the totality of our budget, the revenue that is received from the death tax is less than 1 percent, but yet there are a lot of our colleagues here that just fight to keep that money in.

I think it exemplifies why all three of us ran for this office and why we fight to come back every year, is to stop that type of mentality, which is "we need more money, more money, more money." So when we try and reduce spending here by reducing taxation, because it is the only principle here, that budgets fill the money that we have, that if we tax more, we will spend more, but if we tax less, we will spend less, it is a simple proposition.

So of the greater taxing policies of the Nation, I think it is important that we realize the simple premise that the more money we take in from people, the more we are going to spend. So I appreciate the gentleman bringing up that important point.

Now, why? We have all said in our own words why it is bad policy. Why is the death tax bad policy? Well, think about the very principles that this country was founded on, the principles of independence and freedom and entrepreneurship, where people worked hard to build their little businesses, and some worked day and night, day and night, seven days a week, and they were able to build it up and build it up, and maybe even the next generation of family members were able to help build it up as well. I mean, that is the American spirit, is working hard and realizing, you realizing, the rewards of your work.

So, what is the policy? The U.S. Government comes, and many States, by the way, have followed suit, and said, you know, because of our spending habits and our need for more revenues, upon the death and the transfer we are going to confiscate, and I use that word, confiscate a portion of what you have worked hard to build up in your lifetime.

I would say to the gentlemen, I believe that people should keep the rewards. Yes, we have to pay our taxes, but, my gosh, just taking up to 55 percent of somebody's wealth that they have built up through hard work, through the American dream, and just taking it for our spending needs, is absolutely wrong.

Mr. HAYWORTH. If the gentleman from Florida will yield, I just wanted to point out again that observation that our friend from Florida made. There is a situation at work here that is so myopic, it is almost to be penny wise and pound foolish. Because, as was pointed out in the case of Mr. Sexton and the flower shop, 20 employees, payroll taxes, people paying their income taxes, though this was a considerable hardship, the money devoted to handle all the details and red tape and the death tax itself in the long term, did it not cost the government more revenue?

You see, here is the difference. And I appreciate the concept that my friend from Nebraska brings forward about taxing more, spending more; taxing less, spending less. But there is something else at work here that we have to understand about the reduction of the tax bill. When the American people have more money to put to work, when the death tax is repealed and more people are at work, guess what? Revenues to the Federal Government will actually increase, because more money is being put to work. It is called the principle of growth.

So we have to be very careful here, and that is the myopia; in addition to the unfairness and injustice, lack of justice, injustice of the death tax, is that really in the long term it actually costs revenue. It is inefficient, as well as immoral.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I have just become so focused. As the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) said, the morality of just confiscating one's work product for the sake of having revenues, we leave out the economic component of in essence taking away a business.

We hear speakers, and we are going to hear them tomorrow when the bill comes up, that say that this is not real; that people do not really have to sell their businesses to meet the death tax; that it is a phony argument.

Well, I want to read an article from the Omaha World-Herald from December 11, 2001. So it is not like we have to go back to the archives of years past to come up with an article that is relevant to our discussion today. But it is about a ranch in western Nebraska, of which kind of the theme of it was Ted Turner buying another ranch in Nebraska.

Let me just read some highlights from this article in the Omaha World-Herald, and I will give them their copyright credits here. It is talking about media mogul Ted Turner added another 12,300 acres of Cherry County grazing land to his bison ranching empire. The purchase was to be finalized on Monday. It gives Turner about 234,000 acres in three counties in Nebraska, making him the largest private landowner in Nebraska, as he is in the United States, owning about 1.75 million acres in New Mexico, Montana, South Dakota and Nebraska.

The Coble family, I am going to get to and read this verbatim from the Omaha World-Herald article, Bill Coble of Leewood, Kansas, a grandson of the Cobles, said that the death in August of Doris Coble precipitated the sale. It was necessary to pay off the inheritance taxes, Bill Coble said. The only way you can make it work is with an added amount of life insurance and to work the ranch yourself, Coble said. The purchase ends a 100-year Sand Hills operation of the Coble family. A 100-year tradition of the Coble family gone, because when the operator, Doris Coble, the last of the parents, died, the grandson could not take over the property. He had to sell it to pay off the inheritance taxes. This is a family that did not purchase the millions of dollars of life insurance policy to protect itself. My family buys life insurance to protect our family. Here you buy life insurance to pay your taxes. That is wrong.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I am glad the gentleman brought this up, because I wanted to get at some of the arguments we are going to hear on the floor tomorrow from the opposition. What the gentleman was just talking about, I think, segues very nicely into that.

They are going to put forward an alternative proposal. The inheritance tax repeal we passed last year phases in over 8 or 9 years, and then the reason why we have got this bill on the floor tomorrow is in the 10th year it just comes back in its full force.

What the minority will put forward is the notion we should just have a $3 million exemption and we could enact that immediately. They may point to the farmers and the ranchers and say if we just had this $3 million exemption, the Coble family that the gentleman cited is a good example, they would be covered, and they could pass the ranch on. Danny Sexton would not have encountered the problem he had. He could have inherited the floral shop from his uncle.

The problem with that is that if your asset is worth more than $3 million, then everything over $3 million gets taxed at something like a 50 percent tax rate. We have inflation, and these farms and ranches that they say now are valued at less than $3 million, what are they going to be worth 10 years from now, what are they going to be worth 15 years from now?

It obviously picks winners and losers, and that is the main gripe that I have. It is basically saying, well, if you have created a small business and it is only worth $3 million or less, then we will not tax you. But if you have been really successful, or if you have farmland in, say, Napa, California, where it is valued at incredible prices, no, we are going to tax you. I just think that is totally wrong.

Let me also point out, 60 percent of the top black-owned businesses today in America are valued at over $2 million. That means in another 5 or 7 years, those assets are going to be worth probably over $3 million, and, boom, they are going to get hit by the inheritance tax.

Another point is a point that I think the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) was alluding to earlier, that they look at making the inheritance tax repeal permanent and they say we are going to lose $99 billion. That does not take into consideration at all the fact that if you leave that money in the economy, you are going to put more money in the economy and it is going to create jobs and it is going to create wealth and that we would be able to then tax that.

Indeed, it is estimated by economic analysts that the inheritance tax actually costs, and this is what the gentleman said earlier, I believe, it actually costs us, because it takes money out of the economy, money that would be flowing around the economy; it forces people to sell small businesses; it forces small business owners to take out a loan to pay the inheritance tax; and then their small business does not operate sufficiently.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mindful of that as a broadcaster, the old time clock on the wall, it is important for us to pass permanent repeal, no matter the siren song of seduction saying "let us set a temporary level that will accommodate some folks." Maybe this is a fundamental philosophical difference.

When you get in the realm of targeted tax cuts, you are asking this Federal Government to pick winners and losers, and you do nothing for the business owners, the grocery store owners, the farm machinery dealership owners, the automobile dealership owners, who have significant capital sunk into that business, who literally are asset-rich and cash-poor. You exacerbate the problem. Our purpose is not to set American against American, not to get wrapped up in the I believe ultimately misguided notion of class warfare, but to allow everyone to succeed.

There is one other note undergirding all of this. It is especially pronounced in Arizona, where one of our local newspapers is concerned about the price of sprawl at an acre an hour. Why do you think farms are being sold off? To satisfy the death tax. Gone is a lot of our agricultural land. That is a real problem in States like Arizona and Florida and across the country. That is another reason to make this repeal permanent.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his input on this special order. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska for the last word.

Mr. TERRY. Well, I will let the gentleman have the last word, and thank him for bringing this to the floor. One of the other points, though, I want to make with that is the cost of the machinery. When we talk about our farms and ranches, we have a plant that manufactures farm equipment. The price of some of that equipment coming out is several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Like a combine.

Mr. TERRY. $200,000 to $300,000, and even more if you go to some of the other equipment. A small family-owned printing company that I toured last summer when I was home, one printer runs hundreds of thousands of dollars, half a million dollars for a printer. So when you talk about what level do you set this, if you do not eliminate it, and picking the winners and losers, you fail to recognize that they are eking out a small living with very expensive equipment, but yet we tax on the value of that equipment, not the living that a father and mother and maybe a son and a daughter can make off of that. That is why it remains fundamentally unfair.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank both of my colleagues for their input on this very important issue.

Let me just close with one very important point. We will also hear that making the inheritance tax repeal permanent will hurt donations to charity.

The assumption there in that argument is that people are only giving to charity so they do not have to give it to the Federal Government.

I just think that is not true. If we look at what happened after the Reagan tax cuts in the 1980s, giving to charity skyrocketed. I think wealthy people are motivated by the best intentions when they give. If they do not have to give as much money at death, I think they will give even more money to charity, and that America's charities will benefit from the permanent repeal of the inheritance tax.

EDUCATION DETERMINES THE FUTURE OF AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OTTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this time, and I will be joined by some of my colleagues a little later, I hope, to talk on this special order on the floor this evening about a very important issue facing this country today, maybe one of the key issues.

Everyone talks about my issue is more important, or that issue is more important. But the truth is, when we are talking about the future of America, that issue is education, because that is the one issue that not only helps us this week, this year, next year, but really secures our future when we are headed into the 21st century and the challenges we face. This group of young people in our schools today will determine the kind of future we are going to have.

So many times I get perplexed when I have my colleagues come to this floor, and I really sense, number one, that they have not visited a school recently; or if they have been to a school, that they did not go into the classrooms; and if they went into a classroom, they probably did not pay attention to what they were seeing or listening to from the teacher, or they were not looking into the eyes of some of the very bright children who were in those classrooms struggling to learn in conditions, in many cases, that Members of this body would not want to be in every day.

They are overcrowded, and in the summertime they are hot, and in the wintertime they may be cold. Or they are in a trailer outside, and if it is raining, they walk through the rain to get to the classroom, or walk through any kind of inclement weather.

First, this evening, let me talk about some very positive things, some good things that are happening in our public schools. As this hour goes on, I will talk about more of them.

Let me first talk about some schools in my district, something I know about, and in North Carolina. I had the occasion over the last couple of weeks, and I make an effort to visit schools about every week, but I went to a school down in part of my district, Anderson Creek Elementary, and visited with the principal, Ms. Cobb, and an awful lot of the teachers and students.

They have a program where they encourage children to read. It is really a kindergarten through about fourth grade reading program. Some of the schools I am going to mention actually do it in the higher grades.

She got those young people so excited about reading by giving them certificates and tee shirts, and getting the parents involved through kindergarten, that those youngsters in that school, and there are about roughly 700 elementary school students, over 545 of them read at least 100 books. They had read a total of over 155,000 books this year; probably more than that by now.

When we talk about good things, those are the kinds of things that make a difference. Because if a youngster learns to read and they learn to do math and they learn to communicate, that will make a difference. They will be successful students.

I went to North Harnett Elementary the same day, where the leading reader in that school had read 410 books. It is amazing to me that a youngster would read 410 books and still do his or her homework.

At Anderson Creek, they had one student who read 545 books. The children in that school had read a substantial number. It is sort of contagious. These are good things happening in Harnett County.

Lafayette Elementary, the same thing. They went in, had an assembly, and they honored the students. Their program was titled Reading Around the World, where they actually put flags of nations around the world about which the youngsters had read. They got involved. They had tee shirts and they got certificates, and they honored top readers.

These are the things we do not hear a lot about, but we always hear people critical of those people who are giving so much time in the classroom who really are creative, innovative, and thinking about how do we make things better for children.

Then I went to Cleveland Elementary School, a school in the community I grew up in. The same kind of thing: a very caring principal and assistant principal, with an awful lot of hardworking, focused teachers. They were doing the program not only in reading, but in a number of other areas, and they were giving out certificates. Children were really and truly getting ready to build a strong foundation for the future, things we were not doing 10 or 20 years ago.

I went over to East Clayton Elementary School over near Clayton, and the same kind of thing: a very focused principal providing great leadership, and teachers who were caring, creative, and making a difference.

I only mention these schools because they are representative not only of just schools in my congressional district or in my State of North Carolina, but I happen to think they are representative of teachers and students and principals and administrators all across this country.

Do we have problems? Sure. Do we need to improve? Absolutely. But they are about making a difference. This is the way we improve it. I have learned a long time ago that if we want to improve education, we lay out a plan, we work with the people, and we give them encouragement. It is awful easy to be critical.

It is a lot like a little poem I use many times, and I think my colleagues would benefit from that, because it reminds me of being an architect. It takes a long time to go to school to be an architect. It takes a number of years. But the last time I checked, if we want to hire somebody to tear a building down, we can put them in a machine and put a ball at the end of a chain and we can knock it down pretty quick.

"I watched them tear a building down,
A gang of men in a busy town.
With a ho heave ho and a lusty yell,
They swung a beam and a side wall fell.
I asked the foreman, are these men skilled,
The kind you would hire if you had to build?
He smiled and said, 'No, indeed,
Common labor is all I need,
For I can wreck in a day or two
What people have taken years to do.'
And I thought to myself as I went my way,
Which of these roles have I tried to play?
Have I been a builder who builds with care, Carefully measuring the world by the rule or a square,
Or have I been content to roam the town,
Content with the business of tearing down?"

Too many times we have people who unfortunately are willing to tear down, but are not willing to help be architects. We not only need architects to build buildings, we need architects in our classrooms. We have them in teachers; we need more. Yes, we need resources to help train them better, because the needs for our teachers are changing every day.

I think that is the key issue in education, is that we give encouragement where it is needed. Certainly, we give counsel when it is not working out. If we have people who are not doing the job, then we need to take appropriate action, like we would do in any other area. But we ought to acknowledge when our teachers and our administrators and people who work with our children every day are doing a good job.

Let me just share with Members, if I may, before I get to some prepared remarks, I read an article recently that I want to just read some pieces out of. It is by Gerald Bracey, and it was in The Washington Post. I think it is right on target when we are talking about education.

It says, "Why do we scapegoat the schools?" I could not help but think, there is a lot of truth in this. I think I know a little bit about this. I said to my colleagues when they came here, I served as State superintendent of schools of North Carolina for 8 years. That is an elective office in North Carolina, like the governor and some others.

There is one thing I learned. We may not know all the answers of what to do, but I know some of the things that do not work. Sometimes that is worth an awful lot.

Gerald Bracey made this point: "There is no pleasing some people, even when they get what they want. So why do we keep listening to them? For more than 20 years now, people have been bashing our schools."

He goes all the way back to the time when the Russians put up the Sputnik, and we got all carried away in this country and said our math and science programs are in shambles, our schools are failing us, our schools need to be fixed, so we put together a program. Lo and behold, with President Kennedy's focus and commitment, and yes, this Congress, the House and Senate put in resources behind it, and I emphasize, resources, and translated, that is money behind it, we put a man on the moon before the end of the decade.

But Bracey goes on to say, we didn't say to the public schools, you are no longer in crisis, you have done a good job. You make this happen. Then all of a sudden, we walked along, and they did not get credit for what they had done. We stayed quiet. All of a sudden, after that happened, he said that there was no declaration that the crisis in education was over, and the question was raised, do pigs fly? Translated, that is that we did not give them the credit; it was assumed they had to do it.

He goes on to talk about, again, he says, "I don't mean to suggest, of course, that America's public schools are perfect. The dreary state of some urban and poor rural school systems is well documented." I would agree with that. He said, "But I have been following the anguish over our competitive capabilities since the '83 report, and I've noticed the same pattern. In the early nineties, as the economy tanked and the recession set in, many variations of 'Lousy schools are producing a lousy work force and it is killing us in the global market' could be heard, but those slackards somehow managed to turn things around. By early 1994, many publications featured banner headlines about the recovery that later became the longest sustained period of economic growth in the Nation's history. And then, 'The American economy, back on top,' was the way that The New York Times summed up the turnaround in February of 1994."

Well, did the public schools have anything to do with that? Were the people that were employed in those businesses all of a sudden better 2 years later than they were 2 years before? Did we give them any credit for that happening? No. They continued to be hammered.

He goes on to say, "Looking at a number of the different rankings of schools and school reports, the United States looked particularly bad in one DEF category: the difference in quality between rich and poor schools. We finished 42nd lower than any other developed nation, which is shameful for a rich nation."

So if 26 nations had better schools, how did we wind up being number 2 in competitive ranking of all the nations in the world? The DEF used dozens of variables in many sectors, and the United States ranks well across the board.

One important consideration is the brain drain factor. Our scientists and engineers stay here, earning us a top ranking in that category. Other nations of the world who send young people to the United States to be educated, and certainly we have received or we have been the beneficiary of that for a number of years, they come here and many of them stay in the United States, and they make their contributions here. We as a society and as a people have been beneficiaries of their coming to America and getting their educations here. It has made a difference.

I only share this because I think this article is a good article for me to segue into the comments I want to make this evening, because I think there are some good things. There are a lot of good things about our public schools. I think the American public cares very deeply about our public schools.

We have roughly 53 million young people in this country in the public schools of America. Depending on what State one is in, that may range from roughly 93 or 94 percent in North Carolina to where some States, maybe a little lower, we probably have 95 instead of 94, and some States less because they have more parochial schools. The bottom line is, the bulk of the students in this country are in the public school sector, and historically they have gotten a good education.

The challenge we face today in the 21st century is a much different challenge than we faced 50 or even 100 years ago, or even 25 years ago, for that matter. The world is a different place. We are technology-driven, by and large. We want every child to be able to make it. We do not have the luxury that we had 30 or 40 years ago where we could educate the top 20 percent, the rest of them could get a job on the production line.

Those jobs in industry, wherever it may be, or even on the farm, for that matter, wherever they work, are really tied to technology.

Many of the jobs around this country and increasingly around the globe are tied to technology; and that is why we need our young people better educated today than ever in history. And that is why we look to the public schools and we are challenging them. Parents are, rightly so, looking at their community. That is why when you see survey after survey, if you look at the rankings, and I have had occasion to follow them for a number of years now, by and large parents tend to rate the schools that their children attend fairly high. They usually get a B or higher for the schools their children attend. And if you look at schools, in general, they tend to get a much lower ranking.

Why is that so? I think the reason is that parents and the people in that community are familiar with those schools where their children go. They know the teachers. They know what happens in that school, so they get a much higher ranking. They do not know about all these other schools. What they hear about these schools is general information that is shared, be it accurate or inaccurate, so they tend to process it. If they tell them schools are bad and they hear public officials continue to say it, they will say, My school is good.

I think it has a lot to do with the same kind of ranking with Members in this body. They say Congress in general, we really do not have that high of numbers; but if you ask about a Member that represents in a district, he is a pretty good guy or lady. I know him. They represent us well. I think that is reflected in that as well.

Let me move now to some of the issues I want to talk about, and I am joined now by some of my colleagues, and I will call on them in just a minute, the gentleman from Chicago, Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), who really has been a tremendous leader in education in this body. But I would like to begin tonight by talking about why education is such an urgent national issue, and it really is.

Since September 11 we have all been heavily focused on the issues regarding our national security, and I think that is appropriate, and on homeland security specifically. And that focus is completely appropriate as we have become aware of threats to our security in this new era of terrorist attacks. I mean,. if we pick up a newspaper, we read a magazine, we turn on the TV, it is in front of us. So it is appropriate we deal with it. But we make a huge mistake, I think, if we fail to recognize and act on the reality that increasing the investment in education is imperative but it is absolutely critical to our Nation's security. It is as important, maybe more important, but it is equally as important as protecting our borders, both in the immediate sense and in the long term.

You know, it is a lot like a child developing. It is awful hard for a child to develop healthy if we do not feed them the proper food. And if you give them food to develop the bodies, we have to give them the right education and opportunities to develop their minds, to be a well-rounded person. In the 21st century, America's economic growth and prosperity depend more and more on a knowledge-based economy and on the skills of our people. And we have seen that over the last many years.

Working Americans are beginning to understand that their level of earning is tied directly to their level of learning. Let me repeat that again. Their level of earning is directly tied to their level of learning. And it will be more so in the 21st century. And we really do not think about it; a lot of us as adults think of learning as academic being in the classroom. Let me remind my colleagues that all of us learn every day in the people we come in contact with, the interactions, the bulletins we read, whatever we do. It is things that we pick up. And it really perplexes me when I hear people talk about, and sometimes they do not think before they speak sometimes, they talk about how a student made little of this and a little of that.

I used to go to civic clubs. I specifically remember one Rotary Club, and I will not call the name of where it was because somebody might be watching from that town. We had an eighth grade exit math exam for our students in North Carolina. I thought, I will have some fun. So I carried that math exam with me to the civic club. I will not even call the name of it. I handed it out.

I said, I have read in this local paper how this exit exam is not even an eighth grade level. So I passed it out to the people who had come to lunch. Now, I was not so dumb as to not carry the answer sheet with me. I carried it with me. So I watched their faces as they were working on it. Finally as we got near the end of the meeting I said, if anybody wants to raise their hand and give me the answer, and I would read the question. And I could tell by looking at their face some of them had not done too good on getting their answers right.

The point is we have some of the brightest young people in our public schools today we have ever had. But our challenge today in this body as we develop policy and across this country is to make sure that every child gets that opportunity, and we are trying. I want to talk about it as the evening goes on about the bill of No Child Left Behind and why it is important that, if we are going to do legislation, we have to put the resources behind it.

An educated populace is also critical to the survival of a free people and the sustaining of our democracy. Our Nation's experiment with self-governance can only endure if our people know and understand their stake in its success. And I will talk more later about the long-term challenges we face in education, but I want to now talk about the immediate challenges we face in America's schools. And I think before I do that, though, I want to talk about some infrastructure needs; but before I do, let me turn to my colleague from Chicago, Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), who has been a champion for education in this body. But he has really been a fighter for young people since he has been here.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE). I was sitting there thinking and recalling that North Carolina is recognized as having one of the best public education systems in the country; and as I have observed the gentleman over the last several years, I kind of smiled to myself and said, yes, I know why. And one of the reasons is because they have had great advocates like the gentleman over the years, even before he came to the Congress, who seriously promoted and functioned as an advocate, who kept pushing and kept recognizing how valuable and how important education is. And so I simply want to commend the gentleman for the kind of leadership that he has displayed in the State of North Carolina and in the United States Congress, pushing the concept that we really cannot afford to leave any child, that we cannot leave any of our children behind, especially as we continue to try and make America become the Nation that it has the potential of being.

So I thank the gentleman for giving me the opportunity to share a bit of the time with him this evening to talk about how important education is because it has always been a priority for me. And I, too, believe that the best way to preserve the safety of our country is to educate our Nation's youth so that they can continue to grow and develop and help be in a position to confront the issues and solve the problems that we continue to face.

I was thinking of the fact that we spend and we are going to spend, because we have no choice except to, billions of dollars to protect our Nation from future terrorist attacks and to rebuild what has already been torn down. And I support this kind of spending and know that it is vital to the success of our country. But I also think that we cannot afford to lose sight of the fact that, as we increase military spending, we also need to protect the future by continuing to invest in the education of our children.

I am fortunate to come from a congressional district that has some of the very best public schools as well as private schools. I mean, I have got schools like Whitney Young High School, which has won the academic decathlon every year for the last 10 years. It is known as the best college prep school in the Nation. This is a public high school. Yes, it is a magnet school; but it is also a public high school. Then I have got other schools like the Oak Park and River Forest High School, like Trinity Lutheran. All of these schools have super records.

Then I have got a little school like Providence St. Mel, which is a little private black school in the heart of the inner city where 99 percent of all the young people who graduate from there go to college. And this school has a tremendous program of discipline where every young person has to comply with whatever the rules and regulations are. If not, you just cannot go there. Paul Adams does not allow it. Then I have got St. Ignatius Prep, one of the top prep schools in the country.

And then I also have schools that turn out great athletes, people like Mark Maguire, Kevin Garnett. All of these individuals came out of my schools, schools in my community. Westinghouse just won the boys' championship this year. And Marshall High School has the best woman basketball coach in the Nation. I mean, Dorothy Gaters has won more championships and has had more offers to go to universities and go to the pros, but she will stay right there at Marshall; and that is where she is going to probably end her career.

But we also have to recognize that there is still a tremendous amount of unmet need. And that is to say, far too many of our young people do not have the resources made available to them so that they too can actualize all of the potential that they have, and so we have to keep putting in the resources. I mean, it is not good enough to talk about leaving no child behind. We also have to put the money in where it is necessary. We have to have standards that are high. There must be accountability, and there must be adherence to standards that have been set. And so I agree with everything that I have heard you talking about here earlier this evening. And I certainly want to keep commending you for keeping education on the front burner, out in the forefront.

Let me just tell you as I end and go back and do some other work, I went to a one-room school when I first started school. As a matter of fact, there was one woman, Ms. Beadie King was the teacher, and she taught eight grades plus what we called then the little primer and the big primer. And much of whatever it is that I know today and much of what I can recall, I am a person who likes to use poetry when I am talking and use vignettes, and most of those I learned from Ms. Beadie King, and I can still remember them. Today I could not remember anything, but I remember them.

So there is nothing greater than good teachers, and we need to make sure that our teachers are well compensated, that they are paid for the work that they do so that the quality of their lives can also be what it should be.

So I commend the gentleman and thank him for the leadership that he has displayed, and it has just been a pleasure to be here these few moments and join with the gentleman.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), and I would say to him that his comments here on the floor and the comments as Members speak and acknowledge great teachers that made a difference in their lives, honors those teachers in a very special way, and all of us could stand up and acknowledge those people who have made a difference.

As the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) mentioned about compensating teachers, it is important that we do a better job of it because they want their children to go to college. They want to own a home. They would like to have a nice car. And in some places in this country, they who are some of the more educated people in the communities cannot even send their children to the schools where the people who educate their children do. And that is not right in America and we have got to change that and we can do better.

The number one security threat, though, to our schools is a lack of adequate infrastructure. Let me talk about that just for a minute. My colleague from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) alluded to it a few moments ago talking about the communities that really have some of the resources and others who do not because in many of America's communities, school buildings are old and unfortunately because of the resources of those communities, they are neglected and falling apart and they do not have the kind of quality infrastructure that would make a difference. We send in children into buildings, and I have often said in my communities as I have moved around, and I think it is still true, that we have prisons in this country that we as members of this United States Congress helped build and pay for that are a whole lot nicer than the buildings we send our children to. That is wrong. It is not wrong that we have the prisons.

It is wrong that we have better facilities for them than we do for our children. We have it within our power to do something about that, and I am going to talk about that more in a minute because we come on this floor and argue about issues and policies, and many of them are short term, built to get to the next election, but I am here to tell everyone this issue is far beyond the next election. This is about the next generation and the future of this country, and I think the American people are going to hold some folks accountable for not living up to this part of the bargain because the average school in this country is over 40 years old. If the average is 40, then one can imagine how old some of those buildings are. Some of them were built shortly after the turn of the century and some are approaching 100 years of age. The age is not the issue. The condition is what is the problem. Fifteen million American children currently attend what has been classified as substandard facilities. If these were prisons in the country or if they were jails, because of the codes we have in America, we close prisons and we close jails and we are forced to build them, but there is nothing that says we cannot send a child to a substandard facility, and children, in my opinion, are not as safe as they can be in substandard schools. And they certainly are inviting targets for would-be terrorists, either foreign or domestic, in some of these cases, and let me tell why, and I am going to use my congressional district, which I think is a very progressive district and I am sure other members would probably say the same thing, but certainly they are. Our State passed a $6.2 billion State bond issue in 1996 and the counties that I am getting ready to cite have raised revenue and built buildings every year, I know, for the last 10 or 12 years, and part of their challenge is they are growing so rapidly, they cannot keep up. The biggest challenge is school overcrowding, certainly in my congressional district, and I am sure it is true in a number of the others, and use of temporary trailers or substitutes for quality classrooms.

Why is that an issue? There are several reasons. One is they are isolated from the rest of the building. In many cases they do not have shelters. They go out to the classrooms in the morning or the afternoon and it is raining or it is cold in the wintertime, they are losing instruction time. The teachers have children put a coat on to go to the bathroom or to go to the cafeteria or to the library. Members get the idea. It is just a challenge, and there are not many businesses in this country that allow their business to operate under those conditions, and yet we send our children to them and we say to the teachers we want them to send them back to us all A students, and if they do not, we are going to hold them accountable. I do not have any problem holding people accountable for the job they do. I think we ought to hold them accountable and we ought to have high standards, but we ought to have the gumption, as some of my friends would say, to put the quality facilities there to get the job done and put the resources there so they will have the tools to teach with.

Mr. Speaker, in and around the Triangle region of the Raleigh area where I represent, our schools are literally bursting at the seams. Despite the best effort of local, as I have already said, and State officials, our school systems are finding themselves swamped by rapidly increasing enrollment forced on by growth. Many people have moved to the area to find good jobs because we have seen a lot of growth over the last several years, and they have had to put children in trailers.

In my home county, as an example, Western Harnett High School now packs students and teachers into 22 trailers, 22. Multiply that by 25 to 28 students, and my colleagues get an idea of how many young people are outside the main building. They have to go somewhere else to go to bathroom. They have to go to the cafeteria, anywhere else they want to go, and in high school, remember, they change classes every hour if they are on a regular schedule. If they are on a block schedule, it may be every hour and a half or two hours. So there is a lot of movement and a lot of people outside the building.

Think of the security challenges that a high school principal faces in those conditions. They just are not big enough to handle the load. These young people are really young adults, and they are in facilities that are not what they ought to be.

Next year, school leaders on this campus, now it already has 22, are going to have to add six more because the community is growing so rapidly. Someone said, well, are they doing anything? They are getting ready to build a new high school, but the point is that is happening all across our States and many places in America.

Among all the schools in Harnett County, we have 122 trailers. Next door in Johnston County, a county that I grew up in, the school leaders have been forced to employ 169 trailers. That is how fast they are growing, and they are building new schools every year. Four Oaks Elementary alone has 16 trailers. Three-fourths of the schools in Johnston County have at least one trailer, and the story is the same all across the district because it is growing so rapidly.

Local and State leaders have stepped up to the plate and they have built new schools, but the enrollment growth is so rapid that many of these new schools are overcrowded the day they open. Across the State of North Carolina, we have more than 1,500 trailers today in use, and that number is growing, despite the best efforts of local governments and State government to put money in at a time when they are really feeling the pinch with the economic downturn.

Overcrowded schools and trailers, they are not as safe as brick and mortar, we know that. I do not want to send anyone into a panic because their children attend school in a trailer, but any principal, if he is being honest, will tell someone that security is severely diminished by the use of trailers because they are outside the main building, they do not have the kind of control, and certainly they raise the risk of security around the building.

As Congress thoroughly examines our Nation's security needs in the wake of September 11, we must not fail now because we did and we have spent money and we continue to do as we should have. We must not fail to provide assistance to get students out of trailers and into more safe and secure permanent buildings, and we can do it.

Some of my colleagues say, well, Congress ought not to do it. Let me remind them. We spend money on a lot of stuff. We build schools overseas. We build prisons here at home. I just want somebody to tell me why we cannot build school buildings because there is a bill to do it. In our State and in our local areas, we have issued a record number of bonds to finance school construction in recent years. We did it when I was superintendent.

Congress and the administration now can help provide the kind of leadership to deal with this pressing issue if they will only decide to do it across this country. At a similar time in our Nation's history where we were seeing tremendous growth and the challenge to our public schools, America faced unprecedented school age population growth with the onset of the baby boomers, and when did this happen? It really happened in the 1950s, after World War II, and at that time there was a Republican president who had been an American general that led us through World War II. He responded to the challenge with a proposal worth of $9 billion in current dollars for the Federal Government to assist with school construction.

So I do not want my colleagues on either side of the aisle saying this Congress is unprecedented, and we spend money. This was a Republican president. It was not a Democratic president. He understood there was a need. It was not about party. It was about ideology. It was about building a future for America, and there are a lot of young men and women in this country who are today adults who went to school in these buildings that were paid for by the Federal Government.

President Dwight David Eisenhower really was an American hero. That is why both parties tried to recruit him. The Republicans got him. He ran for president, but he was not afraid to provide the needed leadership on the domestic front. He understood it. Let me repeat it again. He understood that if we are going to be a strong Nation and we are going to be prepared for the future, we had to have a strong domestic economy, and on school construction, President Eisenhower said, "Without impairing in any way the responsibilities of our States, localities, communities or families, the Federal Government can and should serve as an effective catalyst in dealing with this problem." The president was right then, and we now need that same kind of leadership once again.

Here in the U.S. House, my colleagues and I are working to provide that same kind of leadership. We have endorsed H.R. 1076, the America's Better Classroom Act. This legislation will provide Federal tax credits to the holders of school construction bonds to help leverage precious resources at the local level. H.R. 1076 will help provide more than $22 billion in school construction bonds across this country, and this is a bipartisan piece of legislation. It is not partisan. It will work to build new school buildings, alleviate overcrowding, strengthen security and improve education in the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I have worked for several years to pass a similar piece of legislation. We now have 226 cosponsors on this piece of legislation, and I implore the Republican leadership of this House tonight to allow this bill to come out of the committee and come to the House floor. It is an urgent national problem, and it needs to be addressed.

President Bush, who is doing a fine job on the war against terrorism and has shown leadership on other education issues, has unfortunately ignored the school construction crisis facing this country. Mr. Speaker, the American people deserve better. The American people deserve quality schools for their children. Their children are the most precious resource they have.

Talk is cheap. It takes action and it takes responsibility, and the American people deserve the peace of mind that quality, secure schools will provide. I am proud to work with my Democratic colleagues, and yes, Republican colleagues who will join us, to support innovative solutions to this important issue. School construction is an important part of this agenda.

In addition to school construction, there are a great many other educational issues that this Congress needs to address. Over the last several weeks, we have challenged several proposals, one that floated out of the administration, to change college students' loan rates. To their credit, they pulled it back after we raised the issue, that it would cost those students and their parents considerably more.

I have had the great privilege to serve at the local level, the State level, and now at the national level. And it never fails that whenever budgets get tight, some people insist on putting education on the chopping block. That is distressful because that truly is our future. But I know too well that you cannot strengthen education on the cheap.

Also, it would be less than honest if I did not acknowledge that there are areas that we need to pay attention to. Where there are areas that need to have trimming and cutting back, we should do that. Everyone should acknowledge that; and we should not allow anyone, I do not care who they are, what position they hold, or where they are, to misspend public education money for our children and misrepresent the funding sources that they would be using. Because I happen to believe that when you cut education, you pay a heavy price.

I grew up in a rural farm community; and I always say that when you cut education, it is as dumb as eating your seed corn. Because you always save the best corn to plant the next year. Some people in this town may not understand that reference, but back home, folks understand that eating your seed corn is not a smart idea if you hope to have a crop next year. And the same is true with our children. It is sort of an old cliche, but it is so true when we talk about our children, that they are our future.

I expect if you ask most parents, they would, if they were open and honest, and most of them are, they would say to us that they could get along with a whole lot less than they do, if they had to. Because we all really, I think it is true of me and my wife, most of us want things better for our children. And that is why we work hard, because we want to make sure they are successful and they have the opportunity for a bright future.

That is why the budget resolution that the majority pushed through this body a couple of months ago now contained many; I think, very misguided proposals and misplaced priorities that I think were wrong for this country. And education was caught in that crossfire. The Republican leadership's budget resolution cut $90 million in education funds from President Bush's own proposal that was just recently enacted, the No Child Left Behind Act. If you are going to have a program and you are going to ask people to live by high standards, and I think we need to have that, if we are going to ask them to do the kind of assessment to know where children are and help them get better, we have to give them the tools to get the job done, especially at a time when we are seeing almost 40 States, I think over 40 States in this country, facing budget crisis. If we do not live up to our part of the bargain, they are probably going to figure out right quick that we did not really mean it. Because they are not going to do it, and then we will be worse off than we were when we started. And I think that budget was misguided.

The budget resolution also cut Pell grants for colleges, cut safe and drug-free schools by $200 million, improving teacher quality by $105 million, education technology by $134 million, and also eliminated 28 important educational efforts, such as dropout prevention, rural education, an area that is really hurting because of the disparate resources there, civics education, and numerous technology and training programs.

It is important that we live up to our commitment at this level. Because if we do not, even though the Federal Government only puts in, depending on the local jurisdiction, 6 to 7 percent, and in North Carolina it is probably no more than about 7 percent of the total budget because the bulk of it is State and local, that is an important piece of money because it sends a powerful signal. It says that this is a priority at the national level; we really do believe in what you are doing, and here is how we want to help those who have fallen behind.

Historically, Federal monies have been to help those who had needs in specific areas, by and large children with special needs, which we really are not meeting that obligation. We originally said we were going to pay a substantial amount more than we are now paying. We are paying 20 percent, and we should be paying more like 60 that we committed to. But these kinds of shortsighted cuts are wrong for our children, and they really are wrong for my home State and I think for the other States who are struggling to meet the needs and who really want to make a difference in children's lives.

I just hope that as this session moves on, and we are now getting into moving into the appropriations process of the budget, which will be coming up in the next several weeks, that we will correct some of these problems; that we will put the resources in that are needed so that teachers can teach and they will have the resources to meet their needs. Because if we do not put in the resources that we need and we put the mandates in for the things we want them to do, and then we threaten to hold back other monies if they do not live up to that obligation, what we do, the people we hurt the most are not the wealthy school systems in this country. They may be getting few of the resources on a percentage basis to the budget than a lot of others, but the ones who are really getting hurt are the children, in most cases, who are the most vulnerable, those in the poorest school systems, the children with special needs who get some of the money.

All those areas that are on the edge are the very youngsters that we are going to need to help. So I think sometimes we do not really understand when we pull the cord and not put the resources in place. Mr. Speaker, it has been my experience in the few years I have been here that we put together a lot of words, and talk is awful cheap. But at a time when we spend a lot of time back and forth about appropriations and budgets and so on, a lot of stuff gets lost in the sound and fury of the debate. But at the end of the day it really is about budget and spending choices that we have to make that really defines the kinds of priorities that we ought to have, and they really express our values as a Congress and as a people.

I trust that in the next several weeks that we will show that we really do value education, because we know that lifetime learning is the key to the American dream for every family, middle class, wealthy, and those who are struggling to get into the middle class. As I said earlier, in today's global economy, America's international competitiveness is absolutely dependent on our people's ability to perform knowledge-based jobs that produce the best products and services in the world. And if we are going to continue to compete, we had better be about making sure the next generation of Americans in this new economy of this Information Age can be able to earn based on what they have learned.

And it is so true. It is as true today as it was last year; but it will be more so over the next 10, 20, 30, 40, 50 years. And so we have been trying to get Congress to give higher priority to strengthening our public schools, really our neighborhood schools; and by doing that they will demonstrate how much we value the education of our children and how much we care about the communities we live in. It is irresponsible, in my opinion, to talk about how much we value education and how much we care about the future and about our children when we come to this floor and squander the opportunity to make a difference and not put the resources in place to help our children be successful.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that both our immediate and our long-term security needs depend on our investment in education. It is as critical today as it has ever been in the history of this country. You have heard others talk earlier about a number of things, but it is about looking at the future and how do we, as Members today, help those teachers in the classroom and the administrators teach our children to make decisions for tomorrow. We cannot allow children to be continually placed at risk by being condemned to less than quality facilities, and that same thing would be true for curriculum and instruction. That means we have to put the resources in where we can.

We cannot put them all in. We will never have enough, I realize that. But it has to be a partnership, and a true partnership with State, locals, and, yes, with the private sector to make sure that teachers get the skilled training they need and the ongoing training. Too many times we say to these professionals, you are professionals, we believe in you; and yet, when they walk out of the classroom and they need to get their certificates renewed or upgraded, they have to take it out of their own meager salaries to pay for it. We do not do that in any other profession I am aware of that pays that kind of wage in this country, but we do it to teachers. And that is wrong. We can do better, and we ought to be doing better.

I think America is looking to Congress to provide leadership on these urgent national priorities, and I trust that not only my Democratic colleagues but my Republican colleagues will also join me. I certainly can say to you that I stand ready to help deliver on that because I think it is critical to the future of this country. We will not get many more opportunities. Even though these are challenging times and resources are tight, if we spend them wisely, we can have a very bright tomorrow. Our children will inherit a better country, and our democracy will be safe and secure. I really believe that an educated citizenry is important to maintaining a democracy. We have seen it around the world. When we do not have quality education, we are in trouble.

I will close with this, Mr. Speaker. If we want to look at Afghanistan as a place, the first thing they did was shut down the schools. Of course, the first thing they did was oppress the women and then they shut down the schools. But the truth is if you poison the minds of young people and do not give them an opportunity, your future is pretty grim. We are not going to let that happen in America. We are going to work together to make it better. We have the chance, we have limited resources, but we can target them, we can build better schools, we can help those teachers in the classrooms who are telling children about the better world they will have. Someone has said if you want a better world, tell a child, they will build it.

RECENT BIPARTISAN TRIP TO RUSSIA, CHINA, UZBEKISTAN AND NORTH KOREA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OTTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will perhaps not take the entire hour, but I want to take this opportunity to review a recent congressional delegation trip that I led over the Memorial Day recess.

Mr. Speaker, this was a historic trip, and one that has laid the groundwork for, I think, some future historic activities for this Nation in a number of areas. The trip was to basically countries involving Russia, a visit to Moscow and then on to Tashkent, Uzbekistan; on to Beijing, China; Seoul, Korea; visiting military sites along the way. And the only disappointment of our trip was that we had planned to be the first large bipartisan delegation into Pyongyang, North Korea, to begin a dialogue with the leadership of that nation to lower the tension and the rhetoric and to see if we could not find some common ground in comparison to the recent negative feelings between the U.S. and the North Korean leadership.

Unfortunately, despite our best efforts to try throughout the entire trip, we were not successful, and I will talk about that effort over the next several minutes.

The bipartisan delegation consisted of 13 Members of the House. We had 7 Democrats and 6 Republicans. The delegation represented almost every one of our major committees in the Congress, but had a heavy emphasis of the Committee on Armed Services. The delegation was interested in a number of issues, but in particular cooperative threat reduction, ways that we could decrease the threat posed by nuclear weapons and stockpiles, ways that we could retrain, help retrain those individuals, especially in Russia, that were involved in nuclear and weapons activities, issues involving counterproliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and ways that we could work with former Soviet states and other nations to continue our counterproliferation efforts, dealing with the issue of nuclear waste and contamination and other environmental issues, energy production and distribution, cooperative efforts in the war on terrorism, Sino-American relations, and North and South Korean relations.

In addition to meetings that we had formally, we met with a number of our military troops and I will talk about some of the findings that we came away with as we visited troops throughout the region.

Mr. Speaker, we left Washington a week ago this past Friday on May 24, and traveled initially to Moscow. In Moscow, we were met by both our embassy officials and other Russia leaders that had been advised of our visit. On the first day, despite a very long trip, we spent some time with our embassy officials and got a briefing on an American company that is based in the district of the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN). The gentlewoman of suggested that we visited with officials of the Atari Corporation, which we did, and got an overview of the kinds of activities that they are involved with, including the presence of that company here in America.

We continued our visit over the weekend with a trip to the American University in Moscow, an institution that was started over 10 years ago. Their director assembled a group of academics and leaders in the educational area, and briefed us on a whole new series of initiatives relative to the training and education of young Russian leaders with American institutions, and in this case the American University in Moscow.

We have a continuing dialogue with the American University, and in fact the exchange process has already started in terms of cooperation on academic programs with the American University.

Also on Sunday we met with the leadership of the Kurchatov Institute. Dr. Evgheny Velikhov is the head of Kurchatov. Kurchatov is the largest and most prestigious nuclear institute in Russia, named after its founder, who was the developer of the atomic weapon for the Soviet Union. Today Kurchatov, which is smaller than it was in the Soviet era, has a number of nuclear scientists that are in need of work. Part of the efforts of our government through the Department of Energy and the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program has been to find ways to have those nuclear scientists and weapons scientists work in a productive way for both Russian and American corporations, and take them away from the former work that they did, which was all military-related.

Our discussions with Kurchatov centered around a number of very specific projects and programs, programs that involve American corporations, American NGOs, and American governmental entities. They were very positive meetings, and we discussed everything from fusion energy, disposition of fissile materials, nuclear sites, clean fuel cycles, magnetic fusion, low-yield nuclear warheads, ballistic missile defense interceptors, and a number of other issues. We came away with a number of ideas of how we can further engage the folks at Kurchatov in a cooperative way to benefit both the United States and Russian people peacefully.

In addition to that meeting, we met with leaders of the petroleum industry and the oil and gas industry in Russia, and talked about the efforts of many of us to steer America away from our reliance on Middle Eastern crude, and to work with the Russians, who have huge deposits of energy, to allow us to help them develop that energy, thereby giving us a new source of fossil fuels and gas, reducing our dependency on Middle Eastern crude, and at the same time helping Russia grow its economy. Those meetings were very positive, and I think will be fruitful in the future.

In addition, at that meeting, I invited the North Korean commercial attache in Moscow, Mr. Ku Song Bok, to attend an evening event with us. I did that as a gesture of good faith toward the North Korean government, the DPRK government, to show them that this delegation was interested in starting a positive initiative to work to establish a framework for discussion between the leaders in DPRK and those of us in the Congress that want to pursue this new avenue of dialogue with North Korea's leaders, both their president or chairman, as well as the members of their high parliament.

Mr. Speaker, we also had meetings with the Moscow and the Russian Duma. The Duma is the lower body of the Russian parliament, the Federation Council the other body. In our meetings, we had probably some 40 Duma deputies and Federation Council members interact with us. We had a number of discussions relating to a variety of issues. But the key issue was a document that many of us in this body produced last fall, a document that I have addressed on this floor in the past.

This document, 45 pages long with 108 specific recommendations, was prepared to provide President Bush and President Putin a new format for relations between our two nations, with 11 key areas involving energy, the environment, health care, local government, culture and education, science and technology, agriculture, and defense and security, among others; recommendations that we could undertake to bring the Russian people and the American people, Russian institutions and American institutions, closer together.

This document, as I have explained to my colleagues in the past, was given to both President Bush and President Putin over the signatures of over one-third of the House and the Senate, members of both political parties equally divided, signed on to say to our President before the most recent summit that we want to change the nature of our relationship with Russia.

Perhaps one of the highlights of our trip, Mr. Speaker, was during a lunch that we had on Monday afternoon, two of the top leaders of the Russian Duma both said publicly that the Russian approach to the most recent Bush-Putin summit was largely based on this document.

This was significant because this was the first time that Russia publicly acknowledged that the work of our Congress and our Senate in producing this document actually was the basis for the Russian lead-up to the summit between President Bush and President Putin. We knew that they had taken this document seriously because they had produced a document in Russian in response to what we had produced. This document is the Russian Academy of Sciences' response to our proposal for these new initiatives.

My understanding is that the Academy of Sciences is setting up 11 task forces to work on the specific areas that we identified as key areas for America and Russia to work together. So our meetings in Moscow were extremely fruitful. They were positive. They were building on the success of President Bush and President Putin for a new relationship that in fact is much broader and much more engaging than our past relationship, which was largely based on agreements of strategic weapons.

The contention here by many in this body is for us to have even greater success in strategic and defense issues, we have to work aggressively to build more confidence.

One other interesting offer made by the Russians at our final luncheon meeting in Moscow, Mr. Speaker, I bring forward to this body and ask for our consideration and help, and it shows the state and the change of our relationship. Ten years ago a meeting between Russian officials and American officials would probably have had some screaming and shouting and accusations against each other. Our meetings today are totally changed. Over the past 10 years we have established a major new positive dialogue so that the last discussion we had before we left Moscow and in the spirit of the goodwill games currently being held in Japan and South Korea was a challenge by our Russian Duma colleagues to have a series of athletic events between members of the Duma and Members of the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, I challenge our colleagues to work with me, having played in a number of congressional baseball games where our Democrat teams play our Republican teams and we raise money for charity, and being aware of our congressional basketball games and our golf matches where Republicans play Democrats and other events, we now have a new challenge. Members of the Russian Duma have challenged this body to a series of athletic contests in the spirit of goodwill both in Moscow and Washington, where we can get together and have some friendly fun and also agree to a series of what hopefully will become annual events between the leaders of two parliaments.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to establishing a task force on the American side, hopefully comprised equally of Democrats and Republicans. We will look at what types of competition we want to have because some that we would do would be favorable to America, some the Russians might want to do would be favorable to them. We want to find the middle ground. We will start a whole new era of cooperation in the same spirit that we have in this city in basketball and baseball and other competitions between our two parties. In the spirit of friendship and goodwill, we will now take the same atmosphere to our colleagues in the Russian Duma.

Mr. Speaker, we left Moscow on Monday afternoon and flew again on military transport to Tashkent, Uzbekistan. We wanted to visit Uzbekistan because it is a prominent former Soviet state, a Central Asian nation that has stepped up and played a critical role in our battle against terrorism. In that country, after having met with the officials of the Uzbeki embassy here in Washington, we were greeted with a meeting with President Karimov. It was an extremely positive, 2-hour meeting as we discussed a new level of cooperation with Uzbekistan, efforts to bring more focus on the Central Asian nations, and to thank the people of Uzbekistan for allowing America to use a base in their country with the cooperation of their military to fight the war on terrorism.

In fact, when we met with President Karimov, as we did in our meeting with the foreign minister, Mr. Kamilov, our U.S. embassy country team, we also extended an invitation through members of their parliament to establish a bilateral parliamentary exchange, much like we started with the Russian Duma. We now challenged the Uzbekistan parliament to establish a formal relationship between the House and the parliament, the lower body, actually the only body in Uzbekistan. They accepted overwhelmingly, and very eagerly anticipate the first meetings of the delegation that will start an annual series of meetings both in Tashkent and Moscow to find ways to work closer together with the people of Uzbekistan.

Our ultimate goal is to produce a document similar to this document, outlining ways that we can bring the people and the institutions of Uzbekistan closer to the people and institutions of America.

In addition to our visit with the President and the foreign minister, which were separate meetings, we traveled to one of our primary military bases in Uzbekistan at Karshi-Khanabad, more commonly known as K–2. This military base is down fairly close to the Afghan border. We have right now approximately 3,000 troops at that site. They are doing a variety of work, and represented most of the services.

The purpose of our visit was to assess the spirit and morale of our troops, and to let them know how proud we are of their work. In fact, we carried with us almost 7,000 cards and letters from school children across America who are writing to individual members of our military to thank them for the services that they are providing to our country. We also took from my home State of Pennsylvania cases of TastyKakes and Hershey bars, and boxes of homemade cookies made by individuals and families and the spouses of Members of Congress to give to the troops to thank them from the people back home for the job that they are doing.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, the morale of our troops at the K–2 base was unbelievably positive. The morale was so evident in everyone that we met with. Their needs are being met. They obviously would like to be home with their families, but they are there to do a mission, they understand that mission, and they are committed to follow through and complete the task assigned to them by our President and by our military command officers.

We did have a problem with one of the engines on our cargo plane that took us into the K–2 base. While I bring up this not to embarrass our military, I bring it up to show that we are having success because the starter would not work on one of our engines as we prepared to leave. But because we have taken great efforts in this body to provide additional funds for spare parts and training, and that has been supported by both Democrats and Republicans, within 2 hours a spare part was made available and the men and women of the unit in K–2 were able to replace that so that we could take off in time to make our meeting with President Karimov back in Tashkent.

So our military, in fact, is doing a fantastic job. We are proud of them, and we were there to say thank you on behalf of not only Congress and the House but all America. Following our 1-day trip to Tashkent, having achieved our objectives to work with the President and a commitment to follow on with the parliament of that nation, we traveled and arrived late at night in Beijing, China, starting on May 29.

In the People's Republic of China, in Beijing, we met with President Jiang Zemin, a very historic opportunity for us to meet with the top leader of the People's Republic. The meeting was extremely interesting because President Jiang spoke to us not just in Chinese but also in English, which showed the level of comfort that he had with our delegation. He was very much interested in hearing our views. He put forth his commitment to work with America in trying to provide some stability in the current conflict between India and Pakistan, and he reiterated his commitment to work with us to provide peace for the world.

We discussed the issue of Taiwan. We heard his strong feelings toward that independent entity, and we again reaffirmed to President Jiang that we are committed to a one-China policy, and we are committed to the peaceful process of bringing China and Taiwan together. We also reiterated the fact that the Congress would not tolerate any armed hostilities in an attempt to bring Taiwan back in, and he assured us that that was not China's intent, that they were certainly totally committed to a peaceful resolution of the independent status of the two nations so they in fact could become one China again.

In addition to those meetings, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) had been in China for approximately 4 days. They were a part of the delegation but did not formally join us until we arrived and they had been there in advance. They were there for a very historic purpose and opportunity. Mr. Speaker, they went to a suburban city outside of Beijing. The purpose of their visit with a group of UPS officials was to help build a new school for a small Chinese community to bring the Internet and computers to that village and to that institution. As we all know, China's income level for their average person in that country is about $300 per year. So when you get outside of Beijing and Shanghai, there is not much in the way of modern technology.

UPS, United Parcel Service, with 40 of their employees and two Members of Congress, set up a process to build a new school, which they did, and to equip that school with computers for the children that live in this community. It was an outstanding success and, in fact, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) on the day after that we met with President Jiang Zemin, along with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), the three of them were given an audience with Premier Zhu Rongji. President Zhu expressed his thanks to the people of America, to UPS and to our three Members of Congress for their outstanding work in helping to provide this new resource for the children of the community in China known as Zunhua.

Mr. Speaker, also in China we met with the Deputy Foreign Minister Zhou. It was a very positive meeting regarding economic reforms in China. He gave us an overview of the economic program that is in place. We talked about how America and China must work together to open new markets for American companies to allow that balance of trade to become more equal. He talked to us specifically about Taiwan, and we discussed again as we did with President Jiang Zemin the need for us to have a peaceful dialogue and a peaceful resolution of the Taiwan-China situation.

We were hosted on our visit to China by the Chinese People's Institute for Foreign Affairs. President Mei was our host. He had a luncheon arranged for us. In fact, the discussion there was broad ranging and discussed everything from economic cooperation to advancements in science and technology. It was very positive, and again they were the host that allowed us to arrange the meetings that took place in China.

Mr. Speaker, one of the highlights for me of our trip to China was the opportunity for me to speak for the second time at the National Defense University of the People's Liberation Army. It was a real eye opener. I had spoken at this university back 5 years ago. I believe I was the first elected official invited to speak at what is the premier military training institution for their mid- and senior-level officers. This invitation came before I went to Beijing to again address senior military officers in the PLA.

What was interesting about this trip was that it was not just me going to the National Defense University. In fact, eight of our colleagues who were with the delegation went with me. We drove for about 1 hour out of downtown Beijing until we arrived at the compound that is the major training site for China's mid- and senior-level officers. On the way, we talked to our defense attache who briefed us on what to expect. He told us to expect the Chinese officers to have canned questions, not to have any ability to go off the party line, and to be very stern and strict in terms of the way that they asked questions of me once I had finished my presentation.

Mr. Speaker, I told our defense attache on the way in that I was going to do something different this time, that I was going to break this large group of officers into subgroups and have Members of Congress directly interact with them. Our defense attache said, "That will never happen. The Chinese will never go for that. They are not used to doing things in an ad hoc way."

Mr. Speaker, what a great surprise we had in store for us. When our bus arrived at the front door of the main building of the National Defense University, after having driven through the entranceway, there was a full Chinese PLA military band and orchestra. In fact, it was all female, all dressed up in their military uniforms, which were white in color; and there they were playing for us a series of military musical selections, welcoming us to the premier training center for the Chinese military. As we departed the bus and walked up the stairway, a number of generals and top leaders greeted us to welcome us to the National Defense University. It certainly was a good start to our meeting.

Inside, I was taken aside and allowed to meet with the general in charge of the National Defense University, where I explained to him that following my presentation, which would last about 40 minutes, instead of me answering questions, I wanted to divide the group up and allow Members of Congress to directly interact with the soldiers and leaders of the Chinese military. He looked at me in some bewilderment, but did not object.

So we went into the room, and there in the auditorium were some 300 senior military leaders of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. As they sat in the room and were extremely attentive, I was introduced, and I made my presentation which I did not have in writing but basically gave from my own feelings about the need to improve our relations with China, and I went through the entire context of why we were there. I discussed the meeting we had had with President Jiang Zemin, and I challenged them to help us find new areas of common concern where we could bring our military together with the Chinese military to reduce the potential for conflict and misunderstanding.

Mr. Speaker, following my presentation, I told the assembled group that I wanted to divide them up into four groups and have two Members of Congress each set aside with those individual groups and have a dialogue. Within 5 minutes, the group divided itself into four, the Members of Congress broke up into groups of two, we had interpreters at each group, and for the next 45 minutes, something happened that I would never have thought could occur. American Members of Congress were interacting not in a formal way but informally in answering questions and asking questions of the next generation of Chinese military leaders.

Mr. Speaker, I must tell you, the comments were all positive. The tone was positive. And there were no canned questions or canned responses. It was an absolutely unbelievable opportunity to see American Members of Congress, our colleagues, interacting in an informal, sit-down way with Chinese military leaders around them in kind of a small-group setting asking questions and responding about American-China relations.

Mr. Speaker, this gave me a great deal of encouragement and leads me to believe that we must do more of this. We must continue to reach out, to tear down the barriers of misunderstanding and find ways to engage and be candid in the process where we have disagreements but also let these people know that we want to be friendly with them. We are not looking to have animosity or tension, but rather find ways that we can address common concerns together.

Mr. Speaker, leaving China, we had planned to go into North Korea. Unfortunately, all along the way, despite numerous attempts, we were getting nowhere with the DPRK leadership. In fact, I even at one point in time, one morning in Beijing had a call from Kofi Annan at the U.N., whom I had asked to assist us. Kofi Annan from the U.N., the Secretary-General, and five other groups were working aggressively with us to convince the DPRK leadership that it was in their best interest that this delegation be allowed in, not to criticize the North Korean leaders but to begin a dialogue, to talk, to try to break down the barriers and discuss common areas of concern and opportunity. Unfortunately, that was not to be.

But throughout our trip in Moscow, again in Uzbekistan and throughout our stay in China, we sent faxes, e-mails, telephone calls, had meetings with representatives of groups that were working in North Korea but were not having success, so finally we decided to leave Beijing and travel directly to South Korea. In Seoul, South Korea, our first stop was at the Yongsan U.S. Army air base. There we spent time with the troops. They were having a picnic on Saturday afternoon. We visited with the family members. We thanked them for the work they are doing, and we spent time letting them know that we wanted to hear about the concerns that they had being stationed in that country.

Mr. Speaker, this is something that we heard throughout our stop in South Korea with all of our military: this body and the other body and the Pentagon has got to do more to increase the pay level, to provide more incentives and decrease the amount of time that our troops have to spend when they are assigned to South Korea. We learned from our military leaders, from our top generals, and from our CINC in that region that South Korea is the least desirable stay that any member of the military has when they are given an assignment. In fact, in many cases, a young soldier would rather go to a theater where there is active hostility than they would to South Korea because the tour of duty is longer, usually a year, and the pay rates are significantly lower because of added incentives in going to Japan or other theaters. They are significantly lower when our military is assigned to South Korea.

Mr. Speaker, as you well know, we have 37,000 troops in South Korea. It is a major location for our troops overseas. This Congress has got to respond by changing the way that we are currently operating so that young people who are serving in Korea can bring their families with them, because today the bulk of them cannot get the pay level they should get when they serve in other parts of the world, and find ways to reduce the level of commitment in terms of the time they have to serve there. The commanding officers in that theater understand what steps they have to take.

And so our delegation came back to America convinced that we are going to work to commit to that military to change those requirements, to change those support mechanisms, so that our military when it is assigned to South Korea does so with pride, wants to go there, and does not feel that being assigned to South Korea is the least possible priority that they would have as a part of their military career and tenure.

Mr. Speaker, we spent time with Ambassador Hubbard. He gave us an overview of Korea. We had an in-team briefing with our leaders, both on South Korea, and they also gave us a briefing on the North.

We talked about the upcoming elections. We were scheduled to meet with the candidates for the presidency, but because they were off campaigning with elections coming up next week, we were not able to have those meetings. We did meet with Foreign Minister Choi. We met him at his home. We talked for over 1 hour about our relations between the South and America, and we talked about our interests in going to the DPRK, or North Korea.

He, along with the Japanese, along with the Chinese, along with the Russians and the Uzbekistanis, all said that our intent to go to North Korea is extremely important. President Jiang Zemin encouraged us to pursue entrance to North Korea, the leadership in Moscow encouraged us to pursue our entry into North Korea, and so did the South Koreans. That was articulated by the foreign minister of South Korea. We talked about programs that we have together between our two nations, and we talked about ways that we could work even closer together, assuming we can break down the barrier by gaining entrance into North Korea.

Mr. Speaker, we met with Members of the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea. We talked about the importance of our forces there. They are unequivocal in saying that they want America to maintain a presence. It is extremely important to deter conflict on the peninsula.

We talked about cooperation in the war on terrorism, political and military stability in the Korean peninsula, the strong desire for unification of the two Koreas, and we talked about e-government and the need to bring our government and their governments into the new digital divide and the way we can in fact bring information technology to all the people in South Korea.

We also met with the Senior Combatant Commander for United Nations Command Forces, General Leon LaPorte, to get a detailed assessment of the current operations of the United Nations' efforts in South Korea.

We had meetings with the American Chamber of Commerce in Seoul. They also told us that they had tried to take a delegation into North Korea. Mr. Speaker, they had had a group of American companies that are prepared to go to Pyong Yang and announced they were going to invest significant new dollars in North Korea. Despite being assured by the North Korean leadership that they would be given entrance, as they went to get their visas, they were told they were denied and they should come back later.

It is extremely frustrating, Mr. Speaker, to try to open doors in a positive way with a regime so closeted and isolated from the rest of the world. So I appeal today, Mr. Speaker, that those leaders in the Democratic Republic of Korea, the DPRK, that they understand that we want to go to their country not to cause problems, not to blame, not to cast negative statements against them, but, rather, to simply open a dialogue, because having a dialogue is a way to eventually ease tensions and find ways to deal with common concerns and common opportunities.

While also in South Korea, Mr. Speaker, the delegation was given an opportunity to travel to the DMZ, or Demilitarized Zone. Traveling up to Panmunjom, members were able to meet with our military once again, engage with the various military officials, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) took on a personal crusade to engage our military on the issue of the remains of Corporal Edward Gibson who has been missing in action since November 26, 1950.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) raised the issue that so many Americans continue to be concerned about, the lack of a full accounting of those who are missing in action from the Korean conflict, the Korean War.

As an indication of the support of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) and the honor that Corporal Gibson gave to his Nation by paying the ultimate price, he had an American flag flown over the DMZ in honor of Corporal Gibson. In fact, every member of Congress had the same flown. Corporal Gibson's family will be given that flag by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) back in Ohio.

We discussed the issue with the leadership along the DMZ about that very hostile environment, perhaps the most tense environment today in the world, where American and North Korean forces and allied and North Korean forces stare each other down across this boundary line of barbed wire and concrete, that differentiates the North from the South. It really gives one a full perspective of the need, the absolute need, for us to find a way to begin a dialogue with the leadership of North Korea.

Mr. Speaker, the delegation's trip was exciting. It was almost without flaw. Unfortunately, the final part of our mission, the trip into North Korea and Pyong Yang, did not occur. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not giving up. We are renewing our efforts.

We have already started work on another visit. This visit will go into Pyong Yang, we will meet with their leaders and we will begin a positive dialogue, so we reduce the tensions and find ways that we can find common ground.

Hopefully President Bush's envoy, Ambassador Pritchart, will travel to Pyong Yang very shortly to open the door that the administration has in fact offered, and following that visit, I am extremely optimistic that a congressional delegation that I will be a part of will travel to Pyong Yang in an historic way so we can begin a process, much like we began 15 years ago in the Soviet Union. Look at where we are today with Russia's leaders. Today, we have just completed a major thrust of new initiatives. We are challenging each other to athletic contests and we are now considered good friends.

Hopefully that same process can occur and grow in China as we saw in our meetings at the National Defense University, and will also begin to grow in North Korea as we reach out to the people, as we reach out to show them that America wishes no harm, America only wants to find ways to understand, to have a dialogue, and to reduce the threats that come from the kind of actions that the North Korean leadership have taken over the past 20 years in building up a vast military complex, while denying many of their citizens the most basic human needs.

Mr. Speaker, I will insert the entire CODEL report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point, to make it available for the public to see all of the various actions I have described, the delegation members, the various contacts, the people that we interacted with, because I think it is important that we take these kinds of trips, and that we have total transparency in terms of our purpose, our actions, and the results that we achieved.

I want to thank all of my colleagues who went with me. It was an outstanding trip. We truly have an unbelievable institution. Thirteen members of Congress, seven Democrats and six Republicans, working together with a common agenda, working together to achieve peace and harmony, in those nations that in the past have been our adversaries, or in the future might become our adversaries.

So I thank my colleagues for their cooperation, I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the staff for sticking around long enough for me to make this report to our colleagues and the American people on the congressional delegation trip that took place from May 24 to June 3, 2002.

U.S. CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION (CODEL WELDON) TO RUSSIA, UZBEKISTAN, PEOPLES REPUBLIC OF CHINA AND REPUBLIC OF KOREA, MAY 24–JUNE 3, 2002

OVERVIEW

A bipartisan congressional delegation of 13 Members of the House of Representatives, led by Representative Curt Weldon, "CODEL WELDON," visited Moscow, Russia; Tashkent and Karshi-Khanabad, Uzbekistan; Beijing, China; Seoul, Yongsan (U.S. Army) Base, and the Demilitarized Zone, Republic of Korea, May 24 through June 3, 2002. The delegation also made considerable efforts prior to departure from Washington, D.C., to arrange meetings with the leadership of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea (DPRK). These efforts continued throughout the delegation's travel, to no avail. Given the major issues of mutual concern, the delegation was disappointed that the DPRK leadership did not accept the opportunity to open a dialogue and engage such a large delegation of the Congress.

Delegation members included Representatives Curt Weldon (R–PA), Solomon Ortiz (D–TX), Roscoe Bartlett (R–MD), Jim Turner (D–TX), Silvestre Reyes (D–TX), Joe Wilson (R–SC), Steve Horn (R–CA), Eni Faleomavaega (Del-American Samoa), Corrine Brown (D–FL), Alcee Hastings (D–FL), Carrie Meek (D–FL), Steve Chabot (R–OH), and Brian Kerns (R–IN).

In each of the countries visited, the delegation met with the senior executive branch and legislative branch officials; political leaders and organizations, educational groups and technical institute officials; U.S. and foreign military officers; and U.S. and foreign business leaders for the purpose of furthering greater communication; expanding inter-parliamentary exchanges and information sharing; and addressing common concerns on issues vital to international economic growth, human rights, peace and stability. Issues addressed included:

- Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR):

—Securing nuclear stockpiles and materials in Russia.

—Retraining human resources.

- Counterproliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction:

—Protecting, reducing and/or Eliminating Weapons of Mass Destruction.

- Nuclear Waste and other environmental issues.
- Energy Production and Distribution.
- Cooperative Efforts in the War On Terrorism:

—Furtherance of trade through better inspection methods at ports of debarkation and embarkation.

- Sino-American Relations.
- North and South Korean Relations.

The Members also took the opportunity to visit with U.S. military personnel based in Karshi-Khanabad ("K–2"), Uzbekistan serving in the war on terrorism in Afghanistan; military personnel in Seoul and the DMZ; and their families in the Republic of Korea supporting peace and stability in Southeast Asia. Representatives Bartlett, Ortiz, Turner, Reyes, and Wilson visited Morale, Welfare, and Recreations sites and facilities in the Seoul area.

The delegation visits coincided with a number of international events and crises that reinforced the critical nature and timeliness of the purpose of its meetings and discussions. The delegation arrived in Moscow the day following the historic signing of the strategic arms reduction treaty and declaration of strategic partnership by Presidents George W. Bush and Vladimir V. Putin. Shortly thereafter the NATO nations met in Rome and agreed to Russian limited membership in NATO. India and Pakistan experienced increased tension and cross-border firings resulting in casualties on both sides. Pakistan completed several medium range ballistic missile tests. The war on terrorism continued in Afghanistan. And suicide bombings and reprisals continued the cycle of violence between the Israelis and Palestinians.

Moscow, Russia (May 25–27)

State Duma

In Moscow, the delegation had several opportunities to meet with their legislative counterparts, Members of the State Duma, in furtherance of the objectives of the Duma-Congress Study Group—the official inter-parliamentary exchange that engages U.S. and Russian lawmakers in meetings and discussions. The delegation also met with Russian business leaders, many of whom are involved in gas and oil exploration and energy production; Kurchatov Institute officials, to discuss energy and counterproliferation issues; and American University in Moscow officials.

Discussions with Members of the State Duma were in furtherance of the issues address in "U.S.-Russia Partnership," (see attachment 1), coauthored by Representative Weldon, supported by a bipartisan group of one-third of the U.S. Congress, and presented to the Duma in September of 2001, that provides over 100 recommendations in 11 subject areas for U.S.-Russian engagement. The delegation was advised by State Duma representatives that the recommendations made in this document had been used as the foundation for the Russian initiatives to President Bush during his visit. The State Duma Members indicated that the Speaker of the Duma had prepared a response to "U.S.-Russia Partnership." Representative Weldon stated his desire to establish U.S.-Russia co-chairs at the earliest opportunity in each of 11 subject areas addressed in the study.

International Republican & National Democratic Institutes

A meeting sponsored by the International Republican Institute, with National Democratic Institute participation, allowed Member-to-Member/House-Duma dialogue on a number of subjects, including the status of the repeal of Jackson-Vanik (Cold War legislation that conditions U.S. trade relations on Russian Jewish emigration); combating international terrorism; using academic research and science to address political problems; joint environmental efforts; WTO; steel and poultry imports/exports; the Bush-Putin statement on the U.S.-Russian strategic partnership; and engaging the youth of both countries in issues of mutual interest, including cultural and sports events. Members on both sides demonstrated their belief that there is a new basis for working together on issues of common interest and concern because for the first time there is mutual agreement on goals and values and a sharing of vision on the security threats of the 21st Century.

Kurchatov Institute

The delegation also visited the Russian Research Center, the Kurchatov Institute. The Institute was established to design the Soviet Union's first nuclear weapons. Its current mission is research on safe and environmentally friendly nuclear fission and fusion power generation and fundamental physical research and development. The staff of the Institute is down to approximately 5,000 people from a Cold War high of 11,000. A goal of the Institute's Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) and counterproliferation programs has been to provide productive training and employment training and employment for many of the Institute's personnel. The Institute's President, Evgheny Velikhov, and his staff engaged the Members in briefings and discussions of counterproliferation; CTR; nuclear site physical security; disposition of fissile materials, fusion energy, nuclear medicine; safe, clean fuel cycles; magnetic fusion; electromagnetic pulse effects; low yield nuclear warhead, Russian-like, ballistic missile defense interceptors; a thorium-based nuclear fuel cycle (the Institute claims that the Department of Energy won't agree to consider programs that provide an alternative to Yucca Mountain); joint NAS-Institute programs for nuclear energy based space programs; software technologies for counter-terrorism; information technology training programs for former nuclear weapons scientists and engineers; and a visit to a nuclear power reactor being used for testing of thorium-based fuel.

American University in Moscow

The delegation also met with the staff and supporters of the American University in Moscow to demonstrate support for their program. Representative Weldon and the delegation were presented a copy of the "Russian response" to "U.S.-Russia Partnership." Other discussion topics included the transportation of nuclear waste and initiation of U.S.-Russia Exchange Centers (information exchange using the internet) between cities in the U.S. and Russia.

Moscow Petroleum Club

The delegation met with senior Russian government officials, Members of the Federation Assembly, and business leaders from the oil and gas industry. Victor Chernomerdrin, the former Prime Minister, led the Russian delegation. Also included, at the request of the U.S. delegation, were KU Song Bok, commercial attaché of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea, and his assistant, KIM Jong-Do.

Tashkent & Karshi-Khanabad, Uzbekistan (May 27–28)

In Tashkent, the delegation met with President Karimov; Foreign Minister Kamilov; the U.S. Embassy country team; and visited U.S. military personnel at Karshi-Khanabad. The delegation expressed to the President, U.S. appreciation for Uzbekistan's support for the war on terrorism. For his part, the President acknowledged his nation's shortcomings in human rights and economic reforms, but indicated he is taking actions in these areas in making reforms. The President provided an assessment of the regional geo-political environment and his views on the campaign in Afghanistan. He emphasized a desire for a long-term U.S. presence in Central Asia and Afghanistan and expressed a concern over the long-term intentions of Russia, Iran and particularly China. He was supportive of Representative Weldon's proposal to establish a joint U.S. Congress-Uzbek parliamentary working group. President Karimov sees the U.S. as a political, legal, and economic model he would like to replicate.

American Embassy officials noted their concerns about the long term economic health of the country, citing the 50 percent inflation rate over the past year and the unwillingness of most foreign companies to invest in Uzbekistan because of the lack of convertability of the currency.

The delegation was transported via an Air Force C–130 cargo aircraft to Karshi-Khanabad in southeastern Uzbekistan, near the Afghanistan border, to visit with U.S. forces personnel deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. All Members had an opportunity to meet with constituents and took the opportunity to make the military members fully aware of the total support of the American people for the job that they are all doing.

The President, acknowledging fully "what wars can cause on the main continent, briefly digressed, citing China's experience with a number of wars—"Japan against China"—and mentioned his personal participation in Japan's war against China. "China and the U.S. were on the same side against Japan in Japan's War of Aggression." He further mentioned his visit to Hawaii and the Arizona War Memorial—"I shared the same feeling as your Commander of the Pacific Fleet. If you look at history and major events, you see history evolves in cycles. People unify then fall apart. Now Japan and the U.S. get along well . . . Maintenance of the imperial system in Japan had a lot to do with General MacArthur."

"My advice to the U.S. is that not every place in the world can follow the U.S. model. In the world, each place has its own model, but that should not stop contacts and communication . . . The first principle should be to seek common ground while putting aside differences . . . Do not let differences interfere with communication . . . We have more in common than divergences."

Premier Zhu Rongii

Representatives Turner and Bachus, along with Representative Pete Sessions (R–TX) had participated in the construction of a computer laboratory with 40 UPS government affairs employees in the City of Zunhua, located northeast of Beijing in Hebei Provice.

Premier Zhu expressed his appreciation to the representatives' and the UPS employees' for their tangible contribution to the children of Zunhua and was pleased that the group had experienced rural China.

Premier Zhu stated the importance of the "one China" policy and stated that the PRC does not desire to use force against Taiwan to achieve reunification. He cited Hong Kong as a successful example of reunification and said reunification with Taiwan would not require a change in Taiwan's economic system. Representative Turner expressed his support for the "one China" policy and indicated that his support for permanent normal trade relations and the PRC's admission to the WTO was based on his belief that the ability of the U.S. and the PRC to build a strong bond of friendship and cooperation is critical to world peace and prosperity over the next 25 years.

Assistant Foreign minister Zhou

In a later meeting, Assistant Foreign minister Zhou outlined China's plan to "intensify" its economic reform program. "With 25 million people entering the work force each year, if we are to avoid problems, we need to speed up reform." He stated

Beijing, China (May 29–June 1)

In the Peoples Republic of China (PRC), the delegation met with President Jiang and senior foreign ministry officials; met officials of the Chinese Peoples Institute of Foreign Affairs; engaged the U.S. Country team in discussions; and visited the National Defense University, where Representative Weldon addressed the student body and delegation members met in breakout sessions with the PLA students attending the University. There was also a side-group meeting by Representatives Turner and Bachus with Premier Ju.

President Jiang

In the delegation meeting with President Jiang, Representative Weldon expressed the desire of the majority of the American people for a productive long-term relationship with the PRC.

President Jiang indicated that China and the U.S. have more interests in common than differences and encouraged mutual respect and moderation. He urged that the U.S. should accept that there are other acceptable models than that of the U.S. for political and economic development. President Jiang stated that the most important and sensitive issue in Sino-American relations is Taiwan. He cited the importance of continuing the "one China" policy. "The Chinese relationship boils down to one question: Taiwan . . . The question is a very simple one . . . We have already agreed (citing normalization, the three joint communiqués, and "three no's") . . . we don't understand why the U.S. is sending weapons to Taiwan . . . We place much hope in you as representatives that we can get much done."

Representative Weldon indicated he supported the "one China" policy. "Arms sales take place when there is a perception, right or wrong, that a threat exists to the people of Taiwan . . . I am the Chairman responsible for authorizing the procurement of all our military systems. But I am a teacher by profession. I would like to spend money on education, not weapons . . . We do not want conflict with China in any form."

Representative Hastings, citing the importance to both China and the U.S. of engaging the DPRK, asked President Jiang if he would consider having his officials contact the DPRK on the delegation's behalf to arrange a visit. He also asked the President what China is doing to ease tensions between India and Pakistan. The President encouraged the delegation visit to the DPRK, but "whether they allow the visit must be totally up to them . . . We cannot take decisions in their place. North Korea will have to decide. China is China. North Korea is North Korea." On India and Pakistan, the President indicated that both countries are "China's neighbors" and said he hoped the Kashmir problem can be solved peacefully. "Although people are of a view that we are closer to Pakistan, we are trying to get each side to work together. Our relationship with India has fluctuated, but more recently we have had a constantly improving relationship with India." He also said that because of the U.S. need to fight terrorism, he believed that "the U.S. attitude toward Pakistan has changed." the purpose of their foreign policy is world peace and common development. "China is not a threat to anyone and should not be perceived as a threat . . . perception is important . . . China is an important force in the region for peace . . . In our relationship, we have accomplished a lot . . . the only problem is Taiwan . . . The issue of Taiwan should be left to the Chinese to work out. The U.S. should not become involved . . . Our policy goal of peaceful reunification remains. If they (Taiwanese) accept one China, we can be very patient. I hope you will not send signals that can be misinterpreted."

Representatives Bartlett suggested that Taiwan is a "tiny island" with relatively small population and that China and the U.S. should focus on the 90 percent of what we have in common. Representative Horn indicated that "it would be the biggest mistake ever made for China to invade Taiwan." Mr. Horn also expressed his concern over a quote attributed to a Chinese admiral citing "missiles over LA" as a Chinese option. Minister Zhou indicated that such a quote was incorrect.

In response to Representative Brown, Minister Zhou agreed there are both obligations and benefits to entry into the World Trade Organization (WTO). "We will honor our words." He indicated there would be challenges for China as a WTO member, but also opportunities. In acknowledging the $100 billion annual trade imbalance between the U.S. and China, Minister Zhou said that "China wishes to buy more, but that there are too many restrictions." Also in response to Representative Brown, he cited the need for the Three Gorges Dam project as primarily for flood control, acknowledged the importance of environmental protection, and said that electricity production is secondary.

In response to a question from Representative Hastings on India and Pakistan, Minister Zhou indicated that the Foreign Ministers involved had talked and cited the need "to be cautious and avoid escalation . . . The President of Pakistan said he would not use force. We have encouraged them to talk together."

Minister Zhou concluded that "China will not commit to not use force in the case of Taiwan because we don't want to use force . . . If we make such a commitment (Taiwan) separatists will push for a proclamation of independence, which would be a disaster for everyone." Representative Hastings indicated that the issue of Taiwan would likely take care of itself over time because of the large and increasing investment by Taiwan interests in mainland China.

Chinese Peoples Institute for Foreign Affairs (CPIFA)

President Mei indicated that the CPIFA had worked for 50 years doing exchanges, sponsoring research on international affairs, and hosting high level delegations to promote mutual understanding and bilateral relationships. He cited the importance of economic development and discussed the wide variance within China of economic well-being, with per capita GDP in cities like Shanghai being $4,000, while in many regions it is $300/person. He stated that last year began a policy of developing China's west (12 provinces, two-thirds of China's land area) and cited the need for a stable international environment for economic development. He also discussed the Taiwan issue, citing all of the same factors mentioned by President Jiang and Assistant Foreign Minister Zhou.

In response to a question from Representative Horn, President Mei said China had three domestic goals: develop the west economically, achieve sustained growth throughout the country, and advance education in science and technology. "The quality of human resources is key to China's development."

National Defense University

Representative Weldon addressed the military students at the National Defense University for the Peoples Liberation Army on Sino-American relations; America's policy toward Taiwan; the need for increased dialogue and cooperative programs between the PLA and U.S. military; the common threat to China and the U.S. posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and drug trafficking; and the role the Congress plays in the U.S. system of government. After Representative Weldon's address, Members of the delegation had the opportunity to participate in small group discussions with the military students. Taiwan was again a topic of discussion. Also of interest to the students, was the Members' views on international terrorism and the Falun Gong.

Seoul, Yongsan U.A. Army Base, and the DMZ, Korea (June 1–3)

Ambassador Hubbard

Ambassador Hubbard provided the delegation an overview of the Republic of Korea (ROK) political and economic situation, indicating that the South Korean economy continues its recovery from the 1997 economic crisis, currently growing at five-to-six percent a year, making its growth second only in the region, to China. He also advised the delegation of the significant and prompt support provided by the ROK to the events of 9/11. The ROK "stepped up quickly to our war against the Taliban and al-Queda in Afghanistan, and provided shipping, aircraft, and a field hospital to support U.S. operations. . . . In addition they have provided $40 million in aid to Afghanistan." The Ambassador further highlighted the critical importance of local and provincial elections taking place in June and the national election in December 2002. He indicated that the South Koreans continue to make major strides in political and democratic reforms.

Foreign Minister Choi

In the delegation meeting with Foreign Minister Choi, Representative Weldon expressed his appreciation for all that the ROK had done and continues to do in support of the international war on terrorism. He also reaffirmed our total commitment to the defense of the ROK. Foreign Minister Choi indicated that his country's prompt support for the U.S. led war on terrorism was an expression of the importance of the effort as well as its appreciation for all the U.S. has done on the Korean Peninsula.

Foreign Minister Choi highlighted the rather significant contribution to ROK-Japanese relations made by the joint sponsorship of the on-going World Cup. He commented that the opening ceremonies were the first time that the Japanese national anthem had been played at an official event in the ROK. He also noted that at the opening ceremonies, in a spontaneous sign of friendship, the two Presidents stood and raised clasped hands, signaling the friendship between their two countries. Foreign Minister Choi described the event as a "spectacular moment" for the two countries—the "first time this has happened in a thousand years."

Representative Weldon also expressed to the Foreign Minister, the delegation's consternation with the North Korean, DPRK, failure to approve the delegation's visit request. The delegation had hoped to visit the DPRK to open a dialogue with the North, to express the interest of the legislative branch of the U.S. Government in addressing food aid, agriculture, health, education and other humanitarian assistance. The delegation had hoped to deliver a "totally positive" message to the North—that as a coequal branch of the U.S. government, Congress could work with the DPRK to further peace and stability on the Peninsula and help the people of North Korea.

Foreign Minister Choi indicated that the ROK continues its efforts to maintain the dialogue with the North, but the pace of discussions is much slower than what had been hoped for. He expressed considerable concern over the state of the DPRK economy and the well-being of its people. "Our interest is to try and engage, help them improve their situation, to try and increase cooperation." The foreign minister indicated the North is in desperate need of food, health care, and electrical power. He also indicated that the next year will be a critical period because of ROK elections, potential instability in the North due to its dysfunctional economic system, the issue of the DPRK nuclear power reactor and related required inspections by the international community.

National Assembly

The delegation later met with Members of the ROK National Assembly. Discussions related to trade; the importance to the ROK of U.S. Forces in Korea for deterrence purposes; the war on terrorism; political and military stability on the Korean Peninsula; the strong desire for eventual reunification of the DPRK and ROK; internet voting in the ROK; "e" government; and the "digital divide."

United Nations/Combined Forces Command

The Members of the delegation also met with the senior combatant commander, General Leon LaPorte, and his staff to get a detailed assessment of the military balance, force readiness, personnel morale, and classified issues.

American Chamber of Commerce

Regarding the difficulty and frustration the Delegation experienced in attempting to arrange a visit with DPRK leadership, American Chamber of Commerce officials the delegation met with indicated a similar frustration with the "on again, off again" nature of visits they had attempted to arrange.

Demilitarized Zone (DMZ)

Delegation Members were provided the opportunity to visit the DMZ. Representative Chabot was able to engage military officials on behalf of the relatives of Corporal Edward Gibson, who has been missing in action since November 26, 1950. Representative Chabot acquired an American flag which had been flown at the DMZ in honor of Corporal Gibson and will present the flag to the Gibson family. During the course of the CODEL, Representative Chabot also stressed to Foreign Minister Choi, Ambassador Hubbard, and other U.S. Embassy personnel the importance of making every effort to recover the remains of Corporal Gibson and other U.S. servicemen missing in action.

U.S.-Russia Partnership—A New Time, A New Beginning

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Agricultural development

Assist in agricultural production.

Expand private-sector investment.

Enhance capacity to purchase essential agricultural inputs, commodities and equipment.

Cultural/educational development

Expand cultural ties outside the major cities.

Assist regional museums in generating tourism.

Provide for more Russian language and cultural studies in U.S. schools.

Defense and security

Initiate new bilateral talks similar to the Ross-Mamedov talks on a Global Protection System.

Move forward with joint talks on a new nonproliferation regime.

Encourage progress on the RAMOS program and restructure the Nuclear Cities Initiative.

Economic development

Help facilitate Russia's accession to the WTO and its acceptance of all WTO agreements.

Increase funding for OPIC and EX-IM Bank projects in Russia.

Work with Russia to improve intellectual property rights.

Energy/natural resources

Convene bilateral task force to discuss the energy ramifications of the war on terrorism.

Environmental cooperation

Develop a revolving fund to assure development of promising Russian technologies.

Expand debt for nature swaps.

Dramatically expand cooperation on marine science research.

Health care

Increase emphasis on chronic diseases like cardiovascular disease and diabetes.

Develop more extensive physician exchange programs.

Judicial/legal systems

Support expansion of jury trials into all Russian regions.

Expand Environmental Public Advocacy Centers into Russia.

Encourage a doubling of the number of legal clinics.

Local governments

Propose ways to expand the tax base available to local governments.

Encourage political participation by increasing local partisan affiliations.

Encourage the gradual devolution of services to the local level.

Science and technology

Increase cooperation in the area of nuclear fuel cycles.

Expand cooperative fusion research on nonpolluting energy solutions.

Space and aeronautics

Increase joint projects on space solar power, propulsion technology, and weather satellites.

H. CON. RES. 36

Whereas over one million Americans suffer from juvenile (Type 1) diabetes, a chronic, genetically determined, debilitating disease affecting every organ system;

Whereas 13,000 children a year 35 each day are diagnosed with juvenile diabetes;

Whereas 17,000 adults a year 46 each day are diagnosed with juvenile diabetes;

Whereas insulin treats but does not cure this potentially deadly disease and does not prevent the complications of diabetes, which include blindness, heart attack, kidney failure, stroke, nerve damage, and amputations;

Whereas the Diabetes Research Working Group, a non-partisan advisory board established to advise Congress, has called for an accelerated and expanded diabetes research program at the National Institutes of Health and has recommended a $4.1 billion increase in Federal funding for diabetes research at the National Institutes of Health over the next five years; and

Whereas a strong public private partnership to fund juvenile diabetes exists between the Federal Government and the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, a foundation which has awarded more than $326 million for diabetes research since 1970 and will give $100 million in fiscal year 2001: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Federal funding for diabetes research should be increased in accordance with the recommendations of the Diabetes Research Working Group so that a cure for juvenile diabetes can be found.

CORRECTION TO THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD OF JUNE 4, 2002, AT PAGE H3102.

The following version of H. Con. Res. 36 and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was inadvertently printed in the RECORD incorrectly. The correct versions are as follows:

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OFFERED BY MR. TAUZIN

SENATE—Wednesday, June 5, 2002

The Senate met at 9:15 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, a Senator from the State of New York.

PRAYER

Almighty God, we behold Your majesty and we praise You. You are the Creator, Sustainer, and Lord of all; You are omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent. Especially today, we are filled with awe and wonder over Your prevenience, Your beforehand presence and provision. You are always ahead of us; You have answers to our questions before we ask; You have solutions to our problems waiting for us to grasp. There is nowhere we can go where You have not preceded us and no person You have not prepared for us to communicate affirmation, encouragement, and hope.

Therefore, we press on with the work of the day, alert to feel Your hand upon our shoulder, Your Spirit flowing into our minds, and Your guidance to help us know and do Your will. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, a Senator from the State of New York, led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 5, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, a Senator from the State of New York, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mrs. CLINTON thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, this morning the Chair will announce we will be in a period for morning business for the next hour, with the first half under the control of the Republican leader or his designee, and I see the Senator from Ohio is ready to go. The second half of the time is under the control of the Democratic leader or his designee. It is my understanding Senator KENNEDY will be present at that time.

At approximately 10:15, the Senate will again resume consideration of the Supplemental Appropriations Act. Cloture was filed on the supplemental. Therefore, all first-degree amendments must be filed prior to 1 p.m. today.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 2578

Mr. REID. Madam President, I understand that S. 2578 is at the desk and is due for its second reading.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask that S. 2578 be read a second time, and then I would object to any further proceeding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (S. 2578) to amend title 31 of the United States Code to increase the public debt limit.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been heard, under the rule the bill will be placed on the calendar.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10:15 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The Senator from Ohio.

TRIBUTE TO LORNA PALAGYI

Mr. DEWINE. Madam President, this is the time of year when our children across the country are getting out of school. It is also the time of year when many of our great teachers are leaving the classroom for the last time and retiring. I rise today to honor a very special educator from my home State of Ohio, Lorna Palagyi. Lorna is retiring this month after 25 years of dedication to Ohio students.

When I think about her commitment to education, I am reminded of something Oliver Wendell Holmes once said:

> The main part of intellectual education is not the acquisition of facts but rather learning how to make facts live.

For a quarter of a century now, Lorna Palagyi has been doing just that—making facts come alive for the elementary school children in Madison, OH. She is a graduate of Kent State University. She has taught grades 3 through 7 and tutored students afterschool, served as a mentor for teachers just starting, and helped secure funds for several school projects; one in particular that allowed her students to make a large colored map of the United States on their playground.

Not only has she been very dedicated to her children at school, but she has also been a terrific mother to her children at home. The mother of three children—one of whom happens to be my legislative director, Paul Palagyi—Lorna once said the main reason she taught was to help her kids through college. But I also suspect the reason she taught was because she loved to teach and she loved the students.

She is certainly dedicated to her family and maintains that she simply could not have done it, could not have taught as long as she has, without the love and support of her husband, Jim. We should all be truly proud of Lorna for her commitment, her dedication to quality education. As my own high school principal, Mr. John Malone, said many years ago when I was in high school: There really are only two things that matter in education: One is a student who wants to learn; the other is a good teacher. Lorna is certainly more than just a good teacher.

Over the next decade we will need, it is estimated, at least 2.5 million new teachers. That is an unbelievable figure. That represents a real challenge but also an opportunity for this great Nation of ours to get more teachers like Lorna into our school systems, into the classrooms, teaching our young people. That is certainly how we will prepare our children for their great future.

Today, we thank Lorna and we also thank teachers throughout our country for the great work they do every day for our children. We say to Lorna, you are a shining example of exactly the kind of teachers we need educating our children. Enjoy your retirement. You certainly earned it.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, yesterday we spent a great deal of time doing nothing. We spent most all the day in a quorum call.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, this time is under the control of the Republican leader or his designee. Is the Senator seeking unanimous consent at this time?

Mr. REID. Madam President, we were in a quorum call. This is the time for Republicans. There is no Republican here, so when they show up I will be happy to sit down. Until they get here, I will use their time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, we spent most all of yesterday doing nothing. Senator DASCHLE came on the floor late in the day and filed a petition for cloture because he recognized they were going to slow-walk this legislation on the supplemental appropriations bill, and then referred specifically to what one of the Republican Senators said yesterday, that they were going to slow down the train.

Today's publication of the Congressional Quarterly Monitor suggests they are doing what the majority leader said: Senate Republicans say they will not hesitate to slow-walk legislation important to Democrats, while aggressively pushing their own agenda.

The problem is, at this stage I don't know what "their" agenda is. We have tried to move forward on legislation that is important to their President; namely, this legislation dealing with the supplemental. The supplemental appropriations bill is very important, as we discussed on a number of occasions yesterday. This legislation is entitled: "Supplemental Appropriation Act for Further Recovery From and Response to Terrorist Acts in the United States." If that is not important, I don't know what is. They are slow-walking that. They are slowing down the train.

We read further in the article that a GOP leadership aide said the amendments to this hate crimes bill and this legislation now before us, that Senator Daschle has not seen fit to bring up, include defense authorization, a terrorism insurance proposal, and cloning.

Madam President, as we all know, there was an arrangement to bring up cloning. The majority leader agreed to do that. Of course, Republicans would not let us because they were slow-walking the legislation we had before the break.

I spoke to the Senator from Kansas yesterday about cloning. Senator BROWNBACK feels very strongly about it. He has indicated he would show us his proposal. That is something we want to do. We have offered a number of unanimous consent requests that we can move forward on, terrorism insurance. We, the majority, have tried every way possible to bring terrorism insurance before this body. The people who say they want it cannot take yes for an answer. The Republicans simply do not want this brought up. Some do not believe there is a need for it.

Anyplace in New York, go to people in Illinois, or people in Nevada, all over this country, business communities certainly believe there is a need for terrorism insurance. We want to do that.

I am very disappointed we are now in a predicament that we cannot move forward on the supplemental appropriations bill the President believes is important; we can't move forward on prescription drug benefits, which he says is important, although looking at the proposals we have had from the White House, they are a prescription drug benefit in name only. There doesn't seem to be much interest in that.

The things we need to do are very important to the people of this country. It is something as simple sounding as minimum wage. But for years we have not been able to increase the minimum wage for the people who need it. This is important, not to young people who are flipping hamburgers at McDonald's but to people raising families. Madam President, 60 percent of those drawing the minimum wage are women, and for 40 percent, that is the only money they get for themselves and their families. We need to do this.

Instead of going to these issues, we are having everything slow-walked. I do not understand the reason for that. It seems to me for the good of the country we should move forward.

This is a closely divided Senate. There is plenty of blame to go around if things do not go forward, if we do not make progress. But there is lots of credit to go around if we are able to accomplish things. I hope my friends will decide to move forward with legislation, allow us to legislate rather than hesitate, which we have been doing for the last several weeks.

The legislation before us is so important. We have talked about it on a number of occasions, how important it is for the troops we have in the field. It is important for creating homeland security—something as simple as $200 million for security for nuclear facilities. The Presiding Officer and Senator LIEBERMAN and I have thought it important to do something to beef up security at our nuclear reactor sites. We need to do that because we have rules now at one site for a certain degree of security but at another site there is another degree of security. Even having been given 6 months' notice that there would be a surprise exercise to show how ready they were for an attack, even given 6 months for this so-called surprise, over 50 percent of the reactor sites failed in this security issue.

There will be a hearing before the Environment and Public Works Committee beginning in a half hour to deal with security of nuclear reactor sites.

There are things that need to be done to protect our homeland. I hope we can get to that. I hope the effort to slow-walk, slow down the train, stops immediately.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOND. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. BOND pertaining to the introduction of S. 2579 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, as I understand, we have time now until 10:15; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I yield myself such time as I may use.

HIGHER EDUCATION AND PELL GRANTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, over the period of these past weeks I have tried, with other of our colleagues, to bring attention to what is happening across the country in terms of the funding of education.

Many of us took pride in supporting the No Child Left Behind Act. Yet we are finding increasing information showing that more and more children across the Nation are being left behind. We are finding that daily in the reports.

In a little while this morning, I and others will be offering an amendment to try to address some of the special needs in the summer programs which are so important to children, in providing supplementary services to these children.

But I will focus on the overall issue we are facing of funding education, and, in particular, with regard to the availability of higher education for children from working families and from middle-income families and low-income families, and the availability and accessibility of the Pell grant program to help fund their education.

As we have all seen, there have been increasing reductions in support even in the areas of higher education.

First, I want to talk about the effect of the Bush budget on the overall investment in children and in teachers.

This chart shows the overall education program. The proposal was for a 3.5-percent increase last year. We got it up to 20 percent last year. That was really as a result of working together. That is what we all wanted to do, to work together with our colleagues and work with the administration. But working together is a two-way street. Part of it is reform but also investing in education. That is what we were able to do last year. Yet, this year, we see the administration proposal is only a 2.8-percent increase, which is completely unsatisfactory. It does not even meet the cost of living.

Of course, there are increasing numbers of children who are eligible for particularly the title I programs. So we will be, as we move through the appropriations battle, trying to meet our responsibilities to these children.

I will bring to the attention of the Members of the Senate what happened just yesterday in New York City. Madam President, 100,000 teachers and students in New York City gathered to protest the drastic school budget cuts. There are $358 million in cuts proposed by the mayor. One-hundred thousand students and teachers crammed eight blocks outside City Hall to protest the drastic school budget cuts proposed by the mayor.

Parents want their children educated. They want the Federal Government to work with the States and local communities to get the job done. If they see they are not getting it done in one area, there ought to be support for it in another area. They are tired of excuses.

We had the great national debate in terms of K through 12 just this last year. We made some commitments. We have some sense of expectation about what we are asking young people to do. We have some important accountability. But if we are going to ask the children to be accountable, we ought to be accountable. That is the key issue. If we are asking the young children who are going to school every single day to be accountable for the work they are to do, it is not too much to ask whether we are going to be accountable to make sure they are going to have the kind of support they need.

What is happening now is we are failing to do that. Although money does not answer all of the problems, it is a clear indication of a nation's priorities. When you see that we have a virtual abandonment of the commitment in terms of investing in children, and leaving millions of children behind because of budget considerations, it is not satisfactory.

We are, over the period of the remaining time in the Congress, going to be raising this issue. We are putting our friends and colleagues on notice that we are going to insist on accountability in the Senate.

Now, I want to mention an item in the supplemental which is very important, and that is the $1 billion for the Pell shortfall. We are grateful to the appropriators for ensuring that that $1 billion of shortfall was included in the supplemental. That is enormously important.

But as we are looking at the shortfall, we have to look at where we have been and what we are looking forward to. If you look at where we have been in terms of the funding of the Pell grants over the period of the recent years, you can look back from 1993 to the year 2001, and the average increase was $167.

During the Democratic administration, they raised the Pell grants from $2,300 to $3,750. That is an increase of $1,450.

Last year, it was requested that it be raised by $100. The Congress raised that to $250. Look what the administration has requested for this year: zero; virtually zero in their budget in terms of the Pell grants. This is at a time when you have 640,000 more children living in poverty, and hundreds of thousands of those children are going to be eligible for the program, which means there is going to be a further withering away of the Pell grant program. That is fundamentally wrong.

If we are talking about trying to improve K through 12—and we intend to do so—then we are going to have to have better qualified children who will have an interest in going on to college. Some of those young people will not come from wealthy families. There ought to be a system that is available to them, where if they are of limited income they can get the Pell grants, they can get some loans, they can get a work study program, they can work during the course of the summer, and they can put together a package so they can go to a fine public or private university.

It was the intention of this Congress over a long period of time to say to the young people of this Nation that college was going to be available and affordable. It goes back to the 1860s and the Morrill Act, when we had the land-grant colleges. It was repeated at the time of the GI bill in the post-World War II period. It was repeated in the early 1960s, when we had grants and loans. At that time, the grants were about 75 percent, the loans 25 percent, and the system worked.

But we have seen since that time increasing numbers of young people from working families, who have the skills, the talent, and the intellect to be able to go on to college, are denied that opportunity because the Pell grant just does not provide the resources and support. That is enormously important.

We have seen where the administration has failed to fight for increased funding for K through 12. We are saying that the administration is failing to fight for those young people who want to go to our colleges. This, we believe, is absolutely wrong. We are going to go to battle and fight for that.

Let me just review, very quickly, the recent experience on Pell grants.

In fiscal year 1996, the House Republicans cut President Clinton's request for a $2,600 maximum Pell grant by $180, to $2,420. Congress later enacted a $2,470 maximum award. So even though it was cut during the negotiations, in the final negotiations, the macro-negotiations with the administration, they were able to get a very modest increase.

In 1997, the House Republicans again cut President Clinton's request for a $2,700 maximum Pell grant by $200, to $2,500. Due to the pressure, again, from the President, the House Democrats enacted a $2,700 maximum award.

In 1998, a bipartisan year, President Clinton proposed and Congress enacted a $3,000 maximum Pell grant.

In 1999, fiscal year 2000, the House Republicans proposed a token increase over the Clinton request for Pell grants by $50 in 1999 and $25 in the year 2000.

In 2001, President Clinton proposed a $3,500 maximum Pell grant, which was recommended by House Republicans. Led by House Democrats, however, the maximum Pell grant was later increased to $3,750, providing a $450 increase over the previous year and the largest increase in more than 25 years.

Again, in 2002, President Bush proposed a $100 increase for the maximum Pell, the smallest increase in 7 years. The President proposed the smallest increase—this is last year—in 7 years. With a bipartisan effort, Congress enacted a $250 increase, raising the maximum level to $4,000. And because of anticipated enrollment increases, the budget fell short and would have resulted in an actual cut in the Pell grant. In fiscal year 2003, President Bush proposes to freeze the maximum Pell grant at $4,000. However, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that this will result in a cut of the maximum award to $3,900.

When we are talking about trying to give a helping hand to young people of talent, ability, and intellectual capability to go to the fine schools and colleges of this country after they have gone through the high schools, many of these young people need the kind of financial package which includes some grants, some loans, work study, and other programs. For those in this body who don't understand what a difference $100 can make, if you increase fees by $100 or $200 in most community colleges, you will find a reduction in the number of applications of 5 or 10 percent; $200 to $300 will reflect a reduction of young people being willing to commit to that kind of indebtedness. That is what this is about.

We have tried to show, and we are going to address, the issue of the summer funding programs later on when we have the supplemental. We have been trying to show in the past weeks the failure to invest in K through 12.

We thank the appropriators for the increase of $1 billion they have provided to make sure the Pell grant is not going to fall behind. But as we are thankful to the appropriators for not falling further behind, we are mindful that this administration has requested absolutely zero in this budget. They are proposing $600 billion in tax cuts that will affect the wealthiest individuals and zero in terms of education for Pell grants that offer educational opportunities. Those are the choices being made.

We on this side of the aisle find that that is an intolerable and unfair choice for millions of hard-working families and their children who have the ability. They don't get the grant unless they are able to be accepted into the schools and colleges. We are demanding excellence of those children who go from K through 12. Then when they want to continue their education, what happens? We have an administration that says: Zero.

We want to give the American people the assurance that those of us on this side are going to work with our colleagues and others who are interested, but we will not stand for this kind of indifference in terms of support for young people to attend schools and colleges with Pell grants.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. DURBIN. I was listening to his speech off the floor. Back home in Illinois, we have just gone through a bruising budget battle at the State level. As a result of that battle, they have increased tuition at colleges and universities, meaning that families, particularly working families that already are trying to save so their kids can go to college, are facing even higher indebtedness for their children going to college, greater cost in tuitions and fees. And if I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, on the Federal side of the equation where we help students with Pell grants, for example, the Bush administration is proposing cuts in terms of the Pell grants.

What I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts is, isn't this coming at the families in both directions: On the one hand, the States raising the tuitions and costs; on the other hand, the amount of money available through the Bush budget for families across America is being reduced? This seems as if it will create really an incredible hardship on a lot of these families. Is that the point the Senator is addressing?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is quite correct. First of all, the general estimate at this time is that the budget deficits for States across the country is somewhere between $48 and $50 billion. The general rule of thumb is about a third of that is education cuts. That is being reflected in higher fees or tuition. In my State, it is higher fees. That just means the fees will go directly to that particular school. If it were tuition, it would go into the State education funds.

As far as the student is concerned and the families, they are still paying it out of their pocket. It is an increase in taxes. It is an increase in taxes effectively. It is money they will have to pay so that this administration can give tax breaks to the wealthiest individuals. We are interested in its impact in terms of education.

What we are seeing is that there is an increasing number of young people of talent, ability, desire, individuals who can contribute to this Nation, to make it a stronger Nation, who can add to the economy, add to the essence of the elements of a democracy, who are being effectively shut out. The best estimate we have is that there will be 100,000 young people with this budget who would otherwise be eligible who will be excluded if we do nothing at all.

I don't see how that reflects what the administration has suggested; that is, education is their most important priority.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will continue to yield, if I could follow up, we know that he and others, Democrats and Republicans, worked with the President for this education plan, Leave No Child Behind. One of the cornerstones of that plan was making certain we had quality teachers in the classroom.

Frankly, we are fighting a battle that is pretty tough. With more teachers retiring, with the demands on teachers increasing, with the number of teachers who are lured away to other private sector jobs increasing, we find ourselves struggling to maintain teacher quality.

I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, how much easier is it going to be to recruit the next generation of teachers when we are making the cost of college education higher? How much easier will it be if those young students graduating from college have a greater college debt as they come out of school to make the choice to go teach where we want them to teach, K through 12, high school, where we need their skills? How can we maintain teacher quality at a time when the Bush administration's budget is cutting back assistance to colleges, thereby increasing the debt for some students and discouraging others from pursuing higher education?

Mr. KENNEDY. I want to answer the question in two ways:

First, to underline the point being made by the Senator from Illinois, if it is going to cost more to go, if the children are going to borrow more and it will cost more, it will be a disincentive to those who want to have additional degrees in teaching. We want a well-qualified teacher in every classroom. This will be a financial disincentive for them to get their degrees, and it will be a disincentive for nurses to continue their education in order to become better nurse specialists, as it will in terms of child care, to try to strengthen those individuals who are trying to get some degrees to increase their ability to deal with the Nation's children. In those three areas, this will be a further disincentive.

Second, as the Senator will see from this particular chart I have before me, the administration's budget does nothing to improve teacher quality and reduce class sizes. We had final appropriations of $742 million last year. The proposed budget is zero for this year. These funds can be used in terms of recruitment, in terms of developing a mentoring system which has been so successful, as we found in the hearings. In terms of retention, it gives flexibility to local communities. They need these additional funds to provide financial help for salaries in local communities.

We have given maximum flexibility to communities to ensure that we have a well-qualified teacher in every classroom. We want to provide the incentive to help local communities. We can't do the whole job, but we are committed to trying to do our part.

The Senator raises the issue of where we are in the budget for this year in terms of recruitment and maintaining professional development for teachers who want to upgrade their skills. We find that in this administration's budget it is effectively zero over the previous year. I am troubled by both of these factors when we say we are serious about enhancing education.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts this question. He was the negotiator, the one who put together this legislation with President Bush and the White House. Aren't we also imposing some obligations on school districts across America to have more teachers certified in certain subjects so that they will teach math and science, for example, computer skills, because they also have the skills and training to do it? Aren't we saying to school districts in the next few years, we want you to have more and more certified teachers, qualified teachers, standing in the classrooms?

I hear that when I get back to Chicago in the State of Illinois. They say: That is a good goal. We want to meet that goal. But understand that takes an investment in teacher education and training; that takes resources for the school district to attract these good teachers and keep them. Aren't we, in the Bush bill, Leave No Child Behind, creating a goal of more certified teachers in the classroom and then in the Bush budget not putting in the money to achieve that goal?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

There are many important parts of this No Child Left Behind. But for me the point of having a well-qualified teacher in front of every child in this country and doing that over a 4-year period—we gave the priorities to the areas where we had the neediest children, where you have the highest numbers of teachers who have not gotten their degrees. You have to admire these people anyway; they are teaching in difficult circumstances, and the best information we have is many of them want to continue teaching in these underserved areas if they will have an opportunity to get a degree and enhance their education.

But does the Senator know that there will be 18,000 fewer teachers who will be trained this year over last year because we have failed to provide the resources? I ask the Senator what possible sense that makes as well.

Mr. DURBIN. I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that we can't have it both ways. We cannot establish standards and say to school districts across America that we want you to have accountability and testing and the very best teachers in the classroom, we want you to prove you can educate our young people so they can produce for the 21st century, and then have the President send us a budget that doesn't provide the resources.

We had the press conferences. Everybody was patting one another on the back and smiling and saying we were all committed to education. Now comes the sorry part of the picture, when the budget itself is not presenting the resources the school districts need. As I see it, over the past several years we have made dramatic increases in education, increasing our commitment as a nation to better schools and better students. Now we seem to have taken a dramatic step behind. I might add, the Senator from Massachusetts understands, as I do, that to do this is terrible, but to do it in order to generate another tax cut for the wealthiest people in America makes no sense at all in terms of investing for our future.

I ask the Senator, haven't we had a long run here of increases in spending for education that is now, in the Bush budget, being broken?

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, the Senator is absolutely correct. If you take the past years of expenditures, the increases, we show that from 1997 to 2001, in terms of education, it went up 13 percent. In 2002, total education is 16 percent. If you look at the budget request by the administration—I draw this to the attention of my colleagues. Look at the budget projections over the future. From 2003 to 2010, it is virtually zero. It is the cost of living, which in this bill the request is not—but it is not any increase whatsoever in terms of children. As a result, we are going to find out the number of children who are going to be left behind.

These are the facts. You are going to find out all the way out to 2007 that you are still going to have—current projections—over 6.5 million children left behind. If we had funded the legislation—No Child Left Behind—which the President signed, we have gone from 6.3 million down to 3.9 million over that period of time. If we are going to say we are not going to leave any children behind, we ought to have this number zero. This is the best we could do in terms of the legislation. This is what the rhetoric is. This is what the reality is. That is what is happening in this country not only in funding this legislation but in school budgets.

I would like to inquire of my colleague and friend, does he not find in Illinois that parents want their children to be able to go to a good school and learn? They are less interested about what the funding stream is going to be from the local, State, or Federal. Obviously, we have a responsibility to meet our obligations as to States and local communities. The parents want to be sure children are——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent for 3 more minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now we are putting it at risk—both the kinds of reforms we have gotten out here and in terms of the assurances to those parents that we are going to do our business. Doesn't the Senator agree with me?

We heard so much about accountability, that we ought to be accountable, as well as these children in local schools, and by doing that meet our responsibilities in investing in the children.

Mr. DURBIN. I think the Senator is correct. At this time, parents sending their children to school are less concerned about the sources of the money going into the schools. They want to make certain that the children coming out of the school are well educated.

Here we have a President who really did some historic things. He made an announcement that there was going to be a Federal commitment to education. His political party had said in years gone by they wanted to eliminate the Federal commitment to education. He said: I am going to take a different course. We are going to make a Federal commitment to schools and education and funding. We applauded him, and the Senator from Massachusetts did. We voted with him and gave him a bipartisan, strong vote. We said we will stand with you because every level of government should make a commitment to this most basic issue in America: educating our children.

And now comes the first budget. The promise of the Federal commitment to education is disappearing before our eyes. So for the parents in Illinois, and in Massachusetts, and in Wisconsin, who are concerned about the quality of schools, they have to feel they have been misled by a President who said he wanted to make this commitment but then presents a budget that does not.

We have to make the difference here in Congress. We have to put in the resources, and I think this Democratic Senate has to lead the way.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his leadership.

Mr. KENNEDY. Our time is expiring, but we are going to take time every week to go over these figures and give a report to the American people and our colleagues on what is happening in real terms. We are giving the assurances that we are going to fight in these remaining weeks and months to make sure we are going to invest in the children. We are very hopeful we will get the support of our colleagues in doing so.

I thank the Senator and I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 4775, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Reid Amendment No. 3570, to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out a certain transfer of funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending Reid amendment be temporarily set aside in order that I may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I wonder if the Senator will amend the request to provide that after the disposition of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. GREGG, be recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. I amend my request.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. What is the request, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has requested permission to set aside the pending amendment to bring up his amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin has requested permission, at the conclusion of the Kennedy amendment, to offer the Gregg amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, is there objection to temporarily setting aside the Reid amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. I object to Senator FEINGOLD's request to add the Gregg amendment in sequence until we can see that. May I ask Senator KENNEDY to repeat his request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts repeat the request?

Mr. KENNEDY. I had asked that the pending Reid amendment be temporarily set aside, and then I was going to send my amendment to the desk, if that was agreed to. Then I understood Senator FEINGOLD asked unanimous consent to go after I conclude my amendment. That is what I had understood was going to be the process. I am glad to work out whatever arrangement.

Mr. STEVENS. So far as I understand the position of this side, we have no objection to Senator KENNEDY setting aside the Reid amendment and proceeding with his amendment, but I do object to the sequencing of any amendment after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I object to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not want to object, but I do, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Massachusetts still has the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I then offer——

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct; he has the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 3583 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3570

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I offer a second-degree amendment to the Reid amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the second-degree amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for himself, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. DODD, Mr. REID, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. DURBIN, proposes an amendment numbered 3583 to amendment No. 3570.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request to ask for termination of the reading of the amendment? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide emergency school funding)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. EMERGENCY SUMMER SCHOOL FUNDING.

(a) FINDINGS; PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(A) Under the amendments made by the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, students and schools rightly are held accountable for meeting challenging State academic content and student academic achievement standards in mathematics, reading or language arts, and science.

(B) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program are critical to providing supplemental academic services and academic enrichment activities designed to help students meet local and State academic standards.

(C) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program help children and the children's families in the areas of youth development, drug and violence prevention, and character education.

(D) During the summer of 2002, school districts throughout the Nation will confront more than $200,000,000 in cuts to summer school programs, eliminating services and academic support to more than 150,000 struggling children.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to provide opportunities for communities to provide summertime activities in community learning centers that—

(A) provide opportunities for academic enrichment, including providing tutorial services to help students, particularly students who attend low-performing schools, to meet State and local student academic achievement standards in core academic subjects, such as reading and mathematics; and

(B) offer students an array of additional services, programs, and activities, such as youth development activities, drug and violence prevention programs, counseling programs, art, music, and recreation programs, technology education programs, and character education programs, that are designed to reinforce and complement the regular academic program of participating students.

(b) FUNDING FOR SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Provided that, in addition to amounts otherwise available to carry out section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)), $200,000,000 shall be available to carry out activities described in section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)) during the 2002 summer recess period.

(2) AWARDING OF GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 4202 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7172), the Secretary of Education shall award grants with funds made available under paragraph (1) on a competitive basis to eligible entities serving communities whose local educational agencies are not able to meet fully the communities' need for summer school programs.

(B) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Education shall give priority to an eligible entity that is a local educational agency or who serves a community whose local educational agency—

(i) serves high concentrations or numbers of low-income children;

(ii) before June 6, 2002, announced that the local educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school services in 2002; or

(iii) is located in a State whose State educational agency, before June 6, 2002, announced that the State educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school funding for 2002.

(3) APPLICATION AND OBLIGATION.—

(A) APPLICATION.—Notwithstanding sections 4203 and 4204 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7173 and 7174), an eligible entity that desires a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary of Education at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of Education may require.

(B) OBLIGATION.—Not later than 4 weeks after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Education shall obligate funds made available under this section.

(4) DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—In this section, the term "eligible entity" has the meaning given the term in section 4201 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7171).

(5) EMERGENCY DESIGNATION.—The entire amount necessary to carry out this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Kennedy amendment be withdrawn and the Reid amendment No. 3570 be agreed to; that immediately after adoption of the Reid amendment, Senator KENNEDY be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment, and that there be 60 minutes of debate with respect to the amendment prior to a vote in relation to the amendment, with the time equally divided and controlled in the usual form, with no second degree amendment in order to the Kennedy amendment prior to a vote in relation to the amendment; that upon disposition of the Kennedy amendment, the next amendment in order be one offered by Senators GREGG and FEINGOLD; that there be 60 minutes of debate prior to a vote in relation to the amendment, with no second-degree amendment in order prior to the vote, with the time divided as follows: 15 minutes each for Senators GREGG and FEINGOLD and 30 minutes under the control of Senator CONRAD or his designee; that if the amendment is not disposed of by a Budget Act point of order, then it be subject to further debate and second-degree amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Reserving the right to object, did I hear the Senator from Nevada say there will be 15 minutes each for Senator GREGG and Senator FEINGOLD?

Mr. REID. Yes, that is true.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before Senator KENNEDY moves forward and we dispense with amendment No. 3570, I extend my appreciation to my counterpart, the Republican whip, who has worked this very hard. It has been extremely difficult to get to where we are today, but we are moving forward. It could not have been accomplished without the help of my friend from Oklahoma.

AMENDMENT NO. 3583 WITHDRAWN

AMENDMENT NO. 3570

The amendment (No. 3570) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 3608

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the amendment is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for himself, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. DODD, Mr. REID, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. REED, proposes an amendment numbered 3608.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide emergency school funding)

(4) DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—In this section, the term "eligible entity" has the meaning given the term in section 4201 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7171).

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand, we have an hour's time limit to be divided equally. I will make some very brief opening comments and then yield to my colleague and cosponsor, Senator SMITH from Oregon.

I offer this amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mrs. BOXER, Senator DODD, Senator REID, Senator MURRAY, and Senator DURBIN.

Very briefly, this amendment provides $150 million in emergency funding for fiscal year 2002 to communities to provide students who have fallen behind in their schoolwork the opportunity to catch up with their peers. The second area of education is to award emergency grants to communities that have unmet needs for the summer school programs. Priority in funding will be given to communities that have had to eliminate or cut back their summer school programs due to local and State budget reductions and have high poverty rates. Funding is to be provided on a one-time basis to ensure there are safe learning opportunities this summer for the neediest children.

The bill before us provides urgently needed resources to fight against terrorism, and this is vitally important to the Nation. But just as we must address needs on the war front, we must also turn to urgent priorities at home. There is no greater priority than ensuring a good education for our children. Good schools are critical to the Nation's future, and they are critical to our national security and national defense.

We want our service men and women to be well trained, well led, and with the latest in terms of technology. In order to be able to do that and perform to secure our Nation, they have to be able to have a good education.

We have learned in recent days that schools across the country are cutting back on their summer school programs, creating an emergency for our schools, for our parents, and for schoolchildren. I know the Senator from Oregon has a schedule to keep, so I will yield to him and then I will come back and give the Members an idea about what is happening with the cuts in summer school programs and the value of the summer school programs, reaching the conclusion of all who were involved in the No Child Left Behind Act, if we are going to ask our children to perform, we have to make sure they are given the kind of support they need.

The 300,000 children who are going to have their summer school eliminated will not graduate from their schools without this kind of assistance because they are the ones who are involved in this program, and then we will be faced with what their futures will be without completing their education.

In our education program, we put a strong requirement on the students to perform, on schools to support those efforts, on teachers to be qualified, and also we have a part as well to make sure those children are not going to be left behind.

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I thank Senator KENNEDY for yielding this time to me. I am pleased to join him in this amendment he has offered in the spirit of no child being left behind. It is obvious to anyone that the effect of the recession in many of the States, my own included, is that education is suffering devastating cuts and these are manifest particularly as to programs such as summer school.

Specifically, in my State, Portland has eliminated summer school entirely for elementary school. It has cut its middle and high school programs in half, leaving more than 1,000 students unserved. Similar cuts are being made in Eugene, Beaverton, Salem, and in other schools across my State. These cuts are being made in States across the country as well, and preliminary reports indicate that as many as 300,000 students nationwide will not benefit from summer school this year.

I emphasize that this amendment is for any school that has unmet summer school needs. In Oregon, it means reversing summer school cuts, but in other States it may mean expanding their limited programs to reach more low-income and underserved students. If we do not step in and help our schools now, thousands of students across Oregon and across the country will not get the extra attention they need this summer. There are thousands of students who will suffer next year if we do not act to help them today. Let's give our school districts the resources they need to help students who need it most. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

It is my experience as a father, that summer school is a very valuable tool in the home to motivate better academic performance by the children. Just the threat to one's children that if they do not buckle down now, they will be going to summer school, I have observed does create some degree of terror and dread and better performance.

I hate to see this eliminated because my children have shared with me later that it was a good experience and highly motivational to go to summer school. As a Senator, I can, with great enthusiasm, support what Senator KENNEDY has offered because we have, with the very best of intentions, tried to get our economy moving with the stimulus package, with which we tried to backfill the impact of State budgets. That was taken out in a conference committee, against my objections, but it was done, and we passed it.

This has created shortfalls in States. This is being manifest not only in health care programs and other cutbacks, but in education programs. It seems to me we have a role because we helped create a short-term deficit so we would have a long-term surplus, that we can, with this package today, help in a critical area by restoring summer school funding.

I have seen it work as a dad. I think we need it to work as Senators, and I urge my colleagues to join Senator KENNEDY and myself in passing this very needed amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Once again, I give this information to our colleagues about the value of the summer school programs and give some examples of the studies that have been done and what the results have been. The most recent review of educational research shows that summer school programs make a difference for students. A recent review of 39 studies shows that the academic test scores declined over summer school vacation. The 13 more recent studies show summer school loss is equal to 1 month of learning at grade level. In addition, summer break was more detrimental to math computation and spelling, and the neediest students lost the most. Middle-class students gained during the summer on grade level reading tests while high-poverty students lost ground.

Our efforts with the ESEA are to target the neediest students. Research indicates quite clearly what happens to them without any summer school, but listen to what happens to them with it. The Chicago public schools initiated the summer school program in 1996 to help children who had fallen behind catch up. Eighty-three percent of the 9,700 Chicago third graders required to attend summer school last year had met their grade level criteria by the end of the summer. That is absolutely extraordinary progress. Seventy-five percent of sixth graders and 71 percent of eighth graders made the grade by the end of the summer. Without summer school, these students would not have been promoted to the next grade.

Listen to what has happened in Ohio. Ohio test scores for fourth graders show that children in summer school and afterschool programs exceeded the statewide percentages of students meeting proficiency standards in every subject area tested: writing, reading, mathematics, citizenship, and science. Sixth graders exceeded the statewide percentages of students meeting proficiency standards in four of the five areas: writing, reading, mathematics, and citizenship. School absences and tardiness were reduced for participating students.

Look at Fulton County schools in Georgia, operating a summer accelerated learning experience that provides full-day summer school for 1st through 12th grade, including the breakfast and lunch for all students in the community, as well as participating students. In 1999, they provided half-day programs with only 3,000 student participants; in 2000, they expanded to full day and attracted twice as many students; in 2001, they had 10,000 students. This year, they predicted 11,000 students. The district tested students at the beginning and end of the summer and found great improvement.

The value of the summer school programs has been defined for students across this country.

Against that, we have the schools that are canceling the programs. I refer to an excellent story in the Gannette News Service regarding what is happening to summer schools across the country. It points out that summer schools have been a lifeline for students who struggle to meet higher academic standards and face repeating grades. In No Child Left Behind, we have tried to eliminate social promotion. Children have to measure up.

Great numbers of children now are required to take summer school in order to be able to meet the academic challenges we have included in the program.

Now we see the canceling of the programs. This is very modest, costing about $1,000. It varies in different parts of the country but is basically about $1,000 for the summer program per student. What is happening is, 39 States have made midyear budget cuts during the fiscal year. A May analysis by the National Association of State Budget Offices shows they are cutting students from kindergarten through high school in the summer. Expectations are rising, but the funds are not. Something has to break. The programs that could be singled out, such as summer school, are getting the ax, according to Michael Griffith, policy analyst with the Denver Education Commission.

Across the country, budget cuts imperil summer classes. In Washington, DC, educators slice student enrollment at the District 5-week summer program by 50 percent—a reduction in Washington, DC, by 50 percent of summer school programs that children otherwise are required to take in order to try to meet the standards.

In Indiana, more than $470 million in budget cuts forced education to cut 15 percent of the money for the summer school programs. As a result, some school districts are limiting classes to key academic studies such as reading and math.

In South Carolina, districts have trimmed or eliminated summer school programs. "You cannot cut textbooks; that money was spent the first day of school," said a spokesman for the South Carolina Department of Education, Jim Foster. One of the few things left to cut—something not done yet—is summer school.

I will mention some of the reductions. In Florida, in Dade County, 19,000 students are cut out of summer school programs; in Hillsborough County, FL, 36,000 students have lost the summer school program; in Broward County, 40,000 students have lost summer programs; in my State, Massachusetts: Worcester County, MA, 6,000; more than 25,000 in the State of Michigan. Even in smaller communities, in South Carolina, in Laurens County, $100,000 for 280 students is eliminated. In Marion County, SC, $50,000 was eliminated, and 200 students, needy in terms of education requirements, saw their program eliminated.

In Wisconsin, $60,000 in Mequon; 1,200 students. This is over 300,000 students according to the latest information.

This is an emergency. We have provided in the program that the Secretary obligate the funds within 4 weeks or sooner. If we are able to get it, there is every expectation that the appropriators will move this conference rapidly. The differences are minimal. There are some differences with the House, not great. They will move it rapidly, I expect in a matter of days, and we will get the final outcome with the inclusion of this amendment. All that has to happen, from our conversations with school superintendents, school boards across the country, is if the Secretary obligates the money, they will have the resources and they can reinstate these summer programs.

The Department at the present time has on file $150 million in worthy, highly regarded 21st century summer school and afterschool applications—already ranked and already peer-reviewed, on the Secretary's desk. He could approve $150 million worth of those this afternoon. They have been peer-reviewed and ranked. All that needs to be done is to give greater targeting to the needy students. We give discretion to the Secretary to be able to do that. That would be manageable.

The Department can promise the funds to those districts placing a priority on those canceling the summer school programs or so the districts can borrow money to resume the summer programs, and the Department can then reimburse.

States contemplate more summer school cuts right now. My own State is considering a $40 million additional cut. This is a barebones amendment to deal with an emergency. If we do not do this, these summer school programs are headed for the chop block. We made a commitment to the students that we would not leave them behind. The school districts now are saying to the students: Look, you have to make the grade in these schools, in terms of the tests, and you have to stay and do the work over the course of the summer and raise your grades because we are eliminating social promotion from these States and these local communities. So the students are prepared to go. And now we are saying the resources will not be there.

This is an emergency. It does relate to our security in a very important way in terms of the education of our children. It seems to me the Senate should be willing to accept this amendment.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). Twelve and a half minutes.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am very grateful to have 6 minutes to try to put into words my strongest support for this very important amendment which has been put forward by our leader on education, Senator KENNEDY, with the strong endorsement of Senator GORDON SMITH, making it a very bipartisan amendment.

There is some confusion about what an emergency supplemental bill is. I have been in the Congress—hard to believe it—20 years, 10 in the House and 10 in the Senate, and we take up emergency supplementals all the time because there are unmet needs and we need to act.

Senator KENNEDY is pointing out a crucial unmet need. I was very delighted when he asked me to speak because I have worked hard with him, with the Presiding Officer, and others on afterschool programs for our children.

The funding will go into the afterschool programs. We all think of afterschool programs as occurring at the end of the day when kids could go home to empty houses, and so on. That is the usual way to think of it. But Senator KENNEDY is doing something interesting. What he is basically saying is afterschool ends and for some kids there is no summer school. That is afterschool in the broadest sense. So I support these funds going through the 21st Century Learning Centers.

When President Bush speaks about education, he talks about leaving no child behind. As a mother, as a grandmother, as a Senator from the largest State in the Union, I know that when you leave a child home alone in the summertime, you are really giving a new meaning to "left behind." We know during the regular school year what happens. The FBI has shown us the crime rate going dramatically upward after school hours. We know what happens when a child has all day to sit alone at home, without having the chance to have activities funneled into something positive, without having the chance to hone their skills for the rest of the year.

As Senator KENNEDY has stated so eloquently many times, we are putting much more of a burden on our youngsters to step up to the plate and achieve high standards. I support that. But at the same time, to deprive them of summer school this summer just as we are putting all these standards in place is a cruel hypocrisy. If we do not support this amendment, I think we are doing something very cruel indeed to those children.

This amendment will benefit every single State in the Union. The way it is worded, it will go to States that have a shortfall, but it will also go to areas where there is an unmet need. In my home State of California, summer school is a very high priority. But even with that, and even with the fact that in our State you cannot cut it back, in terms of State funds, we have a tremendous unmet need. Many of our children are left behind; 6,000 California students who are eligible for summer school will go without.

So I say to Senator KENNEDY: Thank you very much on behalf of those 6,000 children. This is not some theoretical debate. This is a real emergency for many of our families who do not have the wherewithal, who do not have the ability to ensure their children are protected from being alone after the school year is over. I believe with this amendment we will be making a very strong statement.

Again, it is important for colleagues to recognize that this is an emergency supplemental. Yes, it has much in it that deals with homeland security, and I support every dollar for that. But, again, as Senator KENNEDY has stated, and as former President Dwight Eisenhower stated—because he was the first one to call attention to this—if we do not educate our children, we are taking a national security risk.

It is not a stretch in my mind to say that for kids home alone who should have an effective summer school program, that is, in fact, an emergency. That is, in fact, something we must address in this bill. It is an emergency.

Again, I believe the definition of afterschool certainly should apply to this situation. After school is over, what happens to our children? Many of them will be fortunate, they will have summer school; their energies will be channeled; their talents will be invigorated. They will do better in the school year following. But many of them are left behind.

If our President means what he says—and I know in his heart he means it—he ought to support this.

I thank my colleague from Massachusetts for his leadership on this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time now remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. On the other side, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will take 2 minutes. I mentioned earlier the impact on some of the counties. I want to point out this is not just large communities or small communities, it is in all communities. I will use, for example, what some cuts mean to children. Just for the minute or two, I will use some of the counties in the State of Florida, but these are replicated in other communities.

In Hillsborough, around Tampa, a $6.2 million cut, which is the entire program canceled for 36,000 students not served; Lee County, $1.3 million cut, all summer school services have been cut, except for those for the IDEA students. That is 2,500 high school students will not be served.

In Leon County, they have $1 million for their summer school program. They have now decided not to serve any of the 3,600 they intended to serve.

In Manatee County, $1.4 million was cut from their summer program leaving just $275,000, so that entire program is canceled, except for the students who need only one credit to graduate.

This is being replicated in rural areas, urban areas, all across the country—300,000 children were depending upon summer school in order to meet their obligations to try to meet the rigors of academic challenges in school. If we do not provide the resources here in this legislation in a timely way, those programs will be canceled and those children are in very serious risk of not being able to move to another grade or to graduate. I think that falls into the definition of an emergency.

AMENDMENT NO. 3608, AS MODIFIED

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask the modification that Senator SMITH and I described be made at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the modification?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification of an emergency designation.

Mr. BYRD. I have no objection to the Senator being able to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 3608), as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . EMERGENCY SUMMER SCHOOL FUNDING.

(a) FINDINGS; PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(A) Under the amendments made by the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, students and schools rightly are held accountable for meeting challenging State academic content and student academic achievement standards in mathematics, reading or language arts, and science.

(B) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program are critical to providing supplemental academic services and academic enrichment activities designed to help students meet local and State academic standards.

(C) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program help children and the children's families in the areas of youth development, drug and violence prevention, and character education.

(D) During the summer of 2002, school districts throughout the Nation will confront more than $200,000,000 in cuts to summer school programs, eliminating services and academic support to more than 150,000 struggling children.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to provide opportunities for communities to provide summertime activities in community learning centers that—

(A) provide opportunities for academic enrichment, including providing tutorial services to help students, particularly students who attend low-performing schools, to meet State and local student academic achievement standards in core academic subjects, such as reading and mathematics; and

(B) offer students an array of additional services, programs, and activities, such as youth development activities, drug and violence prevention programs, counseling programs, art, music, and recreation programs, technology education programs, and character education programs, that are designed to reinforce and complement the regular academic program of participating students.

(b) FUNDING FOR SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Provided that, in addition to amounts otherwise available to carry out section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)), $150,000,000 shall be available to carry out activities described in section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)) during the 2002 summer recess period.

(2) AWARDING OF GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 4202 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7172), the Secretary of Education shall award grants with funds made available under paragraph (1) on a competitive basis to eligible entities serving communities whose local educational agencies are not able to meet fully the communities' need for summer school programs.

(B) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Education shall give priority to an eligible entity that is a local educational agency or who serves a community whose local educational agency—

(i) serves high concentrations or numbers of low-income children;

(ii) before June 6, 2002, announced that the local educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school services in 2002; or

(iii) is located in a State whose State educational agency, before June 6, 2002, announced that the State educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school funding for 2002.

(3) APPLICATION AND OBLIGATION.—

(A) APPLICATION.—Notwithstanding sections 4203 and 4204 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7173 and 7174), an eligible entity that desires a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary of Education at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of Education may require.

(B) OBLIGATION.—Not later than 4 weeks after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Education shall obligate funds made available under this section.

(4) DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—In this section, the term "eligible entity" has the meaning given the term in section 4201 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7171).

(5) EMERGENCY DESIGNATION.—The entire amount necessary to carry out this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, regrettably, I must oppose the amendment offered by my friend from Massachusetts. I do not like to oppose this amendment. I would be very supportive of this amendment were it under different circumstances and not being offered to this bill. The amendment would provide $150 million in emergency funding for fiscal year 2002 to support community summer school programs.

Last December, Congress approved and the President signed the Labor-

HHS Education Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2002. That act contains significant resources for the summer school program. Currently, the Federal Government provides $1 billion in funding for the 21st Century Afterschool Program. In fiscal year 2002, the funding increased by $150 million.

Senator KENNEDY makes a very strong case for this program, and I certainly agree with him in the concept, but I cannot support this amendment as it is being offered to this supplemental bill.

This supplemental appropriations bill is focused on providing the resources necessary to support the war on terrorism and to secure our homeland.

In the supplemental bill, we funded the President's request for $14 billion for the Department of Defense. We have provided $8.3 billion for homeland defense programs.

I believe it is essential that the Senate move forward quickly in approving this bill so that Federal agencies and State and local governments have the resources they need now—not later—to prevent, to detect, and to respond to potential terrorist attacks. Funding homeland defense must be our highest priority.

Sadly, in the Statement of Administration Policy, delivered to the Senate yesterday, I believe it was, the President's senior advisers indicated they would recommend that he veto this bill because it contains what the administration characterizes as "lower priority, nonemergency programs."

It is not clear which of our homeland defense programs the administration was referring to in their statement. Was it the funding to train and equip firefighters? Was it the funding to enhance law enforcement? Was it the funding to enhance port security? Was it the funding for airport security? Was it the security funding that the Department of Energy believes is essential to prevent terrorists from getting their hands on nuclear material but that OMB turned down?

Regardless, we are facing a veto threat because the advisers to the President at least, apparently, believe we have too much funding in the bill for homeland defense and other programs.

I believe the President and his advisers are fundamentally wrong when it comes to homeland defense.

The Vice President has said we can expect another terrorist attack—that it is almost certain. When might that happen—tomorrow, or next week, or next year? Yet the administration opposes critical homeland defense programs that our recent Appropriations Committee hearings demonstrated were necessary to fill in the cracks in the security of our homeland.

Having said all of this, I do not believe we should add fuel to the fire by adding funding to this bill for a program that was well funded in the Labor-HHS Education Act. Was it because the summer school programs used more funds? Senator KENNEDY and other Senators make a good case that it could be. But it is not an emergency.

I regret having to oppose this amendment. I think I can say without any feeling that anyone can question my statement that I have been as great a supporter of education as any Senator in this Chamber. I have supported education all through the years. I support summer school programs. But I don't support adding $150 million to this bill when the threats of veto downtown indicate we would simply be adding fuel to the fire.

This is a tough bill. It has been very difficult to bring it thus far. We conducted hearings which were extremely substantive. We had good witnesses. We had witnesses from all over the country—Governors, mayors, and people who are at the local level, firefighters, policemen, and health officials. We had former Senator Sam Nunn and former Senator Warren Rudman come before the committee. We had seven Federal Department heads. We went into matters very thoroughly on this committee. We were concerned about homeland defense. We wanted to provide the moneys that could be used in a protective way and in a way that would make our people safe. These moneys are for schoolchildren—for the safety of schoolchildren, for safety in schools, and for the safety of the children and their parents in their homes.

I just do not want to do anything that would give the administration any assistance in arguing that we are going beyond what we should do in this particular bill. We are having a hard enough time with the administration as it is. The Homeland Defense Director, Mr. Ridge, would not come before the committee. The President would not let him come before the committee. So we had to make do with what we could. We had very good hearings even though he did not appear before the committee.

So we are doing the best we can to protect the people of this country in the face of imminent threats, if we are to pay any attention to what the administration has said about threats.

I hope we will not add this amendment to this bill. It would be difficult enough in conference to carry the bill as it is written.

We think what is in the bill, generally speaking, has been the product of our hearings. The hearings have been studied assiduously by the staff of both sides. And Senator STEVENS and I have labored hard to bring this bill thus far. I don't want to see this bill vetoed. I hope we can convince the President not to veto it. But I think we ought to be very careful not to be adding amendments on this floor that will make it easier for the administration to make its case.

I shall yield the floor at this point. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Alaska, Mr. STEVENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of our committee.

I regret that I must take the position we have to take on this amendment. It provides emergency funding for communities that have summer school programs. But as we look at it, the priority is given to communities that have had to eliminate or cut back on programs due to State or local budget reductions.

We increased the money in the budget for 2002 by $150 million above the 2001 budget in this area. Having increased it $150 million, the State and local governments reduced their effort. And now the Senator wishes us to make up the reduction brought about by local and State reductions which they took because we had provided Federal money to assist them in the area. It is a never ending cycle if we do that.

But beyond that, I call attention to the fact that we are already in June. There is no way in God's heaven we are going to get this bill to the President before July. The normal processes of releasing money would not get the money to them before September, when the school year has started. This is no way to treat our emergency bill that is before us now to deal with emergencies of homeland defense, emergencies in defense, and other emergencies. There are emergencies. The Oklahoma bridge is an emergency. But this is not an emergency. They are not needed on an emergency basis. They cannot be spent this summer.

I am compelled to oppose the amendment because of the circumstance we face.

I want to tell the Senate that this is the test. Everybody comes to us saying, you two big spenders are going to spend all the money around the place.

The Senator from West Virginia and I have the job of trying to urge the Senate to get this bill to conference. As I said yesterday, I would like to see just a motion to go to third reading and take the bill we brought out of committee to conference, and bring the bill back by Tuesday so it might even get to the President before July 4. But under the procedure we are now following, I seriously doubt this bill will be on the President's desk before the July 4 recess, which is a travesty.

This amendment adds to that delay because, I can assure you, the House will not accept this amendment. It is going to be opposed by the President and add to the bundle of sticks already there that brought about this threat of a veto.

So I want to ask the Senate to support the leadership of our committee and refuse to accept this amendment because it is not an emergency, to vote against this concept of waiving the point of order that the Senator from West Virginia is compelled to make. He, as I do, believes very much in children. We believe in providing the money that is necessary.

I am alarmed at the process that is underway whereby as we increase Federal spending, the State and local entities decrease theirs, so there is no net benefit to the beneficiaries we are trying to assist by bringing some additional Federal money into the areas previously occupied totally by State and local funds.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is an emergency. If we do not provide the resources to these States, we are going to see an increased number of children who are not going to get the help they need.

I will point out, before we get all excited about this being an emergency, there are a number of items that are included as emergencies in this supplemental: National Park Service construction at $18 million; fire claims for New Mexico for $80 million. I am going to support that and vote for it. But let's not leave the impression this is only for homeland security. I will not go into the several hundred million dollars for additional items in the bill.

If we are going to take care of the fire claims in the Southwest and provide funding for the National Park Service, I think we ought to provide money for children to go to school in the summer. That is an emergency, too. I hope that we would do that.

The principal money that was increased last year starts in July and is for the next fiscal year. These schools and many of the school districts did not understand the emergency. But the requirements we put on the schools were not only for the poor children, they were for every child in this country. We ought to be concerned about the emergency that every child in this country is facing when they are being knocked off assistance to meet certain standards which our bill last year required them to meet. That is why this is an emergency and why I think it is important.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia controls 16½ minutes.

Mr. BYRD. How much time does the opposition have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes 15 seconds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I know it is easy to point to a bill that is a $31 billion bill. We increased that bill yesterday by $393 million. So it is $31,393,000,000.

Now, it is easy to look at that, easy to pick at little items—pick, pick—but I think that if those items are considered and studied and all the facts are known, they are justified. They are justified.

We do the best we can with a big bill. I do not take a back seat to anybody in support for the people of this country: the education of our children, young people, and adults.

Last year, the President requested $44.5 billion for discretionary education programs. This level was woefully inadequate. Through negotiations with the White House, I was able to reach agreement on a ceiling for discretionary spending that was high enough to provide a $4.4 billion increase for our Nation's education programs.

Following that agreement with the White House, I provided, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, an allocation to the Labor-HHS Education Subcommittee that was large enough for Chairman HARKIN to approve a $4.4 billion increase over the President's request and $6.7 billion, or 16 percent, above the prior fiscal year.

So if you are looking for "Mr. Education" around here, I will stay in the ring; I will fight for that as hard as anybody else. I got my education the hard way. I started out in a two-room schoolhouse in southern West Virginia. I graduated in 1934 in a class of 28 persons. I was the valedictorian. If there had been 29 persons, I might not have been valedictorian. But it was 16 years after I completed high school before I was able to start college.

So don't talk to me about education. You are looking at somebody who typifies the effort to study and to learn and the effort to help others to learn.

I went to school 10 years at night in this city to get my law degree, not that I ever expected to be a lawyer, but I wanted to learn. I am still learning.

I chose this past Sunday to travel miles into the mountains of West Virginia to address a commencement. I had several commencement invitations from West Virginia high schools and colleges. I chose one. I chose to address the commencement at a high school in Pickens, WV, near Helvetia, a little town that was founded by Swiss immigrants in the early 1800s.

How many students were in that whole school? Thirty-seven from kindergarten through the senior class. How many students were in the senior class? Three—not 300; two young men and one young woman.

Why did I choose them? I wanted to go to that little school to let those little people back there in the hills, who might feel that they are off the beaten path, that somebody was interested, somebody was paying attention to them.

That little school has won several of the Statewide academic awards. They don't go in big for athletics—I don't, either—they concentrate on academics, and they won several awards. A little school with one ten-thousandths of the whole school population in West Virginia has won 11 percent of the academic awards in that State.

So I am for education. I want to help our young people. Years ago, I fought for summer jobs for young people in this District of Columbia so they could work and, hopefully, stay out of trouble.

So I can shout as loud as anybody, and I can believe what I am saying as conscientiously as can anybody else. I am doing what I can for education. Education is one of my priorities; it always has been. But this is a different bill. We are talking about the safety of young people who attend schools at Pickens, Sophia, or here in Washington, DC. We are talking about the safety of people.

This administration tells us that we might see a repeat of what happened on September 11; it is almost certain.

This bill needs to pass. We need to get it to conference. We need to get it to the President. And I hope that the President will not veto it. It is a worthwhile bill—not that the amendment that the distinguished Senator is proposing is not worthwhile. I support that amendment but not on this bill—not on this bill.

I have a job to do here, and it is to try to get the bill through.

How many minutes remain?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes remain.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the chair, and I yield the floor for now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. I yield 3 minutes to Senator GREGG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I thank the chairman of the committee. I rise in opposition to this amendment which is obviously well intentioned but unfortunately is not affordable at this time, and certainly not on this bill. It is inconsistent with some of what we have already done in the area of summer school education.

First, the reason it is inconsistent is that there is no way this bill is going to pass in time for this money to get out for the summer school activities. As a practical matter, although it would be a nice vote and obviously would be politically attractive, its impact on summer school will be negligible, if any at all, because the money simply will not get there.

Secondly, it is important to remember that in the ESEA bill, we have given the authority to local school districts to spend title I money for the purposes of summer school, which makes a great deal of sense, and the President has increased funding for title I by $1.6 billion last year and asked for another $1 billion this year. Those are significant dollar increases.

If a local school district desires, it can use those moneys for the purpose of extending the school year or aggressively promoting summer school. The money is in place, already appropriated. As a practical matter, it is following a path which we set under ESEA, which was the bill we passed, No Child Left Behind, and is part of that entire package.

Although this additional money is certainly well intentioned, I don't see it having much effect because it is not going to get to the schools by this summer because the money will not be available in that timeframe.

Secondly, we have already funded these programs through the dramatic increase in title I which has come about as a result of the President's leadership.

For that reason, I oppose the amendment. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes 10 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. And on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will yield the remaining time to myself.

While taking care of the war front, we also must take care of the home front. Summer school is an emergency for 300,000 schoolchildren who may not graduate without this amendment. It is just as deserving as other emergency items in this bill. There are other emergency items: National Park Service construction, $18 million; Bureau of Indian Affairs, department management, $7 million; Forest Service capital improvements, $4 million; fire claims, $80 million. These are all under the emergency provisions. I believe $150 million for summer school programs for children is as deserving as those programs.

In the end, this is about families, it is about children, it is about who we are as a nation. Can we protect our interests abroad and also help our children here at home?

I know a point of order will be made. I hope we would add this as an amendment to meeting emergency requirements such as those other items I indicated have been included. Children, summer school programs, ought to be included as well.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time, or I will withhold the time depending on the opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, the supplemental also contains $1 billion for the Pell grant shortfall. That is a key education program. I want the record to show that the bill is certainly not devoid of moneys that are to be spent in the interest of education.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seven and one-half minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts like some of my time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator. I think we have had a good discussion. I am prepared to yield back the time. I am very grateful to the Senator. We are prepared to yield back the time and move ahead. I would retain that time if others were going to speak, but I am prepared to move to the vote on what will probably be a point of order. If the Senator cares to, I will yield back my time, if those in opposition will yield back their time.

Mr. BYRD. How much time does the Senator from Massachusetts have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty seconds.

Mr. BYRD. That would be a good tradeoff.

I consider the Senator from Massachusetts to be not only a fine Senator, but he is my friend. He is very interested in fostering education and providing good legislation and good funding. If he wants another 3 minutes, I will be glad to yield him 3 minutes of my time. I am ready to make a point of order, but I don't want to do it without giving the Senator or any other Senator who wishes to speak time on his behalf.

Mr. KENNEDY. As I mentioned, we are prepared to move ahead with the resolution. I will yield back my 30 seconds. I understand when all time has expired, then a point of order will be made. We will let the Senate make a decision. I thank the Senator very much for extending me the time. We have had other Senators who have spoken. I think we are prepared to move ahead.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. Mr. President, I am constrained to recall a little poem which I think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts will like. I like it very much. I think we are both interested in the same cause, the education of our young people.

As a Senator who has great-grandchildren, I certainly hope for the best for these great-grandchildren and the great-grandchildren of all other great-grandparents in the country.

I guess I will close my opposition to this amendment with this brief recapitulation of verse:

I took a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day—
And as my fingers pressed it, still
It moved and yielded to my will.

I came again when days were past
The bit of clay was hard at last.
The form I gave it, still it bore,
And I could change that form no more!

I took a piece of living clay,
And gently fashioned it day by day,
And molded with my power and art
A young child's soft and yielding heart.

I came again when years were gone:
It was a man I looked upon.
He still that early impress bore,
And I could fashion it never more.

I think that pretty well sums up my feeling toward our young people, our children, the education of our young people. Now is the time, the formative period in their youth when we can shape and mold them to our will. Now is the best time for the learning process, while they are young and they don't have the other cares that they will have later.

I compliment the distinguished Senator for his offering of this amendment. I oppose it with apologies. But I can't help it. This bill is not the bill on which we should attach this amendment, however worthy the amendment.

With those apologies, I will make the point of order. I yield back my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if I may have 30 seconds, I thank my friend from West Virginia. He can make a speech in favor of education, name every one of his elementary and secondary schoolteachers, give all of their background, and convince this body of the importance of funding. I am looking forward to standing with him, hopefully shoulder to shoulder, as we move on into these appropriations to try to do what needs to be done for the children of this country. I always enjoy the chance of working with him. My time has expired, I understand.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. I assure him we will be standing shoulder to shoulder in many instances.

Mr. President, section 205 of H. Con. Res 290, the fiscal year 2001 concurrent resolution on the budget, created a point of order against an emergency designation on nondefense spending. The amendment contains nondefense spending with an emergency designation.

Pursuant to section 205 of H. Con. Res 290, the fiscal year 2001 concurrent resolution on the budget, I make a point of order against the emergency designation contained in the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to waive section 205 of H. Con. Res 290, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2001 for purposes of the pending amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: The "yea" vote will be interpreted as waiving the Budget Act for the purpose of this amendment, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A "yea" vote is in favor of waiving the Budget Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) is necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote "no."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 38, nays 60, as follows:

Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained. The emergency designation is removed.

AMENDMENT NO. 3608, AS MODIFIED, WITHDRAWN

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for up to 2 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. BINGAMAN are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I ask unanimous consent to follow the Senator from Wisconsin with two amendments to be called up.

Mr. GREGG. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I have no personal objection; however, I believe we should consult with the Republican leader, Senator STEVENS. At this time, I am constrained to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Let me inquire if I could call them up and lay them aside before a decision to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREGG. I have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

AMENDMENT NO. 3687

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the next amendment is the Gregg-Feingold amendment.

Mr. GREGG. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG], for himself, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. KERRY, Mr. VOINOVICH, and Mr. MCCAIN, proposes an amendment numbered 3687.

Mr. GREGG. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To extend and strengthen procedures to maintain fiscal accountability and responsibility)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

PART —BUDGET ENFORCEMENT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Part may be cited as the "Budget Enforcement Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. EXTENSION OF DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.

(b) REPORTS.—Subsections (c)(2) and (f)(2) of section 254 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 904) are amended by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

(c) Expiration.—

(1) Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.—Section 275(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900 note) is amended—

(A) by striking "2002" and inserting "2007"; and

(B) by striking "2006" and inserting "2011".

SEC. 3. EXTENSION OF PAY-AS-YOU-GO REQUIREMENT.

Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902) is amended—

(1) in subsections (a) and (b)(1), by striking "enacted before October 1, 2002," and inserting "enacted before October 1, 2007"; and

(2) in subsection (b) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Exception.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there shall be no sequestration under this section for any fiscal year in which a surplus exists (as measured in conformance with section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990).".

SEC. 4. POINT OF ORDER TO REQUIRE COMPLIANCE WITH THE DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS AND PAY-AS-YOU-GO.

Section 312(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 643(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Discretionary Spending Limit and Pay-as-you-go Point of Order in the Senate.—

"(1) In general.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (6), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill or resolution or any separate provision of a bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that would—

"(A) exceed any of the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or any suballocation of such limits among subcommittees under section 302(b); or

"(B) for direct spending or revenue legislation, would cause or increase a deficit (as measured in conformance with section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990) for any one of the following three applicable time periods:

"(i) the first year covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget;

"(ii) the period of the first 5 fiscal years covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; or

"(iii) the period of the 5 fiscal years following the first five fiscal years covered in the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

"(2) Budget resolutions.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (6), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that concurrent resolution) that would exceed any of the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

"(3) Point of order against a specific provision.—If the Presiding Officer sustains a point of order under paragraph (1) with respect to any separate provision of a bill or resolution, that provision shall be stricken from the measure and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor.

"(4) Form of the point of order.—A point of order under this section may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e).

"(5) Conference reports.—If a point of order is sustained under this section against a conference report the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d).

"(6) Exceptions.—This subsection shall not apply if a declaration of war by the Congress is in effect or if a joint resolution pursuant to section 258 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 has been enacted.".

SEC. 5. ENFORCEMENT AGAINST BUDGET EVASION.

"BUDGET EVASION POINT OF ORDER

"Sec. 316. (a) Discretionary Spending Limits.—It shall not be in order to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that waives or suspends the enforcement of section 251 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or otherwise would alter the spending limits set forth in that section.

"(b) Pay-as-you-go.—It shall not be in order to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that waives or suspends the enforcement of section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or otherwise would alter the balances of the pay-as-you-go scorecard pursuant to that section.

"(c) Directed Scoring.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that directs the scorekeeping of any bill or resolution.

"(d) Waiver and Appeal.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.".

(b) Table of Contents.—The table of contents for the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the item for section 315 the following:

"316. Budget evasion point of order.".

Mr. GREGG. I offer this amendment on behalf of myself, Senator FEINGOLD, Senator CHAFEE, Senator KERRY, Senator VOINOVICH, and Senator MCCAIN.

Essentially, this amendment does two things. It reinstitutes the caps and it reinstitutes the pay-go language. It puts back in place budgetary discipline as we move through this process of appropriations bills.

Recently, we have seen the budget discipline within the Congress has eroded rather dramatically. We have seen the Agriculture bill and the trade adjustment bill both adding massive new entitlement programs. We know as we look down the road we will have very significant costs in the area of fighting terrorism and in the area of natural defense. It is absolutely critical in this context that we start to put some budget discipline in place.

We are facing, regrettably, a deficit, something we hoped would not happen, but it has happened as a result of the economic slowdown and as a result of the effects of terrorism. The deficit is growing rather radically, unfortunately. Our job as legislators is to make sure we do not aggravate that deficit by not being fiscally responsible as we bring forward appropriations bills and other bills which might have entitlement spending included.

Unfortunately, the disciplining mechanism which actually exists out there, or has existed for the last 5 or 6 years, is about to lapse; that is, the ability to have a fixed number beyond which if we are going to spend we have to have a supermajority to do that. That is called caps.

The second budget discipline, which is pay-go, essentially says if you are going to add a new entitlement program or you are going to cut taxes during a period, especially of deficits, you must offset that event so that it becomes a budget-neutral event that also lapses.

This language which Senator FEINGOLD and I have put together and which failed on a very close vote in the Budget Committee, a tie vote, in fact—it would have passed with one more vote—reinstitutes the same traditional approach—so 5-year caps, 5-year pay-go, and, as a result, put in place some discipline.

There are some subtleties to our bill about which I want to be open. Some people have looked at them and said they are interested in them and some said they are concerned about them. One is the way we enforce this mechanism by saying the bill which exceeds the caps allocated to it by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the 302(b) allocation, that if a bill exceeds that cap, that bill is subject to a point of order on specific parts of that bill, depending on what part of that bill is unable to be sustained with 60 votes. So it becomes a targeted approach of trying to bring that bill back into proper perspective as far as appropriations and the budget are concerned.

Second, the basis for the cap is the Democratic budget proposal as it passed the committee. So the numbers are for the 5 years. Those were the gross numbers. Those numbers are higher than those of the President this year by $9 billion, but over the 5-year period they are actually about the same as the President's number. In fact, I think they are within a couple of billion dollars of each other. As a practical matter, there is a path toward maintaining fiscal responsibility.

If we do not do this, if we do not put back in place caps and pay-go mechanisms, we will have no budget discipline in this Congress, and, as a result, we will dramatically aggravate the deficit which, of course, impacts a lot of important issues, but especially impacts Social Security.

I hope my colleagues will support this effort. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I rise today to join with my colleague from New Hampshire, Senator GREGG, as well as my colleagues Senators CHAFEE, KERRY, VOINOVICH, and MCCAIN to offer this amendment, which I believe is a commonsense budget process amendment, the Budget Enforcement Act of 2002.

Let me especially thank the Senator from New Hampshire, who has been a terrific leader on this issue. As he said, we made a real effort in the Budget Committee, had an excellent debate with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and only lost on a 9-to-9 vote. We were hoping for a good result today, but we are both devoted to returning some budget rules because we both believe this is one of the main reasons we were able to have some success in the 1990s in bringing the budget under control and actually getting to the point where we had a surplus for a brief period of time.

In the 1990s, we took fiscally responsible actions that led to balancing the budget in 1999 and 2000, without using Social Security, which was a tremendous achievement. Last year, the Government returned to the bad habit of using the Social Security surplus to fund other Government activities. I believe we have to put an end to that practice. The Government will not have these Social Security surpluses to use forever. In the next decade, the baby boom generation will begin to retire in large numbers. Starting in 2016, Social Security will start redeeming the bonds that it holds, and the non-Social Security government will have to start paying for those bonds from non-Social Security surpluses.

The bottom line is that, starting in 2016, the Government will have to show restraint in the non-Social Security budget so we can pay the Social Security benefits that Americans have already earned or will have already earned by that time.

That is why we cannot continue to enact either tax cuts or spending measures that push the Government further into deficit. Before we enter new obligations, we need to make sure we have the resources to make our Nation's commitment to our seniors under Social Security. I believe we need to return to the priority of protecting the Social Security trust fund. We should, as President Bush said in a March 2001 radio address, "keep the promise of Social Security and keep the Government from raiding the Social Security surplus."

Yes, September 11 changes priorities and how the Government spends money, but September 11 does not change the oncoming requirements of Social Security. As an economist has said: Demographics is destiny; we can either prepare for that destiny or we can fail. To get the Government out of the business of using Social Security surpluses to fund other Government spending, we need to strengthen our budget process. That is what this amendment does and that is why we urge our colleagues to support it.

The history of budget process changes teaches that realistic budget enforcement mechanisms work. The Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, enacted with bipartisan support, with a Democratic Congress and a Republican President, deserves much credit for helping to keep the Government on that path to reduce and eventually eliminate the deficit.

A central feature of the 1990 act was the creation of caps on appropriated spending. Of course, in recent years, Congress has blown through those caps, when those caps were at unrealistic levels, and when the Government was running surpluses. But in most years of their history, appropriations caps helped to constrain the politically understandable appetite to spend without limit.

Congress has repeatedly endorsed the idea of spending caps. Congress renewed and extended the caps in the budget process laws of 1993 and 1997. And six of the last eight budget resolutions have set enforceable spending caps. If budget numbers are to have any meaning—if they are not to be just wishes and prayers—then we need to have enforcement.

Our amendment would reinstate and extend the caps on discretionary spending, and would do so at a realistic baseline. It would simply set those levels at those in the budget resolution reported by the Budget Committee on March 22. And our amendment maintains, without change, the separate subcaps created in the Violent Crime Act of 1994 and the Transportation Equity Act of 1998.

Like the 1990 budget law that it extends, our amendment would apply budget enforcement to entitlements and taxes. It would extend the pay-as-you-go enforcement mechanism. All parts of the budget would thus be treated fairly.

Our amendment would also improve the points of order that enforce the caps and pay-as-you-go enforcement. It would allow Senators to raise a point of order against specific provisions that cause the caps or pay-as-you-go discipline to be violated. This part of the amendment will work very much like the important Byrd rule that governs the reconciliation process, which is of course named after the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia.

Under our amendment, if a piece of legislation violates the caps or pay-as-you-go discipline, any Senator could raise a point of order and force a vote on any individual provision that contributes to the budget violation. If the point of order is not waived, then the provision would be stricken from the legislation.

The amendment would also shut back-door ways around the caps and pay-as-you-go enforcement, by requiring 60 votes to change the caps, alter the balances of the pay-as-you-go scorecard, or direct scorekeeping.

Our amendment would limit the exceptions to the point of order against emergency designations in the fiscal year 2001 budget resolution, so that all emergencies would be treated alike. Our amendment would thus treat emergencies as they were treated in the text of that budget resolution when the Senate passed it on April 7, 2000, rather than in the watered-down form it had when it came back from conference with the House of Representatives.

Finally, our amendment would extend for 5 years the requirement for 60 votes to waive existing points of order that enforce the Congressional Budget Act. The 60-vote requirement that gives these points of order teeth expires on September 30 this year under current law.

This is sensible budget process reform, in keeping with the best, most effective budget process enforcement that we have enacted in the past. It would make a significant contribution toward ending the practice of using the Social Security surplus to fund other government activities. That is something that we simply must do, for our seniors, and for those in coming generations who will otherwise be stuck with the bill. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREGG-FEINGOLD-CHAFEE-KERRY AMENDMENT—BUDGET ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2002

Appropriations Caps—The amendment would reinstate and extend for 5 years the caps on discretionary spending, keyed to the levels in the budget resolution reported by the Budget Committee. Points of order and the threat of across-the-board cuts would continue to provide enforcement.

Pay-as-You-Go Entitlements and Taxes—The amendment would reinstate and extend the pay-as-you-go discipline that controls entitlement spending and tax law changes. Points of order and the threat of across-the-board cuts would continue to provide enforcement.

Point of Order Against Specific Provisions that Violate the Caps or Pay-as-You-Go—If legislation violated the caps or pay-as-you-go enforcement, the amendment would allow any Senator to raise a point of order against (and thus force a vote on) any individual provision that contributed to the budget violation. If the Senate did not waive the point of order, then the provision would be stricken from the legislation. This point of order would work just like the Byrd Rule against extraneous matter in reconciliation legislation.

Guarding Against Budget Evasions—The amendment would shut back-door ways around the caps and pay-as-you-go enforcement, by requiring 60 votes to change the discretionary caps, alter the balances of the pay-as-you-go scorecard, or direct scorekeeping.

Extending Existing Points of Order—The amendment would extend for 5 years the requirement for 60 votes to waive existing points of order that enforce the Congressional Budget Act. The 60-vote requirement that gives these points of order teeth expires on September 30 this year under current law.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I reserve the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? If no one yields time, time will be charged proportionately against the Senators who control time.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE.

Mr. CHAFEE. Madam President, I rise today in support of the amendment sponsored by Senators GREGG, FEINGOLD, KERRY, VOINOVICH, MCCAIN, and myself.

This is a commonsense amendment that extends existing appropriations caps and pay-as-you-go rules for another 5 years. In addition, the amendment strengthens some budget enforcement mechanisms.

The Senators that have spoken before me have done an admirable job of explaining the provisions in the bill. I want to stress the necessity of fiscal discipline.

Every day constituents and experts talk to me about spending programs that are vitally important to them, asking me to support increased spending. Just as often I hear from people who want to do away with some tax, or lower a tax. They all have excellent arguments, and there is much merit to the initiatives they would like me to support. The problem is that if I were to support each of them, I would be supporting an agenda of cutting taxes and increasing spending. Such an agenda would directly result in deficit spending, which would increase the already enormous Federal debt.

In good conscience, I cannot support such an agenda. Therefore, often I must tell visitors that I cannot be supportive of their cherished initiative. As all in this body know, telling constituents that you do not support their project is a difficult job, especially when the reason that I give them is that "The money just isn't there." Because they respond by saying, "The money always seems to be there."

The problem is that they are right. In a time of war, and deficits, we have approved new tax cuts, which I opposed. We are contemplating permanently extending other tax cuts, which I will oppose. As if that were not enough, we also have added a raft of new spending—including the farm bill and the stimulus—which I opposed. There is no end in sight.

We have gone from record surpluses straight back to deficits. We approved a massive tax cut last year, which limits the amount of money available. We know that the war on terrorism will be very costly. We know we are facing unprecedented demographic changes that will result in staggering costs to sustain Social Security and Medicare. Added to all that, we have a $6 trillion debt, which costs $200 billion in interest payments each year. And we practice no restraint. We continue to spend money, deepening the hole we are in.

This amendment is a step towards reestablishing fiscal discipline in this body. It alone will not ensure the return of balanced budgets—but it is a step in the right direction. Therefore, I urge all my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 30 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. How much time remains on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has 8 minutes; the Senator from Wisconsin, 9.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I ask the Chair to advise me when I have consumed 10 minutes.

Madam President, the amendment offered by our colleagues is well intentioned. In fact, I share many of the goals they have enunciated today. We have an enormously serious problem with the fiscal condition of the country. This chart shows that we are now headed for a return to an era of deficits that is going to continue long into the future. This chart goes back to 1992, back to the time when we were deep in deficit. Many of us know the extraordinary efforts that were required to lift us out of deficit, back into surplus, which we enjoyed for just a few short years.

Last year, a series of decisions were made on a massive tax cut. Then, of course, the attack on the country occurred that led to increased spending for defense and homeland security. At the same time, there was an economic slowdown. We experienced those three events—the massive tax cut, the attack on this country that led to increased spending, and, of course, the economic slowdown. Those three, led by the tax cut—the tax cut was the biggest contributor to returning to deficit—has plunged us back into deficit by very large amounts that are going to continue the rest of the decade. That is the circumstance we face.

The proposal by our colleagues has a very serious set of problems attached to it. They have gone to what is an enforcement mechanism that we have seen in the past. If you liked Gramm-Rudman, you will love Gregg-Feingold because they have returned to the notion of enforcement based on projections; not what actually happens but based on projections of what will happen.

This is a fatal flaw. In fact, it could undermine the very budget discipline they are seeking to support. Have we forgotten what happened under Gramm-Rudman? Have we forgotten the endless game playing and gimmicks that resulted from Gramm-Rudman?

Have we forgotten the rosy scenario? Let us go back to 1990 and look at what could happen under the proposal of our colleagues to now again rely on forecasts and projections rather than real results.

Back in 1990, OMB told us at the beginning of the year that we were going to have a $100 billion deficit. They were right on track with the deficit reduction plan that was in place. That is what they said.

What actually occurred? It wasn't a $100 billion deficit. It was a $221 billion deficit.

All projections, all false; all that lead to a circumstance under the proposal from the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Wisconsin that could lead a Congress to have more tax cuts, more spending, based on a projection that everything was OK. Later in the year, when reality sets in, their answer is to only deal with half of the equation that leads to budget deficits. Budget deficits are a result of an imbalance between spending and revenue. Their only answer is on the spending side of the equation. That is, I think, a mistake.

Let us look at what it took to get us back into balance. Back in the 1980s—here is the blue line, the revenue line, and the red line is the spending line. We can see for a very long period that spending exceeded revenues, and by large amounts. The result was a quadrupling of the debt of the United States.

What happened in 1993? We passed a plan to cut spending and to raise revenue. It was that combination that led us back to fiscal responsibility, that led us back to balance, that eliminated deficits, and that reduced debt.

Have we forgotten that worked?

I hope very much that we don't go down this slippery slope of a whole new enforcement mechanism based on projections rather than real results. That way leads to real trouble.

In addition to those problems, our friends who are coming before us with this amendment—well intentioned as it is—I think do underestimate the uncertainty of our time.

When this headline appeared on September 12, everything changed. This headline says, "U.S. Attacked."

We all remember that somber day when there were two strikes at the World Trade Center and passenger airliners turned into flying bombs, and what happened shortly thereafter with the attack on the Pentagon. That changed everything. We are now in a period of extraordinary uncertainty.

Here are recent headlines that talk about uncertainty. This is the Vice President of the United States warning of future attacks:

> Possibility of another al-Qaida strike "almost certain," the Vice President says.

In this circumstance, we should not be tying the hands of the Congress and the administration for the next 5 years. None of us are wise enough to know what demands may be made on this country. None of us can know what is in the next 24 hours, much less the next 5 years.

We ought to be ready to respond to any attack and any strike against this country. We ought not to be in a fiscal straitjacket that makes a response more difficult.

> Calls U.S. attacks akin to those on Israel inevitable.

Our friends who are sponsoring this amendment will say we have a way around that for defense spending. We only have a simple majority vote for additional defense spending.

Those are not typical defense expenditures that are being used to respond to terrorist attacks. Defense is part of it, but another part is called "homeland security." Homeland security funding is not off in the defense budget. It is in the budget of the FBI, it is in the budget of the INS, it is in the budget of the FAA, it is in the budget of the Transportation Department, and it is in the budget of the Department of Health and Human Services to respond to attacks and to bioterrorism. The money needed to defend this Nation is not just in the defense budget.

Have we forgotten the response of this Congress to the attacks of September 11? Was it just defense spending that we increased? Absolutely not. We also responded with money for homeland security because we understood a terrorist threat to this country could not be just defended in the traditional way.

The uncertainty goes to other areas as well. This is a headline of Tuesday of this week in USA Today:

> Nuclear Clash Would Batter World Financial Markets.

They are talking about what would happen if a nuclear exchange occurred between India and Pakistan. They alert us to the fact that it would batter world financial markets.

> Nuclear war would spark a sell-off and send world stock markets tumbling.

This is a period of uncertainty, and we ought not to be tying the hands of the Congress being able to respond.

The uncertainty is not just on the spending side of the equation. It is also on the revenue side of the equation.

This is a headline of April 26 in the Los Angeles Times:

> Lower Tax Receipts Could Double the United States Budget Deficit . . .

In this year alone.

I agree with that analysis. I think we are headed for a budget deficit this year of perhaps $160 billion and next year an even larger budget deficit.

That is why enforcement provisions are critically important. But they have to be enforcement provisions that will actually work and not make the situation worse.

I wish to announce my intention now to offer the budget enforcement provisions that have worked, and to do so after the disposition of this amendment.

Let me add one other observation about the amendment that is being offered.

The Gregg-Feingold proposal extends the statutory pay-as-you-go enforcement procedures for 5 years, but it substantially amends the current pay-go law to allow direct spending increases or tax cuts to be enacted without being paid for if the Office of Management and Budget projects that there will be a surplus without Social Security.

That is the Achilles' heel of this amendment. It is based on projections and not real results.

We have been down that road before. It was a disaster for fiscal responsibility. Let us not repeat it.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor and retain the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GREGG. Madam President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, I rise in support of the Gregg-Feingold-Kerry amendment. I believe there is no perfect solution. There is no perfect answer to the problem we face. Perhaps some may argue that the caps for the first year are too high. Perhaps if I had written this amendment I might have made them lower. The fact is, without this amendment, there is no fiscal discipline. There is no fiscal discipline that can be imposed on a process which has lurched out of control.

To state the obvious, we have gone from estimates of $50 or $60 billion surpluses at the beginning of this year, to somewhere around $100 billion, $150 billion deficits, and we have not even passed the first appropriations bill. And if this emergency supplemental, which is $4 billion higher than the President's, is any indicator, we are going to be in a sea of red ink.

I think it is a bipartisan effort. It extends discretionary spending caps and the pay-go requirement for entitlement expansions and tax cuts.

These mechanisms have helped to impose fiscal discipline since they were first enacted in 1990, but they obviously expire this year. It would be ironic and irresponsible to let the caps and the pay-go expire just when the budget is punching back into deficit.

There are a lot of organizations around the country. One that I respect, and I know my colleague from New Hampshire respects, is the Concord Coalition.

The Concord Coalition is chaired by former U.S. Senators Warren Rudman and Bob Kerrey. They serve as the Concord Coalition's cochairs. And former Secretary of Commerce Pete Peterson serves as president.

They issued some grades. They are a fiscal responsibility organization. And the Concord Coalition just released this report on fiscal responsibility:

Overall: Progress toward short, medium, and long-term fiscal responsibility, D;

Short-Term: Enacting measures that maintain fiscal responsibility, C−;

Medium-Term: Enacting measures that are fiscally responsible over the next 10 years, D−;

Long-Term: Enacting measures that deal with the entitlement financing gap and ensure fiscal sustainability, D−.

They begin their report by saying:

> Crocodile tears are flowing over the return of budget deficits—now likely to exceed $100 billion this year and next. Nearly everyone says they want the dip back into red ink to be brief. But almost no one is willing to give up anything to ensure that result. Indeed, the attitude seems to be: if deficits are back, let's make the most of them and blame someone else for the result.

They go on to say:

> The bottom line—obscured but not altered by the events of 2001—is that our nation's greatest fiscal challenge remains the need to finance the huge unfunded retirement benefits and health care costs of a permanently older population.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that this release be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Concord Coalition, June 2002]

THE CONCORD COALITION'S REPORT ON FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

DEFICITS ARE BACK, AND THE BUDGET BAZAAR IS OPEN FOR BUSINESS

It is now clear that the appropriate loosening of fiscal policy undertaken in response to the mild recession and devastating terrorist attacks of 2001 is turning into a headlong retreat from long-term fiscal responsibility. Crocodile tears are flowing over the return of budget deficits—now likely to exceed $100 billion this year and next. Nearly everyone says they want the dip back into red ink to be brief. But almost no one is willing to give up anything to ensure that result. Indeed, the attitude seems to be: if deficits are back, let's make the most of them and blame someone else for the result.

Tax cut advocates, defense hawks, farmers, educators, health care providers and beneficiaries, transportation planners, and veterans groups all insist that deficits are no reason to scale back their claims on a surplus that no longer exists. Each interest group has a grassroots constituency and an army of lobbyists. And each is prepared to threaten political retribution if every dime of its wish list is not funded. This may be an attractive short-term political strategy, but it's a terrible long-term fiscal policy.

The bottom line—obscured but not altered by the events of 2001—is that our nation's greatest fiscal challenge remains the need to finance the huge unfunded retirement benefits and health care costs of a permanently older population. The Baby Boomers' retirement costs will begin to impact the budget in just six years, and there is no plan for dealing with them other than to run up the debt. Surpluses would help by either reducing the debt, which provides needed savings and fiscal flexibility, or by providing resources to help pay the transition costs of Social Security and Medicare reform. Deficits can be acceptable as a short-term fiscal stimulus, but returning to chronic deficit spending would make the long-term challenge far more difficult.

Washington policymakers should focus on regaining budget surpluses as soon as is practicable. Instead, the recent breakdown in fiscal discipline, the refusal to acknowledge many likely expenses, and the wavering commitment to any particular goal—be it a unified balanced budget or balance excluding Social Security—signal that a prolonged period of deficits far in excess of official projections is probable. The question now being tested is whether the political will exist to reverse this trend. The preliminary answer is a decided: no.

THE FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY REPORT CARE

The Concord Coalition has graded Washington's performance on fiscal policy in three key time frames: the short-term (next 1–2 years), the medium-term (next 10 years), and the long-term (beyond the next 10 years). Each category is graded on a scale of A to F, with A signifying great improvement, and F signifying great harm. There is a necessary overlap in the consequences of policy decisions throughout the time frames.

Category and Grade

Overall: Progress toward fiscal responsibility: D.

Short-Term: Enacting measures that maintain fiscal responsibility over the next 1–2 years: C−.

Medium-Term: Enacting measures that are fiscally responsible over the next 10 years: D.

Long-Term: Enacting measures that deal with the entitlement financing gap and ensure fiscal sustainability: D−.

SHORT-TERM GRADE: C−

For reasons largely beyond the control of policymakers, the short-term outlook has gone from projected surpluses in excess of $300 billion to probable deficits in excess of $100 billion. (See table on Page 4.) Fiscal policy decisions in the current environment are more difficult than usual because actions to stimulate the economy and beef-up security, while legitimate in the short-term, create the risk of higher deficits in the long-term.

Given the circumstances, the test of fiscal responsibility is not whether the budget falls into deficit for a year or two but whether actions that subtract from the bottom line are carefully designed to meet legitimate immediate needs while minimizing costs in later years.

Even using this lenient standard, policymakers rate a polite C minus for the short-term. The "economic stimulus" bill enacted in March came to the rescue of an economy that was already recovering on its own. And even if a stimulus was justified as insurance, there was no need to extend the bill's costly accelerated depreciation provision for three years—well beyond any immediate need. Moreover, the assumption that the depreciation break will be allowed to "sunset" in September of 2004—two months before Election Day—is absurd. This provision will likely become a permanent new tax break at a cost of around $200 billion over the next decade.

As for spending, President Bush acknowledged in his Budget Message that the government "will have new bills to pay." Paying these bills is not fiscally irresponsible. What is fiscally irresponsible is refusing to make trade-offs or using the current crisis atmosphere as a smoke screen for a generalized spending spree. Particularly susceptible to unscrutinized growth are the defense budget and the new loosely defined category of homeland security. Unfortunately, the President's budget proposed very few trade-offs and Congress has shown no inclination to accept any of them.

The appropriations process is just getting started so it cannot be said that the short-term situation has turned into a fiscal rout. But the signs are not promising. Congress has failed to adopt a budget resolution, failed to agree on FY 2002 supplemental spending, failed to extend expiring budget enforcement mechanisms, and failed to deal with the statutory debt limit in a timely or straightforward manner. Finally, the specter of "rosy scenario" is back, with the Administration (OMB) and the House using baseline projections that are more optimistic than CBO numbers by $35 billion in 2003 and $180 billion over the next five years. If these issues are not resolved quickly the result could be a huge year-end omnibus appropriations bill—in other words, fiscal chaos.

MEDIUM-TERM GRADE: D

More harmful than the return of budget deficits in the short-term is the fact that President Bush and Congress have done very little to prevent deficits from extending well into the decade. The rapid disappearance of the projected $3.1 trillion 10-year non-Social Security surplus should be a yellow light of caution for policymakers advocating further tax cuts and new entitlements. But their response has been to step on the gas. The Concord Coalition gives Washington policymakers a medium-term grade of D.

The new farm bill, if graded alone, would surely warrant an F. The bill increases spending by $86 billion over 10 years and reverses the attempt under the 1996 Freedom to Farm Act to get away from Depression-era farm subsidies that distort markets, burden taxpayers, and harm the environment. Instead, subsidies are extended for major crops while new ones are created. The farm bill is a textbook case of an entitlement that survives because it is politically attractive, not because it is good policy.

Much more expensive than the farm bill are various proposals to add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare and delay or cancel scheduled reductions in provider payments. Last year, Congress set aside $314 billion in a reserve fund for Medicare expansion. This year, despite a drop of nearly $4 trillion in projected surpluses, the House budget resolution and the Senate Budget Committee plan (not yet considered on the floor) increase Medicare set asides to $350 billion and $500 billion respectively.

Adding a prescription drug benefit to Medicare, without comprehensive cost-saving reform, would not only pressure the budget in the medium-term but would make the program's long-term funding gap even wider. None of the respective plans conditions new money on such reform. Moreover, other entitlement expansions have been proposed. Overall, the Senate Budget Committee plan allows for an increase in entitlement spending of nearly $670 billion.

The series of escalating tax cuts enacted last year is also poised to drain the budget over the medium-term by $1.6 trillion. The phased-in nature of these tax cuts, and the "sunset" provision that cancels them all in 2010, give policymakers a valuable opportunity to reprioritize in view of new circumstances by permanently extending some of the tax cuts and delaying the effect of others until a non-Social Security surplus is achieved again. Unfortunately, the Administration and the House leadership have been pushing to lock in the entire package of tax cuts at a cost of nearly $400 billion over 10 years. They have also proposed new tax cuts even as they call for higher spending on defense, homeland security, and Medicare. It is a recipe for sustained deficits.

Such imprudence is compounded by attempts to obscure the full budgetary effects of fiscal decisions. This year saw the return to five-year budget plans by the Administration and the House. By itself, this development is not problematic. However, last year's tax plan was based on highly uncertain 10-year projections, and its huge costs come at the end of the 10 years. The shift now to a shorter budget window seems designed mainly to disguise those costs.

Finally, the medium-term outlook is threatened by the absence of any mechanism, procedural or rhetorical, for defining and enforcing a fiscal policy goal. Both parties' pronouncements about the inviolability of the Social Security surplus are long forgotten. While the respective budget plans of the Administration, House, and Senate Budget Committee all contemplate the return of surpluses no later than 2005, none of them would produce a non-Social Security surplus before 2012. Meanwhile, the discretionary spending caps and the PAYGO rules of the 1997 Balanced Budget Act expire this year. Without any markers for discipline, politicians have little incentive to scale back budget busting promises. Instead, they have shown a troubling comfort with using the Social Security surplus to either offset tax cuts or expand other government programs—new entitlements have even popped up in the trade and defense authorization bills.

LONG-TERM GRADE: D−

Rampant denial is the best way to describe Washington's response to the long-term fiscal challenge. While much has changed in the past year, two things remain depressingly consistent—the unsustainable path of long-term fiscal policy and the unwillingness of most political leaders to do anything about it. Concord's grade for the long-term is a D minus.

While President Bush campaigned on the need for Social Security reform, he has not followed through with a specific proposal. At his request, the commission he appointed last year did not produce a recommendation but instead came back with three illustrative models for adding personal accounts to the system. Two of the plans contained explicit provisions to improve the fiscal sustainability of the program, which personal accounts alone do not. Even though these provisions were designed to avoid any impact on current beneficiaries, political leaders of both parties reacted with horror, and the Administration has kept the commission's report firmly planted on the shelf.

Social Security has been reactivated as the third rail of American politics—touch it and die. Without any plan of their own, many Democrats have restored to scare tactics by accusing Republicans of having a "secret plan to privatize Social Security." For their part, many Republicans implausibly insist that personal accounts can be added to the current system without costing anyone anything.

Neither party is discussing the tough choices that are needed to make the program sustainable over the long-term. Instead, they are jockeying for short-term political advantage by offering free lunch solutions that rely on such diversions as an imaginary "lockbox" or meaningless benefit guarantee certificates. Regardless of the long-term challenge, the House even voted 418–0 for a small benefit expansion.

The demographic and fiscal challenges go well beyond Social Security. Medicare poses an even more difficult challenge. Together, Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid are expected to double as a share of the economy by 2030.

It will take a combination of fiscal discipline and cost saving reform to put Social Security and Medicare on a sustainable path for all generations. Washington policymakers are not pursuing either strategy. They are pursuing The Do Nothing Plan, which ultimately leads to crushing debt, burdensome taxes or broken promises.

OVERALL GRADE: D

Good policy and political expediency are often at odds, but so far in 2002, politics is trouncing policy. Surpluses "as far as the eye can see" have vanished, yet policymakers remain intent on delivering more government spending—including entitlement expansions—and more tax cuts. With the midterm elections looming, no particular fiscal goal in place, and no procedural mechanisms to rein in spending, Congress is reverting to its old "spend and borrow" habit. Worse, the debate on how to finance the unfunded retirement costs of the coming demographic transformation has dramatically degenerated from an already low level.

Congress and the Administration can still re-establish fiscal discipline this year. But they cannot do so unless they confront the hard choices. Deficits are back and it is time to close the budget bazaar.

Mr. McCAIN. This amendment by Senator GREGG and Senator FEINGOLD is an effort to at least pose some kind of fiscal brakes, caps, that have worked fairly well in the past—not perfectly. But I also worry that without the enactment of this amendment, we may find ourselves continuing this hemorrhaging of spending, which is really quite almost unprecedented in the time that I have had in Congress.

In the name of the war on terrorism, we are now endangering the financial future of this Nation, and every spending issue seems to be somehow related to the war on terrorism. And clearly it is not.

I congratulate the sponsors of this amendment. I look forward to voting for it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Arizona. I am delighted to have his support on this important amendment.

Madam President, I yield 4 minutes of my time to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. VOINOVICH, who is a cosponsor of the amendment as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

I realize that some of my colleagues will say that this is not the right time or place to consider budget process reforms. I strongly disagree. In fact, I wonder if my colleagues realize how bad the budget situation has become.

According to the most recent calculations from the Senate Budget Committee, the budget outlook has swung dramatically in the past year. Last year, CBO predicted a $313 billion surplus for fiscal year 2002. Now, instead of a surplus, we face a tremendous deficit. We will borrow and spend the entire $163 billion Social Security surplus and on top of that we are going to have to borrow an additional $137 billion from the private markets. To sum it up, we are going to borrow $300 billion in the 2002 budget.

This is new debt, on top of the staggering $6 trillion debt we already owe. The budget outlook for fiscal year 2003 is just as bad. The way things look now, we will borrow and spend the entire $179 billion Social Security surplus projected for next year. And on top of that we will have to borrow at least another $100 billion to fund the Government next year.

Some people might think a surge in economic growth is going to bail us out of our budget problems. It won't. These skyrocketing deficit figures are based on CBO's assumption that the economy will grow by 5.4 percent next year. If that does not happen, the 2003 budget deficit is even going to be worse. My point is: these deficits will not go away on their own. We must prioritize. We must make hard choices. Unfortunately, our record on making hard choices is not encouraging. Just look at the farm bill. It speaks volumes about the lack of fiscal discipline in this body. We need to put our foot down and recognize the obvious. In order to be fiscally responsible we have to live within our means and we must rein in spending.

That is why I am cosponsoring this amendment. The amendment won't solve all our budget problems. As everyone in this Chamber knows, we regularly circumvent budget rules, and I have no doubt that we will push in some instances to do the same thing this time. Nonetheless, we need to do something. This amendment marks an important first step to regain control. I am working with my friend from Wisconsin and other Senators on other legislation to improve the budget process. And we hope to introduce that legislation soon. But in the meantime, this amendment would help keep the national debt in check. We cannot wait. We have to act now. We have a moral obligation to our children and grandchildren. Remember, at the end of the day, it is their future we are mortgaging away.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this very important amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, momentarily I am going to yield time to my colleague on the Senate Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI. Before I do that, I want to respond quickly to something the Senator from Arizona said.

I am in agreement with virtually everything the Senator from Arizona said. I am going to be offering the budget disciplines that are expiring at the end of September after this amendment. I think it is absolutely critical, as the Senator from Arizona indicated, that we continue those budget disciplines. It would be a profound mistake in this country to let those lapse.

But I say to my colleagues, the amendment being offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, the Senator from Wisconsin, and others, I believe, has enormous loopholes in it, such that would actually make our circumstance worse rather than make them better.

Madam President, I hope my colleagues are listening. Under the current pay-go law, if mandatory spending or tax cuts would increase the deficit, it triggers a sequester at the end of the year. Under this amendment, it would allow projected surpluses—hear me; projected surpluses—to be used to pay for additional spending and more tax cuts, without triggering a sequester.

Are colleagues listening? They are talking about fiscal discipline, and they are backing an amendment that would impose fiscal discipline based on projections? We tried that before. It did not work because what we got were gimmicks and rosy projections.

My colleagues are well intended. I am absolutely on their side with respect to the fundamental question of fiscal discipline. But this amendment, I believe, opens a major loophole because it is based on projections rather than real results.

How much time does the Senator from New Mexico want?

Mr. DOMENICI. Is the Senator short on time?

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. CONRAD. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico, and then I would be happy to engage the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I hope I do not use that much time.

In the end, after I am through analyzing it, I am not going to vote with the proponents. I am going to vote against the waiver that is before us and return us to the position we were in before this amendment, if it had passed.

First, I want to, nonetheless, congratulate Senator GREGG and Senator FEINGOLD on their amendment. I think I understand why they have offered this amendment on this supplemental bill.

The amendment was offered in the Senate Budget Committee back in March, and it failed by a tie vote. But it probably would not have mattered if it had been added to the Senate Budget Committee reported resolution because, of course, the Senate has not yet considered a budget resolution, and it certainly has not considered that one.

This brings us to my second point. The failure to adopt in the Senate a budget resolution, let alone a conference on a budget with the House, has put the Congress in a unique position of not having a budget for the first time in 27 years. The one time we did not achieve a conference agreement between the House and Senate, in 1998, we nevertheless did add a so-called deeming resolution in the Senate so that the process could proceed based on a Senate-passed budget resolution in that year. We are now seeing the problems of not having any blueprint. Whether it is good or medium or not so good, we are not going to have any blueprint, and I fear as we proceed through the summer and the fall that the problems will only increase, not decrease.

I don't think I am overstating it when I say the budget process in Congress is hanging by a thread. There are some here who might say "good riddance," but with no budget resolution, no spending limits, no way to set priorities, not even some indication that we are interested in fiscal discipline, those who would do away with the budget process will live to regret the direction in which we seem to be headed and what it will yield.

That is why, absent a good and agreed-upon budget for next year, particularly as it relates to the level of appropriations I have been pressing for, at a minimum, a fiscal year 2003 spending cap, extension of expiring Budget Act enforcement provisions, including certain points of order, and other provisions that will maintain some discipline throughout the year, that is the way of supporting a major portion of the amendment you plan to offer if this one does not pass. That does not mean I approve of all of them, but they are among the provisions I think we must have if we are going to have any kind of enforcement.

I have been working with the chairman of the Budget Committee, the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, and our leadership to develop an amendment that would provide for this needed discipline. At this time, it is unclear that we will be able to offer this amendment or if it would have the 60 votes needed to waive the Budget Act in order that it be raised because it, too, would require a hearing before the Budget Committee and a report to escape the 60-vote requirement.

This brings me to the Gregg-Feingold amendment. Absent an alternative, I support their amendment in order to lay down a marker to establish some discipline absent a budget resolution in place. But at this time I cannot support a waiver of the Budget Act.

There are parts of their amendment with which I disagree. I am not sure we need 5-year spending caps if we are not going to have a budget resolution. I don't agree with the procedure that is being recommended in the amendment to remove provisions from an appropriations bill in a rifleshot manner. But, in general, except for the 5-year spending caps and the individual appropriations procedures, their proposal captures the major provisions of extending the pay-go provisions and the Budget Act points of order that expire this year.

Again, I prefer to continue to work on an alternative 1-year cap proposal, and that is why I will not vote in favor of the Budget Act waiver that is required for this amendment. But if an alternative is not found, then the problems and the chaos I portend for this summer are certain to prevail in this Chamber. Maybe we still have a little time to correct it before it ends up as what I have just predicted.

I thank those who have spent a lot of time trying to figure out what to do. It is difficult. In conclusion, the reason I will not vote for this is that there is $36.8 billion more in spending than the President's total appropriations, $26 billion less in Defense appropriations, and $63 billion more in other mandatory spending.

I yield the floor and thank the Senator for graciously yielding me 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee. I agree with every word he said. We have a budget process that is hanging by a thread. That is exactly right. We desperately need to put in place the budget disciplines that can allow us to keep the spending from spinning out of control as we go into the budget process.

The amendment by the Senators from Wisconsin and New Hampshire, which is completely well intended, will not accomplish the result they seek. I believe that is the case because it is dependent upon OMB projections of surpluses. We tried that. It didn't work. Why didn't it work? Because what occurred was a rosy scenario.

I put up the chart for 1990. They said the deficit was right on target. It was going to be reduced to $100 billion. It wasn't reduced to $100 billion. It was $221 billion. Let's not have a massive loophole like that put back into the budget law of the Congress.

I yield the floor and retain the remainder of my time.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, the amendment before us, the Gregg-Feingold-Chafee-Kerry Budget Enforcement Act of 2002, is critical to restoring a sense of fiscal responsibility to the congressional budget process. I urge my colleagues to support it.

The amendment reinstates and extends for 5 years the caps on discretionary spending, keyed to the levels in the Senate Budget Committee-passed budget resolution. The caps are scheduled to expire at the end of fiscal year

2002. The amendment also reinstates and extends for 5 years the pay-as-you-go rules for tax cuts and entitlement changes. The pay-as-you-go rule would apply to legislation which increases the non-Social Security budget deficit. The rule would not apply when the budget is running a surplus outside of Social Security. Sixty-vote points of order and the threat of sequestration would continue to provide enforcement for both the discretionary caps and pay-as-you-go violations.

To guard against budget evasions, the amendment would shut back-door ways around the caps and pay-as-you-go enforcement by requiring 60 votes to change the discretionary caps, alter the balances of the pay-as-you-go scorecard, or direct scorekeeping. All emergency designations would require 60 votes.

I was one of the first cosponsors of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction legislation in the late 1980s. I understand the importance of fiscal responsibility and budget discipline. The discretionary caps and PAYGO rules have helped impose a sense of fiscal discipline since they were first enacted in 1990. Budget enforcement mechanisms played a key role in stemming the tide of runaway deficit spending. As individuals such as Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and former Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin have recognized, the benefits of spending and fiscal restraint are enormous. The remarkable turn-around in the Federal budget during the 1990s contributed to a virtuous cycle of lower inflation, lower interest rates, and higher economic growth.

Unfortunately, the budget enforcement mechanisms are scheduled to expire this year. As the Concord Coalition has noted, it would be particularly ironic and careless to let the caps and PAYGO rules expire just when the budget is plunging back into deficit. Our bipartisan amendment would prevent that from happening. It will also encourage a discussion of the tough choices that must be made, regardless of procedural mechanisms, to restore fiscal responsibility.

As quickly as surpluses appeared, they have disappeared. We must not allow ourselves to return to the previous days of cutting taxes, increasing spending, consuming the Social Security surplus, and running up debt. Beginning in 10 years when the Baby Boomers retire, Congress will face huge unfunded retirement and health care costs. Congress and the President lack a strategy for dealing with these liabilities or for returning to budget balance. Our amendment represents a crucial step for reversing a rapidly deteriorating budget outlook. Formal budgetary restraints are needed to balance the competing claims on the Federal budget.

Some opponents express concern that the amendment would place overly restrictive limitations on appropriations. Others outright suggest that the legislation will result in domestic appropriations cuts. In reality, the legislation fully funds the appropriations levels requested in the Senate Budget Committee-passed budget resolution. The amendment exceeds the spending levels requested by the President, allows for more spending on education, health care and other priorities. For fiscal year 2003, the bill would allow $768 billion in discretionary spending. This is a figure commonly cited in current budget negotiations, and considerably higher than the House budget level of $759 billion. If this should prove insufficient, Congress can either raise the caps or declare the spending as emergency spending to avoid enforcement consequences.

Finally, some opponents criticize the amendment's pay-as-you-go entitlements/tax rule because it allows spending or tax cuts when the government is running a surplus outside of Social Security. This exception is important because it will facilitate the funding of national priorities when the Federal Government is not facing major budgetary deficits. In addition, it allows for a more flexible response to the budget situation. It recognizes that the will for strict pay-as-you-go enforcement may not exist when government is running a substantial surplus.

Overall, the Gregg-Feingold-Chafee-Kerry Budget Enforcement Act of 2002 is an important safeguard against runaway deficit spending. It will provide an important super-majority obstacle against fiscally irresponsible tax cuts. It is flexible enough to allow spending on critical national investments regardless of the budget situation, provided there is sufficient support. Perhaps most importantly, it will force a national dialogue on priorities and reestablish deficit reduction as a strategic goal. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I cannot support the Gregg amendment regarding caps on annual appropriations and modifying the so-called "pay-as-you-go" provisions controlling entitlement spending and the costs of tax cut legislation. The Gregg amendment, while well-intentioned, bases budget enforcement mechanisms on unreliable budget projections by the Office of Management and Budget. If there were an OMB projection upon which tax cuts were based, and then the projections proved overly optimistic as is often the case, Medicare and other critically important program cuts would be automatically triggered to pay for those tax cuts.

I will support an alternative budget enforcement mechanism amendment which will be offered by Senator CONRAD, the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee which will extend rules controlling annual appropriations, entitlement spending, and the costs of tax cuts. The Conrad amendment would extend procedures which proved successful since their adoption in 1990 in eliminating deficits.

Mr. KYL. Madam President, I rise to offer support for the Gregg/Feingold amendment and urge my colleagues to vote in favor of that amendment. Fundamentally, the amendment would make two changes. First, it would extend discretionary spending caps for five years, and second, it would make legislation that fails to pay for itself with appropriate offsets subject to points of order and mandatory enforcement mechanisms.

Although I appreciate the assurances that an alternative scheme for budget enforcement will be offered if this amendment is defeated, I remain concerned that the vote on this amendment will provide the only opportunity to ensure real fiscal discipline after the current protections expire later this year.

The spending levels provided for in this amendment are more than generous. In fact, I would prefer to see the caps keyed to the spending levels in the President's budget, rather than to those set forth in the budget resolution reported by the Senate Budget Committee in March. But that is not the choice before us. The choice before us is whether there will be any limits at all on spending and whether there will be any enforcement mechanisms to restrain spending.

If we head into this year's appropriations process without any such tools, we will set the stage for a monumental dereliction of duty. The sky will be the limit in terms of spending. Any notion of priorities in wartime will be cast aside. All of the rhetoric about ensuring that Social Security Trust Fund surplus revenues be held sacrosanct will be rendered hollow. This amendment provides a means, however imperfect, of keeping us focused on trade-offs and priorities. Accordingly, I urge the waiver of the Budget Act and the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. What is the present status of the time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire controls 4 minutes; the Senator from Wisconsin, 6 minutes; the Senator from North Dakota, 8½ minutes.

Mr. GREGG. Madam President, let me respond quickly to the comments made relative to the technical aspects of the amendment. First, I am impressed that it has received such adulation but so little support. The Senator from New Mexico, whom I immensely respect, said it is a wonderful idea except for a couple little points but he thinks it might be a good marker. The Senator from North Dakota appears to be saying essentially the same thing with a little more intensity. I am glad we have put something out here that appears to be pretty close to what we need.

Why do we need it? We need it because without any budget disciplines in place, we will be in serious trouble as we move down the road, as was highlighted by a number of speakers. We need to have something in place that we can look to at least to give us some guidance, some signposts.

On the issue of pay-go, obviously you don't need pay-go if you are in surplus. It makes no sense to have pay-go if you are in surplus. In fact, we have shown that every time we have been in surplus, with the last appropriations bill coming out across the floor, we have basically put a hold on or stopped the application of pay-go.

This bill makes it very clear. The language says:

> There shall be no sequestration under this section for any fiscal year in which a surplus exists.

It is very specific. There must be a surplus in order for pay-go to be withdrawn. But if there is not a surplus, clearly pay-go exists, and it is available.

How do you find out if there is a surplus? You have to have scorekeeping, and that is the way we work around here. We have scorekeeping for lots of spending.

Rosy scenarios, I seriously doubt it. In fact, I suspect just the opposite is going to be the case for the next few years. That is a bit of a straw dog. Nobody is projecting any surpluses. I point to the chart of the Senator from North Dakota. He is not projecting any surpluses out there. Nobody else is for the foreseeable future. It is important we have pay-go in place during this period of that red ink.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I would like to respond to some of the arguments of the chairman of the Budget Committee as well.

The chairman argues that what Senator GREGG and I are proposing is new and radical. In large part what we are doing is merely extending the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990. Let me tell my colleagues what would be radical: If we go through this process without any budget rules at all. Based on my 10 years here, that would be radical and dangerous and harmful to Social Security and to the future of our budget. As far as I am concerned, we are on the precipice of going back to the bad old 1980s in terms of the budget process. This is a good-faith, bipartisan effort to try to keep some rules in place.

The chairman speaks, fairly, of course, with great knowledge about the new deficits and the new problems we face, especially in the last couple of years, especially since 9–11.

Let me remind everyone that we used the chairman's numbers, not pre-9–11 numbers, but his post-9–11 numbers, with regard to his 5-year scenario. That is what this is based on. It is based on our knowledge about the tragedy and difficulties that occurred.

I find it hard to understand when the chairman argues for flexibility that somehow Senator GREGG and I don't recognize the need for flexibility. He, too, apparently, if we don't prevail, intends to offer caps. He intends to offer limits. The fact is that the chairman acknowledges that even in difficult times such as these, there have to be rules and there have to be limits.

There is nothing irresponsible about proposing limits even in difficult times, such as a war against terrorism. In fact, I argue that the worst that can happen, at a time when we are fighting terrorism and other crises in the world, is to have no rules at all. Then it is more likely that legislation such as the farm bill will pass with unlimited amounts of inappropriate action and provisions. Some of the provisions in the energy bill and some in this bill are more likely to happen with no rules at all.

For the sake of our national security, for the sake of the fiscal integrity of our country, at this time it is more important than at any other time that we have some rules and procedures so the American public can know we are wisely using their tax dollars to proceed with this war against terrorism, and to protect them, and that we are not using it for pork projects at home.

The chairman complains that our amendment would not have budget enforcement at times when we are running a surplus without counting Social Security. Yet his idea guarantees us no discipline at all. I wish him well if we end up going with his amendment and considering that, but, obviously, I hope ours prevails. There is no guarantee. Defeating this amendment would leave us with no enforcement at all if these current rules expired in September, as they are expected to do. He says we only have constraints on spending. We followed the same constraints on taxes as they exist in current law. Taxes and entitlements are constrained in our amendment, as well as by the pay-as-you-go procedure.

He also seeks to argue that somehow we are doing something different or something radically inappropriate with regard to the OMB. The amendment gives the OMB the job of calculating whether we have complied with the caps or the pay-as-you-go discipline. But this is exactly as it has been since 1987. Nothing is new about this provision.

When Congress first enacted the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill in 1985, it gave the job of calculating compliance to the Comptroller General, head of the General Accounting Office. But the Supreme Court ruled, in 1986 in the case of Bowsher v. Synar, that Congress could not constitutionally give that power to anybody outside of the executive branch of Government. That is why we do it. That is why Congress gave the job of calculating compliance to the OMB in the rewriting of the budget laws and continued that process in the 1990 Budget Enforcement Act. This argument doesn't hold water. Our amendment merely continues the same rule for the OMB.

As to the chairman's argument that we erred by not requiring pay-as-you-go enforcement in times of budget surplus, we disagree as a matter of policy. We believe that when the Government is taking in more tax revenues than it needs to fund existing programs, even after putting all Social Security surpluses aside, then it is altogether appropriate for Congress to consider fiscal choices, such as updating Medicare to include a prescription drug benefit. Do we want a 60-vote requirement in times of surplus to provide the American people with a prescription drug benefit? I hope not. If you are listening to your constituents, they desperately need this. So that doesn't seem to be appropriate.

Finally, I think this is a critical test on this vote. Are we serious about protecting Social Security, even in these difficult times? Are we going to go forward with no rules and continue down the road we are heading in—the road of a $100 billion deficit already? Especially after 9–11, the American people have a right to know that we are being especially careful with their dollars, that we can track it, and that they can follow the caps and the rules and enforcement procedures to see if we are doing their bidding and if we are truly putting our priorities straight—with the war on terrorism at the top, but also guaranteeing the safety and security of Social Security, which is very dear to them.

I yield my time.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, let me respond to the Senator from Wisconsin. The alternative is not their proposal versus no rules. That is not the alternative. I will offer an amendment that will extend the supermajority enforcement of budget points of order that extends the Budget Enforcement Act provisions—all of them—and that restores the Senate pay-go rules—in fact, toughens them. That is the alternative: serious budget discipline versus the proposal before us by Senators who are absolutely well intentioned. They have the diagnosis right, which is that we have deficit and debt problems, but their solution takes us back to a provision that did not work in the past and will not work in the future.

Have we forgotten 1990? When you base budget discipline and enforcement on projections, you are basing your discipline on quicksand. What could be more evident? In 1990, the Office of Management and Budget told us we were meeting our deficit projections, that the deficit was only going to be $100 billion. It turned out to be $221 billion because the whole budget discipline process was based on projections.

That is what this budget proposal does. It won't work. It didn't work then; it won't work now. It is absolutely misleading and will take us down a road not to budget deficits, through budget deficit elimination, not to reduce debt, but to more gimmicks, more game playing, more rosy scenarios.

After this amendment I will offer an amendment that has real budget discipline.

I retain the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREGG. Madam President, what is the status on the time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has 2 minutes. The Senator from North Dakota has 6 minutes.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator allow us to close since it is our amendment? I will yield our last 2 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator has used his time, and I am going to use mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GREGG. I yield to the Senator from Washington 1 minute 45 seconds.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise today in support of the Gregg-Feingold amendment. The premise underlying this amendment—and its extension of the budget enforcement procedures—is that we as a body must be fiscally responsible.

We have real responsibilities and real priorities on which we have to make decisions, but we also must have fiscal discipline. In order to accomplish this it is important for us to have a framework by which this body can make these fiscal decisions.

This amendment helps us at a time when we have seen a surplus of $5.6 trillion over ten years disappear and turn into a $2.7 trillion deficit. And we know that the current deficit is a result of last year's tax cut, the recession, and the tragic events of September 11, 2001.

Having spent time in the private sector, I can tell you this: No private sector organization thinks it can spend its way out of problems; nor can we as a country.

I believe one of the most important actions we can take for the nation's future economic stability, is to pay down the national debt. According to Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Alan Greenspan, paying down the national debt lowers interest rates and keeps the capital markets and investment going. In January, he told the Senate Budget Committee that one of the reasons long-term rates have not come down is the sharp decrease in the surplus and the diminishing prospects for paying down the debt.

Our total budget must be crafted within the need to maintain fiscal discipline, and stimulate economic growth through continued federal investment in education and job training, while also protecting the environment. Furthermore, we need to invest in our nation's economic future by making a commitment to public research and development in science and technology—maintaining our status as a global leader.

It is a balance. We need to make these investments, but within a framework that ensures we don't spend beyond our means. If we want our economy to be strong, if we want revenues, and if we want to make the right decisions, we need to keep paying down the debt.

We must have fiscal discipline in budget and appropriations process. We cannot focus solely on the individual items and programs in our budget, but must look at the whole picture. The budget enforcement procedures help us do this, and help us keep a reign on our spending. These procedures worked successfully as we struggled to get out of deficit spending in the 1990s, and they will work as we struggle to get out of the current recession and deficit financing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used her time.

Who yields time? The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I hope people are listening and paying very close attention. There is a lot at stake in the series of votes that are going to occur. The Senators have made the case that we are back in an era of budget deficits. I say to them, I warned our colleagues that is where we were headed. I did not do it this year. I did it last year. And I begged our colleagues not to go down the road that was taken. I warned them that we would be back to raiding Social Security, Medicare, and every other trust fund in sight, but they cast all caution aside and went down that road.

Today there is a fundamental question of whether or not we are going to have budget disciplines in place as we go through this year's appropriations process. I will offer an amendment that extends those budget disciplines. Every colleague is going to have a chance to be recorded as to whether or not they want budget discipline.

The amendment before us has very serious defects. It is not the budget disciplines that worked in the nineties that helped us get back on track. It is not those. It is a new scheme, and it is a scheme that has an enormous loophole. The loophole is that discipline is based on projections of what is going to happen.

Have we learned nothing? Last year, we were told there was going to be $5.6 trillion available in surplus over the next decade. That was a projection. Do you know what it is now? Nothing. Zero. The money is all gone. Let's not base budget discipline on projections.

Does the Senator from New Mexico seek time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, I would like 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 50 seconds.

Mr. CONRAD. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I thank the Senator. I failed to call him chairman. He has been chairman for 6 more months. In any event, we wish the Senator well next year in whatever capacity.

I wish to discuss not so much the amendment because I have explained why I do not think we should waive the Budget Act. We have to do better in trying to put discipline into what is currently a totally undisciplined situation with reference to goals and priorities.

Appropriations will have no responsibilities on the various bills. There will be no total dollar number that flows. This amendment will not help that.

I close my few remarks talking about, once again, the mistake we are making—and we are making it for whatever reason—in not passing a budget resolution. I am not filled with acrimony, but I do believe that in the over 27 years of serving, I felt a responsibility to get a budget, and actually we could have gotten a corner after an extremely tough year 3 years ago and said: Let's not do it. The Senator from New Hampshire could have been with me trying to keep discipline in this process. We could have said: Let's not do a budget resolution. It did some good. Some people are saying it did not.

I would personally look at the area of entitlements and how many had caps which precluded passage of more than we spent. It is the same on appropriations. Obviously, there is friction against those two institutions, but we did some good.

We happened to budget based upon an extremely powerful American economy which was with us for 10 years, and we got clipped in the 11th and 12th year when the economy did not stay strong. That is all that happened.

If we could have kept the budget resolution, it would have forced it or would have done something better, and we would probably be right back to moving close to a balanced budget in the next 5 years. I am not sure we are going to get there without something like a budget resolution, something to shoot with each year.

That is why I am saying we ought to do better than the Gregg amendment. He is on the right track. Maybe we can include him and his cosponsor with a group of us trying to do a little bit better.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, would you alert us as to the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 50 seconds. The Senator from New Hampshire has 15 seconds.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, in conclusion, I agree absolutely with what motivates the sponsors of this amendment. We need budget disciplines. I will offer those as a package, all of the budget disciplines—every one; in fact, a strengthened pay-go provision—after we dispose of the amendment that is before us.

Madam President, I say to my colleagues, I believe the amendment before us has a giant loophole, unintended I am sure, but it is based on projections, not real results. We have seen what happens with that kind of budget approach.

I go back again to 1990 when we had a similar scheme in place based on projections from the Office of Management and Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, does the Senator from New Hampshire still have time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifteen seconds.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Wisconsin and my other cosponsors for offering this amendment. This amendment is going to be our best opportunity to put in place long-term, effective budget enforcement mechanisms. There are no significant loopholes in this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I raise a point of order that the pending amendment violates section 306 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. Madam President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive the applicable section of that act for the consideration of the pending Gregg-Feingold amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I wonder if Senators will permit me to speak for 30 seconds on another matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I am sending an amendment to the desk. If I can have the attention of Senator CONRAD, I am sending a copy of the amendment he is going to propose following the disposition of this amendment, if we defeat it, so Senators can look at it and we can get rid of some delays. They can study it during the next 30 minutes or so.

Mr. CONRAD. Is the Senator filing the amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am sending it to the desk so anybody who wants to may look at it. If the Senator has concerns, I will not do it.

Mr. CONRAD. I will be constrained to object because I am told Senator BYRD would object if he were here. But I am very hopeful we can accomplish that same purpose momentarily.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not want to argue, but I am not sending an amendment to be operative. I can put in a letter. If I want somebody to look at a proposed bill, why would anyone object?

Mr. CONRAD. No one will object to that.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am sure they cannot if they wanted to. It is not intended as anything other than for Senators to look at. If they are interested in how we might fix this situation, they might look at what is being recommended by the chairman.

I thank the chairman.

Mr. CONRAD. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) is necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 49, the nays are 49. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained, and the amendment falls.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3764

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. DASCHLE. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. MCCAIN. I object. I want the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] proposes an amendment numbered 3764.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . BUDGET ENFORCEMENT.

(a) EXTENSION OF BUDGET ENFORCEMENT POINTS OF ORDER.—Section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 note) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)(2)—

(A) by inserting "and" before "312(b)" and by striking ", and 312(c)"; and

(B) by striking "258C(a)(5)"; and

(2) in subsection (d)(3)—

(A) by inserting "and" before "312(b)" and by striking ", and 312(c)"; and

(B) by striking "258C(a)(5)"; and

(3) in subsection (e), by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

(b) Extension of Budget Enforcement Act Provisions.—

(1) In general.—Section 275(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900 note) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Expiration.—Sections 251 and 258B of this Act and sections 1105(f) and 1106(c) of title 31, United States Code, shall expire September 30, 2007. The remaining sections of part C of this title shall expire on September 30, 2011.".

(2) Striking expired provisions.—

(A) BBA.—The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900 et seq.) is amended by striking section 253.

(B) Congressional budget act.—The Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 et seq.) is amended—

(i) in section 312, by striking subsection (c); and

(ii) in section 314—

(I) in subsection (b), by striking paragraphs (2) through (5) and redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (2); and

(II) by striking subsection (e).

(c) Extension of Discretionary Caps.—Section 251(b)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(b)(2)) is amended

(1) in the matter before subparagraph (A), by striking "2002" and inserting "2007";

(2) by striking subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), and (F); and

(3) by redesignating subparagraph (G) as subparagraph (C).

(d) Extension of Pay-As-You-Go.—

(1) Enforcement.—Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by striking "2002" and inserting "2007"; and

(B) in subsection (b), by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

(2) Pay-as-you-go rule in the senate.—

(A) In general.—Section 207 of House Concurrent Resolution 68 (106th Congress) is amended in subsection (g), by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

(B) Senate pay-as-you-go adjustment.—For purposes of Senate enforcement of section 207 of House Concurrent Resolution 68 (106th Congress), upon the enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate shall adjust balances of direct spending and receipts for all fiscal years to zero.

(3) Pay-as-you-go enforcement during on-budget surplus.—If, prior to September 30, 2007, the Final Monthly Treasury Statement for any of fiscal years 2002 through 2006 reports an on-budget surplus, section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902) shall expire at the end of the subsequent fiscal year, and the President, in the next budget, shall submit to Congress a recommendation for pay-as-you-go enforcement procedures that the president believes are appropriate when there is an on-budget surplus.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, this amendment is to provide the fiscal discipline that I think we all seek, at least the framework for it.

This amendment extends the supermajority enforcement of budget points of order. It extends the Senate's 60-vote Budget Act points of order for 5 years. These points of order, including points of order that protect Social Security——

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield without losing the floor?

Mr. CONRAD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. REID. I would like to say—the Republican whip is on the floor and the Republican leader—when this amendment is completed, we will go back to the procedure we have always followed. If there appears to be no disagreement, we will have a Democratic amendment and Republican amendment and go back and forth.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator will yield, I appreciate that because there is some angst on our side. People thought we were in line to do an amendment. I appreciate your accommodation with the recognition, and we will have an amendment ready when we conclude this amendment.

Mr. REID. The last two amendments have been offered by both Democrats and Republicans, but this is offered by a Democrat, so we will go to a Republican. The leaders have agreed on that.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, when we debated the last amendment, the point was made, and the point was made correctly, that the various budget disciplines are going to expire on September 30 of this year. That could allow budget discipline to go right out the window.

What I am offering today is a continuation of the budget disciplines that have worked—the budget disciplines that allowed us to move from deficit to surplus. It is critically important that those budget disciplines be extended. I think there is strong support in this body for that proposition.

As I have indicated, these points of order, including points of order that protect Social Security, limit total spending and total tax cuts, enforce discretionary spending limits, and committee and subcommittee spending allocations are scheduled to expire on September 30.

The Senate has had Budget Act points of order that require 60 votes to waive since 1985. But unless action is taken starting October 1, it will only take 51 votes to waive most Budget Act points of order. Only 51 votes would be required to raid Social Security, or to exceed discretionary spending limits, or to increase total spending above agreed upon levels, or to cut taxes below agreed upon levels, or to exceed committee spending allocations.

Without the extension of these 60-vote points of order, it will become much more difficult to enforce budget discipline in the Senate. Senators who favor spending, or tax cuts, or exceed agreed upon budget limits would not be deterred by the need to convince 60 of their colleagues that the limits should not apply to their proposals.

In addition, the amendment I am offering extends Budget Enforcement Act provisions. The amendment extends for 5 years the Budget Enforcement Act procedures that limit discretionary spending and requires increases in mandatory spending or tax cuts to be offset. The discretionary spending limits are scheduled to expire on September 30 of this year. The pay-as-you-go procedures that control mandatory spending and tax cuts will cease to apply to newly enacted legislation after September 30, although pay-as-you-go sequestrations will continue to apply to legislation enacted before that date.

Under the amendment, the pay-as-you-go enforcement will expire earlier than scheduled if an actual non-Social Security surplus is reported before fiscal year 2007. Although it has not been evident for the past several years, the discretionary cap and pay-as-you-go enforcement actions of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 have proved to be very effective tools for budget enforcement.

Let us put up the chart that shows the long-term budget surplus standards we face.

Here is the long-term relationship between spending and revenues. This goes back to 1980. The red line is the spending of the Federal Government. The blue line is the revenue. We had this very significant gap between the two—spending exceeding revenue—back in the 1980s, and that led to a quadrupling of the national debt.

In 1993, we passed historic legislation that cut spending and raised revenue to eliminate this gap between spending and revenue—to eliminate deficits and to begin to allow us to pay down debt. We did that. The lines cross. Spending went below the revenue line. And in 1997 we passed additional legislation that led to budget surpluses. The revenue line was above the spending level.

That has all changed. Now we are back to deficits. After making all that progress, after moving out of deficits into surplus, after the fiscal mistakes of last year, the President proposed a massive tax cut with a major defense buildup and said we could have it all, said we could have all of the spending and all of the tax cuts, and that we would still have surpluses. He was wrong by a country mile. Instead of surpluses as far as the eye can see, we have deficits as far as the eye can see. The question is, Are we going to reinstitute the budget discipline to provide the framework for the appropriations process?

From the time the budget disciplines were enacted through 1998, they helped to control spending, limit tax cuts, and played an important role in the dramatic turnaround in our budget circumstance.

That is what this chart shows. We lifted this country out of deficits and put it in surplus. Then, unwisely, last year, a whole new fiscal policy was put in place. That policy has plunged us back into deficits as far as the eye can see. We are going to be facing red ink throughout the entire next decade.

Without these tools which expire on September 30, it is unlikely the budget would have gone from a record total deficit of $290 billion in 1992 to a surplus in 1998. After 1998, these enforcement tools fell victim to the unrealistic, low discretionary caps that were set in the 1997 Balanced Budget Act.

It is the reason I opposed the last amendment. It was going to repeat the mistakes of the past, put in unrealistic numbers in light of the attack on this country, and base budget enforcement on projections rather than real results.

These budget enforcement provisions are based on actual results, not projections, and don't leave us vulnerable to the office of Management and Budget going back to the rosy scenario days in which they told us there were surpluses even when that was highly unlikely.

We are back in deficit now and for the foreseeable future. We should extend and enforce the Budget Enforcement Act procedures, not let them expire and either give up on fiscal discipline or pretend there are some other procedures that might work better than these proven procedures.

In addition, my amendment extends the Senate pay-as-you-go rule. The amendment extends through 2007 the Senate pay-as-you-go point of order that prohibits surpluses from being used to pay for new mandatory spending or tax cuts.

Let me repeat that because I think it is critically important.

The pay-go provision will protect us from using Social Security money for other tax cuts or other spending. We must have this discipline put in place or else we risk losing control of the entire spending process.

I hope my colleagues will think very carefully about the circumstance we face. We have put in here the framework for budget caps. We have not put in the number for this year. We have negotiations going on right now to determine whether or not we can agree now on a number for this year. As you know, we are very close. After weeks of discussion, we were very close yesterday to agreeing on a number. Perhaps this can give us an opportunity to achieve an agreement. Even if we don't today reach agreement on what the budget numbers should be for this year, it is critically important that we put in place the budget enforcement framework. We cannot let that lapse. Even if we don't agree on a cap number for spending today, we can agree on the budget enforcement framework. We can then settle on a number if not today, sometime in the near future so that these disciplines have something to apply to.

It is critically important that this budget enforcement mechanism not be allowed to lapse. That would be a serious mistake given the fiscal condition of the country. Literally, for weeks we have engaged in good-faith negotiations with people on the other side of the aisle.

I thank Senator DOMENICI, the ranking member of the Budget Committee, and his staff. They have played a very constructive role in these discussions. That can be said of the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee as well. Senator BYRD, the chairman, and Senator STEVENS, the ranking member, have worked for many days to try to agree to a set of provisions that would allow us to provide a budget framework and to also provide for a continuation of these budget disciplines.

Unfortunately, those talks hit a bump in the road yesterday. We have a chance now to get back on track. We have an opportunity now to extend these budget discipline provisions. We have an opportunity now to agree on a budget limit, an appropriations limit for this year.

I do not know if we can agree on that in the next few hours, but perhaps we can. It would allow us, then, to go into the appropriations process with not only the budget disciplines intact but with an agreement on what total appropriations will be for this year. That would be a very positive development. We would then have a budget for the year, and we would have the budget disciplines so that we could, with greater confidence, ensure we stay within the limits agreed to.

At the very least, we ought to put in place those budget disciplines. We ought to put in place that framework. We ought to be ready for when the negotiations achieve a result and we are able to agree on a number. We can do that today, at a minimum. It would be even better if we could agree to an amount as well. But at the very least, let's send a signal that we are not going to have chaos in the budget process.

Senator DOMENICI, the distinguished ranking member, has served on the Budget Committee for a long time. He has been chairman and ranking member. He warned us: Look, we are in uncharted waters; this is dangerous ground; we should have a budget in place.

This is an opportunity to have a budget framework so that disciplines that are set to expire on September 30 continue. This is also an opportunity to agree on a budget amount.

I very much hope that people who are discussing this issue at this moment think very carefully about what is at stake. I hope they will think very carefully about what we need to consider.

If we allow these budget disciplines to lapse, and we go into the appropriations process without an agreed-upon budget amount, it does not take much imagination to think of what could occur. We could have spending spin out of control. I do not think anybody wants that to happen. Think of the implications. Think of the signal that would send to the financial markets of this country. Think of what that could mean to the economy of this country.

We have already seen that the equity markets are extremely vulnerable. We have already seen the stock market go down 200 points in a day. If the markets got the sense that we were not going to take serious action on the budget deficits that now confront the country, that could further destabilize equity markets and put us in an even more vulnerable position.

(Mr. CARPER assumed the chair.)

Mr. McCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONRAD. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Senator.

I don't often like to expose my ignorance of certain issues on the floor of the Senate, but I preface my question with the assumption that I am not an expert on the budget, as is the Senator from North Dakota. I don't know the nuances and the ins and outs of the budget process, nor have I ever quite understood the different categories and what falls in and what falls out of it.

Would the Senator explain to me, according to the amendment proposed by the Senator, from North Dakota, as I read it, there is no budget number associated with the Senator's amendment; is that correct?

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator is absolutely correct. We are awaiting additional discussions that are going on right now, that the Senator may be aware of, to see if we could reach agreement on that critical component. Obviously, that would be a very important part of this package.

I say to the Senator, there are really two parts to this. One is the budget number for this year. The other is the budget enforcement mechanisms. Both of them are necessary. Neither is sufficient. They are both necessary.

Even though we do not have yet an agreed-upon number, the reason I am offering this amendment is that at least we would then have the framework and discipline when a number is agreed to.

Mr. McCAIN. If the Senator will yield for a further question.

Mr. CONRAD. Yes.

Mr. McCAIN. I do not quite understand. Since there is no number, then enforcement would basically be meaningless because you do not have a number to enforce.

Why wouldn't we wait until we had an agreed-upon number and then present the amendment as such? Because it seems to me, if you pass this, it may do more damage than good, because then the conferees, who are appropriators, well known for their sense of fiscal discipline, would be the ones who would decide what the cap is.

My question to the Senator from North Dakota is, without an agreement on what the cap would be, we are now putting in rules that are basically unenforceable because there is nothing to enforce. Why wouldn't we wait and see if there was some agreement on the overall budget number instead of proposing that at this time? That is my question.

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator asks a very good question. There are really two pieces to this puzzle. We need a number for this year. We also need the budget disciplines reinstated because they expire on September 30. This may be one of our best opportunities, I say to the Senator, to reinstate those budget disciplines.

We may also have an opportunity to have the number agreed to today. That would be a full package. That would be a very desirable outcome, I say to the Senator. But at the very least, I think we want to get the budget disciplines put in place.

Let's say we do not agree. Let's say we are not able to reach agreement on a number for this year. Does that mean we have lost all opportunity? No. Because, I say to the Senator, then certain of the numbers that were in last year's budget resolution serve as a basis for the disciplines that we would now be extending. In other words, even if we did not reach agreement, at least we would have the structure of budget disciplines that could agree to certain spending levels that come from the budget resolution of last year.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Senator for his courtesy in allowing me to question him and for his responses. I am still not quite clear why we would pass an amendment without something to enforce. But I certainly appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from North Dakota, and again I applaud his knowledge of the intricacies of a very complicated process which I have been unable to master in the years I have been in Congress. I thank the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Let me say to the Senator, for example, even if we were not able to agree on a discretionary spending amount for this year, if we have these budget disciplines in place, they would apply to the mandatory numbers from last year's budget. As the Senator knows, we have two pots of money. We have mandatory spending, and we have discretionary spending.

In the best of all worlds, what many of us would like to achieve is a discretionary limit agreed to for this year—in effect, a budget for this year. But we also have mandatory spending, and, in fact, mandatory spending is a bigger part of Federal spending than is discretionary. Even if we are not able to agree on a discretionary limit, if we have this budget discipline framework in place, we would have a way of disciplining mandatory spending.

In the best of all worlds, we get a discretionary spending limit, and we have these budget disciplines that apply on both sides of the equation, mandatory spending and discretionary spending. But at the very least, if we passed these budget disciplines, if we extend them, we have some way of disciplining mandatory spending. That is the biggest part of Federal spending.

It would also be very useful and important and certainly my goal to have a discretionary spending limit as well.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder, does the Senator still control the time?

Mr. CONRAD. I still control the floor. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would ask for about 3 or 4 minutes, and I will yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wanted to have a few moments with the chairman and Senator GRAMM and others who are interested, building off your current amendment, which is pending—and I thank you for the accommodations that you have made to it—one which is very important to our side, very important to everyone, as we have come to know it, with the understanding that you know these enforcement provisions are not, for the most part, found in the Budget Act. These enforcement provisions were designed principally by a huge conference that was presided over by former White House OMB Director Darman—remember him—and Senator ROBERT BYRD—you know him—and a few other people. We were about 2 weeks out there at Andrews Air Force Base when we tried to negotiate a budget.

It fell apart in terms of numbers, most interestingly. Some people didn't get treated well politically, and others did. Those who know have said the most important thing we did in 1990 or 1991 were the enforcement provisions. We were doing something rather significant. It turned out the tax part didn't work out as well for the President as it should have, but these enforcement provisions survived.

The principal author of those was Senator ROBERT BYRD, because we were giving, in a sense, many things he wanted, and in exchange he was trying to make sure that if they didn't do their job, something could happen to them, including his committee.

Today the distinguished Senator, on an appropriations bill, is trying to see if we can save some of those. I want to say, I have looked at them. I think the language I have used for the last 2 or 3 minutes means that I like them. In particular, they have been changed a little bit. I like them. I think we would have changed them a little bit, whether we were down here or not, from 1990 because a couple of the provisions don't work too well.

I regret that I can't seem to get a consensus on what else ought to belong in this. I think it is good, but it is half a measure because we ought to have some numbers in it. We ought to have some numbers for defense and some numbers for the rest of Government. Clearly, without any question, we don't need 5-year numbers at this point in the process.

The process is questionable mostly because of the number assumptions, not these enforcement provisions, speaking in the past.

But adults are going to sit down and arrive at this total; if not here, in a vote. If not tomorrow morning in a vote, they will go to a meeting someplace, and they are going to vote on how much we are going to allow for expenditures. We could go back to the day I arrived in the Senate, with Senator Nunn, Senator HELMS, and others. We never knew what we spent until all the bills were added up. Nobody bothered to give you any interim reports on six committees that reported and six bills. We were new. We said: How can you run a government where nobody knows until you are finished, and by then you have already spent it all?

About 6 months later, the Budget Act was born on a premise that Senators JOHNSON and DOMENICI, heads of the freshman class, sent out a letter saying: Next year we will vote against all the measures together, 13 of us, if we don't have some process that tells us the pieces before we start. That was the beginning. So it has some pretty good history.

I have been there and enforced it a lot of times. You know about 35 percent of the votes of the Senate are points of order, and most of those points of order are 60-vote points of order, which is the only effective means this Congress has found to make it difficult to spend money. That is the only one. Because when it is controversial and you are seeking something with a lot of money, it is not easy to get 60 votes. So you ought to have that around here next year, too, and the year after; right?

The question is, how are you going to have it if you don't adopt it? Then to what are you going to make it applicable? I would have hoped that we could have gotten together beyond what is proposed and that we would go ahead and put the numbers in and get it done and then take a look, with our leadership, at where we go next. We still have a lot of amendments, but at least we could conceivably be through with this part.

I am trying as best I can in my few comments to put a little life into this debate; otherwise, who wants to talk about budgets. I do because when you live them, it is interesting to talk about them. How did you get this thing done?

Even the issue raised here, if we don't get one, we will deem one. I kept wondering, if that is the case, why in the world didn't we deem them when they were all so darned difficult? It is because when you finally go to look and see, what is that, it ain't so. We deemed a budget resolution that the Senate had adopted. That is what we deemed done.

Incidentally, we deemed a budget resolution that had been done by the Senate but wasn't getting adopted, and so we said, rather than let this whole year go with nothing, we will have a deeming resolution. And what do we deem up against? A budget resolution. So even when we were in foxholes shooting at each other because we couldn't agree on anything, clearly we chose to get something that said the Budget Act is being enforced.

As to the numbers I am giving you and others who want to be part of this, if they do, I am more than willing to come back and talk about them and see if we can put them together. Our leader will have them very shortly, and we will see where we go.

I thank you very much for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, let me, first, thank the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the ranking member of the Budget Committee. I think he has done something very constructive because it kind of leads us to the point of all the decisions that need to be made. The Senator from New Mexico is saying, yes, we need the budget enforcement mechanism and framework. We also need a budget. We need a budget. The Senator from New Mexico has come forward with numbers that are very close numbers that I could agree to, I say to the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. I had them there because they are close to what the Senator has agreed to before.

Mr. CONRAD. That is exactly right. The Senator basically has the President's number, which the President proposed for outlays—not the President's policy, I am quick to acknowledge. Really, the significant difference—there is not a difference on the budget authority number. It is the President's number. We have said all along that we could agree to the President's number for spending this year. We would not agree to this so-called accruals policy that would say that retirement funding of Federal employees is somehow discretionary rather than mandatory spending. It doesn't seem to us that that is realistic. When you have Federal employees, you have costs for their retirement. That has always been mandatory spending because, obviously, it is required. It is not discretionary. But the overall President's number is one to which I would agree. It is in the budget resolution that passed the Senate Budget Committee.

The Senator from New Mexico has provided a number for outlays that is very close to a number to which I could agree. He has also provided a defense firewall. Well, I think the realistic outcome in the Senate is that if we had a vote, there would be a commitment to spend that amount of money for defense. I think that would probably be the overwhelming vote.

I say to my colleagues, the Senator from New Mexico has come forward with the other part of the package. We have the budget discipline framework and he has now provided the numbers, provided a budget for this year that is very close to the numbers we have discussed for days.

I hope my colleagues will think about the need to get a budget and budget discipline in place for this year. We can do it now.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3765 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3764

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM] proposes an amendment numbered 3765 to amendment No. 3764.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

> (Purpose: To adopt the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2003 reported by the Committee on the Budget for the Senate)
>
>
> SEC. . The provisions of S. Con. Res. 100 (107th Congress) as reported by the Committee on the Budget and placed on the calendar is adopted by the Senate and the House of Representatives as the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2003 in accordance with section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, what I have sent up is the Democrat budget that was passed out of the Senate Budget Committee.

We heard the chairman lecture the Senate that we need to have budget discipline and we need a budget. Yet for the first time in the history of the Senate, since the Budget Enforcement Act was put in place in 1974, we have no budget. We have not even been offered a budget.

The chairman of the Budget Committee, whose responsibility it is to bring a budget to the floor, has not brought a budget to the floor. This is the same chairman of the Budget Committee who, back in 1998, after we passed a budget but it had not gotten a conference report, said:

> The budget resolution was due by April 15—

He said this in October.

> The President plays no role in the budget resolution. That is the responsibility of this Senate and of the House of Representatives. These bodies have failed in their responsibilities.

He made that comment after we passed a budget here, but we were not able to agree between the House and Senate. In this case, the Senate has not even brought up the issue. We are in a situation where we are now, after a few years of surplus, heading into a deficit and we have no budget discipline in place. We have not even had a debate on the floor of the Senate as to the future of the budget of the United States of America.

Every single family in America has to budget. It is our responsibility—in fact, it is an obligation under the law that we pass a budget. But the chairman and the majority party in the Senate have refused to consider the budget, refused to bring this resolution to the floor.

We have seen all these amendments back and forth about why we are going to create psuedobudgets and deeming resolutions and sort of psuedobudget enforcement, skimming around the issues of the budget, without being serious with the public as to what the budget really is. That is disingenuous on the part of the Senate. We should have a full and fair debate on a budget and see whether we can get a compromise.

Last year we had a divided Senate. We did something historic, and I give credit to the chairman and ranking member for putting together a bipartisan budget for the first time in a long time that actually passed the Senate. It was tough. I am sure if you ask the Senator from New Mexico, he would say it was one of the hardest things he ever did. He had a 50–50 Senate. It was not easy to craft a budget that could get votes on both sides of the aisle. It is hard when it is divided. It was a difficult task, but it was one that the Republican majority and Senator DOMENICI took on because we knew it was important for the future of the country to have fiscal discipline, to have a budget in place, so enforcement mechanisms could be put into place, so we could put some sort of caps on discretionary spending and have enforcement mechanisms for taxes and mandatory programs. It is an important framework to governing this country. It is not even a discussion that we have had.

We are almost 2 months past the time we were supposed to have this budget, and this is the first day I can remember we even have had this discussion, much less had the bill before us. So I thought it was important, since we are having this sort of kabuki dance here about budgets, that we actually put a budget on the floor. So that is what is on the floor now. We have on the floor the budget passed out of the Senate Budget Committee. If we adopt it, if the majority can get the votes to adopt their budget, then we can have a budget resolution on the floor and we can go through the process of amending the budget resolution, coming up with what is important for this country, which is setting forth the framework of operating the Government of the United States. It is our responsibility.

The President has sent a budget. He sent up a budget that was very specific. The House has passed a budget. It was hard to do with the very narrow majority over there, but they were able to pass a budget. The fact that we had not even brought a budget up, almost 2 months after the date which it was due to be here, is something we should not be proud of. We set a precedent that is not a good one. It is a precedent that says we are going to leave things to chance in the Senate at a time when the appetite for spending is always very high.

What does this budget do? Well, it does several things. The President laid out in his budget three priorities: national security, increasing defense spending so we can address not only the threats that we have had for many years, which are sort of the conventional threats that we have had to deal with—we were potentially going to be involved in some sort of conflict with a large deployment of our troops, which is what our military has been geared to fight. We have a lot of equipment and trained men and women who are there to do that. But as you know from recent events—and even before recent events—the military was going through a transformation process—now accelerated because of these asymmetric threats to America. Not only do we have to maintain the existing force, but we have to deal with another security threat on Americans here and in the world at large. So in this environment, in a war against terrorism, faced with different threats, we need to dramatically increase defense spending. It is not really that dramatic; it is less than 10 percent in spending. They fund the President's priorities, as far as defense, for the next 2 years. After that, it does not. In fact, it reduces defense spending back basically to the rate of inflation, or below, but it dramatically increases and continues to allow the increase in domestic spending.

At the same time, it takes even more money that was due for tax reductions by making the President's tax cuts permanent and puts that money back and, of course, spends that money, too—not on defense spending but on domestic spending—in a time of war, a time of reshaping our military to protect this country. It reshapes the budget into more porkbarrel projects for Members of Congress. That is what this budget does. It takes money out of your pockets and puts it—

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes.

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator makes an assertion about the Senate Budget Committee that is flatly untrue.

The budget I offered that passed the Senate Budget Committee fully funded defense for 2003 and 2004. After that, it increased defense by the rate of inflation and set all of the additional defense spending aside that the President has requested in a defense reserve account. Every penny of that money that is not needed for defense goes to debt reduction. The Senator has said it goes to porkbarrel projects. That is absolutely false. Every penny of that money—every penny—either goes for defense or it goes for debt reduction.

When the Senator makes statements, I hope the Senator will at least be constrained by the facts.

Mr. SANTORUM. Reclaiming my time, I suggest that given the way this body operates and the Congress has operated over the past several years since I have been in Congress, we have not seen very many reserve accounts set aside for debt reduction that are not raided continually for spending in Washington, DC.

The Senator can say that money is set aside, and that is a nice little accounting mechanism, but the fact is we will spend that money and then some increases—whether it is supplemental appropriations without caps, since we do not have caps now, we would be flying through that money and we would be blowing through caps as we have in the past.

Second, I did say the tax dollars would not be given to the American public. They would be back in the budget and, yes, they would be used to increase spending in Washington, DC.

The fact is, it does not fund the President's priorities or the Nation's priorities with respect to national security, No. 1.

No. 2, it does take money that was targeted hopefully for the pockets of the American taxpayers and brings it back to Washington to be spent.

No. 3, and I quote the Washington Post headline, "Senate Democrats Tap Social Security in Budget Plan." I hear over and over how these horrible Republicans want to raid Social Security and raid the Social Security trust fund.

The budget we have before us, in the words of those who use this lingo, "raids the Social Security trust fund." It is horrible to suggest that, but it does. It does not fund the Nation's priorities with national security. It does increase spending in Washington, DC, for more and more domestic spending programs. It does raise taxes vis-a-vis the President's budget, and it does raid the Social Security trust fund.

Given what this budget does, I can understand why it might be difficult or why many Members, the leader, and the chairman of the Budget Committee did not want to bring this bill to the floor because such a budget would be very difficult to pass because it does not please very many Members on either side of the aisle.

There was no attempt in the process to try to form a bipartisan budget. Every effort by Senator DOMENICI and the budget Republicans was thwarted by the majority. So there was no attempt to build a bipartisan budget. Faced with very difficult fiscal realities, including raiding the Social Security trust fund, which this budget does, it is very difficult to get votes on a bipartisan basis when we have a very closely divided Senate.

I am not saying this would not be a very difficult political task—it would be—but it is one the Senate is required to do. This is a debate that we should have. This is a debate that has been denied to the Senate, has been denied to the American public, and, as a result we are going into waters very much uncharted, uncertain waters when it comes to setting spending priorities over the next few months through the appropriations process and whatever other bills that may be coming through that require expenditure of funds.

I understand there are attempts being made to create mechanisms to do other things that are sort of quasibudget in nature. That is all well and good. But the fact is, the chairman of the Budget Committee and the majority leader had a responsibility and obligation under the act to bring a bill before the Senate and debate a budget, and they have abdicated their responsibility. They have abdicated their responsibility to the Senate and to the American public.

I am going to give them an opportunity. We have waited 2 months. Many on our side were suggesting: Why don't we offer this on April 15? Because many of us thought: Let's see if we can work out something; let's see if we can, in fact, get some bipartisan resolution; maybe the chairman of the Budget Committee will bring forth a budget resolution. Senator DASCHLE continually in his dugout said: We will get to that budget resolution; we will get to it; we will get to it.

I was willing to hold off longer. Now there are all these phony budget talks going on in this Chamber where we are going to do all these machinations to look like we are doing a budget. I thought: I am willing to put off while people have good-faith negotiations to get something done. But when we come out to the Chamber in the context of a supplemental and start playing games like we are doing a budget, let's call a spade a spade. Let's do a budget. You have not done a budget. Let's do a budget. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania must have missed what has been going on. He has not been party to any of these discussions, any of these talks, but people on his side of the aisle have been, including the ranking member of the Budget Committee and the Republican leader. We have even involved the White House in an attempt to get a budget for this year.

The fact is, the Senate passed a budget resolution through the Budget Committee, a budget that is a 10-year budget as required under the law. The President presented a 10-year budget, and we will give our colleagues a chance to vote on that budget as well, just as we did in the Budget Committee.

Interestingly enough, some Republicans did not support that budget. We will see if they want to support that budget on the floor.

The Senator from Pennsylvania talks about raiding Social Security. The President's budget really raids Social Security. We will give the Senator from Pennsylvania the opportunity to vote on that budget and see if he wants to raid it by $500 billion more. That is what the President's budget does.

How are we in this deficit situation? Is it because we have not considered a budget resolution on the floor of the Senate? The Senator from Pennsylvania knows the answer to that question. We are in deficit for as far as the eye can see before a budget has been considered for fiscal year 2003, and I remind the Senator that the new fiscal year does not start until October 1. We have time to get a budget in place for this year.

The Senator perhaps has forgotten that the Senate has been involved in the election reform bill, the energy bill, the trade bill—all of these the administration requested us to take up. Now we are on the supplemental bill which the President also asked us to take up and dispose of. So the budget kept getting pushed back.

On the fundamental question of how we got in this circumstance where we see deficits as far as the eye can see, the facts are very clear. The Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues bear substantial responsibility. They are the ones who put a budget in place last year that plunged us back into deficits. We opposed it.

It was the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues who said we can have it all, who said we can have a massive tax cut, we can have a major defense buildup, that we can have maximum paydown of the Federal debt. That is what they told us last year. And now they are here, after saying they were going to have maximum paydown of the Federal debt, asking for the second biggest increase in the debt in the history of the country.

This is their fiscal policy that is in place. It is their fiscal policy that has put us back into deficit. It is their fiscal policy that has put this country back into accumulating debt at a record rate.

No budget has yet been acted upon for the year 2003. It is their budget, the budget they passed last year, that they offered in both Chambers of the Congress, that they passed that has put us in this deep ditch. That is the fact.

Last year, we were told there would be nearly $6 trillion of surpluses over the next decade.

In fact, the President's Office of Management and Budget told us there was going to be $5.6 trillion of surpluses over the next 10 years. Now we are told maybe $400 billion, and that is before the revenue shortfall of this filing season.

The fact is the money is all gone. Where did it go? More than 40 percent went to the tax cut that the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues pushed through this Congress. Twenty percent of the disappearance of the surplus went from increased expenditures as a result of the attacks on this country, 20 percent, and every Republican supported those expenditures.

Twenty percent of the disappearance of the surplus happened because of the economic slowdown. About 20 percent occurred as a result of underestimations of the cost of Medicare and Medicaid. That is where the money went.

So if the Senator from Pennsylvania is wondering how the money disappeared and who is responsible, he can look in the mirror because it was his fiscal policy, his budget, his plan, his promises that put us back into deficit and back into debt. That is where we are.

I warned against that fiscal policy. I warned that it would put us in danger of raiding Social Security and raiding Medicare and every other trust fund in sight. But, oh, no, the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues said: We know better. There is going to be even more money than has been projected. That is what they said then, and now we reap the whirlwind and the devastation of deficits and debt as far as the eye can see.

We have an opportunity to get a budget framework in place. We have an opportunity to put in place the budget disciplines that are necessary to prevent spending from spinning out of control, but this kind of ad hominem attack is not going to solve those problems.

We presented a 10-year budget. I am proud of that budget. The budget I presented, that passed through the Budget Committee, did the following: No. 1, fully funded the President's defense request for 2003 and 2004, and for the years beyond put the money in a reserve account so that every penny would be available for the defense of this country if needed. But in those future years, where none of us can say with certainty what might be required for defense, to the extent any of that money is not needed for that purpose, it goes to reducing the debt of America. That is a good policy. It is one we ought to adopt.

In the budget I have offered our colleagues, we fully fund all of the money the President has requested for homeland security because we believe everybody in this Chamber understands our first obligation is to defend this Nation.

The budget I have offered also has greater debt reduction than the President has offered in his budget, $500 billion more in debt reduction than what the President proposed, if the defense reserve fund is not needed for defense. If it is all required for defense, we still are paying down the debt by $230 billion more than the President's proposal.

On the other key issues before us, the budget I offered my colleagues said there would be no additional tax cuts unless they are paid for because we are now in deficit. It contains no tax increases, and it also has no delay of the scheduled tax cuts.

The budget I offered also attempts to address the priorities of the American people because it rejects certain of the cuts the President proposed. The President proposed cutting the highway construction program in this country by 27 percent. The President's budget proposes a $9 billion cut in highway and bridge construction funding. I do not think that is the priority of the American people.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONRAD. Since the Senator has presented the budget I offered, I would like to complete the description of that and then I would be happy to yield.

I do not think it is wise to reduce the highway and bridge construction budget of the United States by 27 percent. No. 1, it would cost over 350,000 jobs in America. No. 2, it would reduce the efficiency of the transportation system in our country. What sense would that make?

It does not end there. The other major difference in the priorities of my budget from the President's budget is in education. Everybody says education is their priority, but the President's budget actually cut his signature education proposal, No Child Left Behind. The President, with great fanfare, went across the country drawing attention to the No Child Left Behind Act, but in the first budget he proposed, he cut the funding for No Child Left Behind.

I also, in my budget, kept the Federal promise that was made long ago to the States with Disabilities Act funding for education. Educators all across America told us this was the single highest priority. It is the one thing that would help school districts across America the most, if the Federal Government would keep its commitment to fund 40 percent of the costs of the Disabilities Act. That is a promise we have not kept. Under the budget I have proposed, we would keep it.

We have some additional funding for education, some additional funding for law enforcement as well. The President cut dramatically the funding for the COPS Program. What sense does that make, when we face a terrorist threat, to cut cops on the street? This is a program that has put tens of thousands of policemen on the streets of America. So we restored that cut.

We also dealt with some of the other priorities of the Nation. In addition to education, in addition to law enforcement, we dealt with the health care needs of America.

The President had about $250 billion set aside for a prescription drug benefit and to expand health care coverage. The House in their budget resolution set aside $350 billion for a prescription drug benefit and for adjustments to providers. They did not pick up the President's proposal for expanding health care coverage.

In the budget I have proposed, we have a $500 billion reserve fund for health care, for prescription drugs, for the President's proposal on expanding health care, and for the third category of adjusting for providers, the Medicare cuts that are in place that endanger the health care of the people of the country because there are additional cuts to hospitals, additional cuts to doctors that go beyond what was anticipated when the 1997 Deficit Reduction Act was put in place.

Some have asked, how can it be that there are fewer cuts than the President proposed but on the other hand there is more debt reduction? How can that be? The way we achieved that result was not to adopt the President's proposal of additional tax reductions on top of the stimulus package that has already been put in place this year, and on top of the massive tax cut that was put in place last year that extends over the next 10 years. We say, yes, there can be additional tax cuts, absolutely, but they have to be paid for.

I think that is a pretty reasonable budget. Those are principles that ought to be adopted. Those are things that make sense.

I want to review how we got in the circumstance we are in today. It was not the fact that we have not yet adopted a budget for 2003 that put us into deficit.

I conclude by saying we got in this soup because of the fiscal policy put in place last year by the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues. They are the ones who told the American people: You can have it all; it all adds up, massive tax cut, major increases in spending. They will have maximum paydown of the Federal debt, they will do all these things based on a 10-year forecast that even the people who made the forecast warned was uncertain. But they bought it hook, line, and sinker, and they sold it to the American people.

What is the result? Before we have a budget for fiscal year 2003, massive deficit is the result, deficit not just for this year but next year and the next year and the next year and the next year, because that party that claims to be the party of fiscal responsibility put us right back into the soup of deficits, debt, and decline. Their plan did not add up. Now we have an opportunity and an obligation to try to agree on a budget for this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I want to make sure everyone understands what it is we are debating on the Senate floor.

The President made a request of the Senate to pass an emergency appropriation that would directly respond to the terrorist attacks in the United States. He asked for more money for defense. He asked for more money for homeland security. He asked for more money for New York. That is the pending legislation.

Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle have said this bill is on a slow train to nowhere. Mr. President, it is disconcerting, at best, that on an issue of this import—dealing with troops overseas while the nation is on high alert after being told repeatedly in the last 3 weeks about the inevitability of a further attack—somebody has unconscionably come to the floor and slow-trained this important bill, slow-walked it, stopped it, brought it to a grinding halt. But that is exactly what is happening.

We need to get this legislation passed. There ought to be a good debate about budget. We have been trying to do that. We will have one. But to offer a budget resolution on the amendment that is currently pending is inexcusable. It is politics. It has everything to do with slowing this bill down to a screeching halt and ignoring the plea of the President of the United States to enact this legislation as quickly as we can. That is what we are doing.

Members of his party have said: We don't care what the President is requesting, we are going to slow-walk this, we are going to put this on a slow train, and we are not going to pass this legislation this week. We will vote against cloture tomorrow. We are actually going to continue to filibuster a bill the President has requested to deal with homeland defense, to deal with aid to New York, and to deal with the defense needs of this country. That is inexcusable.

I move to table the second-degree amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. BINGAMAN), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 96, nays 0, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The deputy majority leader.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I want to reflect for a moment on the events of today and say to my colleagues, we have to find a way to break the gridlock. The bill that is before us is for defense, for homeland security, for dealing with the tragedy of the attack on New York, and to deal with some other urgent needs, including the shortfall in Pell grants and VA medical care.

The bill before us is a $31 billion bill. Fourteen billion dollars is for defense, money requested by the President to respond to the continuing terrorist threat to this country; $8.3 billion is for homeland security, again funds requested by the President to respond to the continuing threat against our Nation; $5.5 billion is to respond to the needs of New York after the attack of September 11; $1.9 billion is for foreign security assistance to strengthen our embassies against terrorist attacks; $1 billion to deal with the shortfall in Pell grants; $400 million for VA medical care. That is the bill that is before us. Those are requests of the President of the United States.

I want to make clear that what is at stake is spending items requested by the President of the United States to respond to the threats against our country and the devastation that occurred as a result of those attacks. I think it also must be said that we need to have a budget put in place for this year. It is needed. Now we are being told by some on the other side, they will block any attempt to have a vote on a budget framework for this year.

There are others on both sides who want to work together to achieve that result. There are others on both sides who believe it is important to have a budget put in place for this year, to have the budget disciplines extended for this year. I hoped we could do that before we conclude work on this supplemental. This is one of the best alternatives, one of the best options we will have to put in place a budget framework for this year.

I might say that people on both sides of the aisle have worked very hard to do that, are very close to an agreement to do that, but we have to have an opportunity to vote before cloture is invoked or that effort will fail.

That is the hard reality. We have an opportunity to put in place a budget for this year, to extend the budget disciplines for this year, and to provide some order to this process. That is in the interest of all of us. That is in the interest of the Nation. I would hope very much that tomorrow we would have the opportunity to vote on that on a bipartisan basis.

Ms. STABENOW. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONRAD. I am happy to yield.

Ms. STABENOW. I ask the Senator, who is the chair of our Budget Committee, about issues that are in that budget which I think are so critical for all of us, and I share with the Senator his frustration about the lack of willingness or ability to move ahead in order to pass this supplemental and to be able to pass the budget. One of the important provisions that we have worked on together relates to the question of prescription drugs and putting forward a comprehensive Medicare prescription drug benefit that I know the Presiding Officer has been deeply involved in leading and advocating as well.

Would the Senator not agree that it is critically important that we be able to move ahead with this budget so we can address the issue of Medicare prescription drugs and be able to address the spiraling costs of medications, affecting every part of our economy and that our budget resolution, in fact, puts in place the ability to do that?

Mr. CONRAD. I would like nothing better than to have the opportunity to have a full plan. At this moment, what is at stake is having any plan just for this year. That is clearly in the Nation's interests. It is in the interest of an orderly appropriations process to have a budget for this year and to have the various budget disciplines put in place for this year. That is now what is at risk, much less having a longer term plan. What is at risk at this moment is having any plan. That is what is at risk.

There are some Members who do not want any plan, some Members who want chaos. They think somehow they benefit by not having a discipline in this entire process. That is regrettable. I say to my colleague, who is a very valuable member of the Senate Budget Committee. We voted out a resolution, a blueprint on how to proceed, one that was fiscally responsible, that had substantially more debt paydown than the President proposed, one that has no tax increases, one that has no delay of the scheduled tax cuts, one that provides everything the President requested for the defense of this Nation, both in terms of the defense budget and the budget for homeland security. We did that.

We are asking for at least the opportunity to vote on one year of that plan so we meet the defense needs, so we meet the needs for homeland security, so we get this supplemental budget in place that the President has requested, so that, yes, we have the budget disciplines continue past September 30 when they expire. We do not want to see a circumstance where spending spins out of control. Just be here in October with no budget disciplines available and see what real chaos can be.

I say to my colleagues, I know there are people who have strong feelings on all of these issues. I do, as well. We ought to let the Senate work its will. We ought to have a chance to vote. That is how we determine outcomes here.

I have been told there are some who have the idea of preventing the Senate from voting. They do not want a chance to vote because they think they would lose, although there is a 60-vote requirement. They are right. They would lose. We would then have the opportunity to have not only a budget for this year and also the budget disciplines continue, that is very much in the public interest.

I hope some of my colleagues overnight will think about the consequences of the failure to act. I thank the Senator from Michigan for her contributions on the Budget Committee.

Ms. STABENOW. I commend the Senator from North Dakota for his ongoing leadership on the Budget Committee. These are challenging times. He has forecast for over a year great concerns about an evaporating surplus and what could happen with a downturn and other pressures on the budget. He has continued to advocate fiscal discipline. I join the Senator in that and in setting the right priorities for the country, the right priorities for our families.

ASSISTANCE FOR ISRAEL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, the ranking minority member of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, Senator McCONNELL, concerning assistance for Israel.

This amendment would permit the transfer of all or a portion of the funds in the supplemental for Israel, to the "Nonproliferation, Anti-Terrorism, Demining and Related Programs" account (NADR), to be used for "defensive, non-lethal anti-terrorism assistance." It is my understanding that the purpose of this amendment is to provide the authority to utilize these funds to purchase bomb detection equipment, x-ray machinery, body armor, and similar types of border security and other defensive equipment to prevent acts of terrorism. Am I correct?

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his question. Yes, he is correct. That is exactly what these funds would be available for. The recent bombings in Israel—including one this morning that killed 16 people—have only demonstrated the urgent need for this type of assistance.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. I want to be certain that there is no ambiguity about what these funds are for. We are all aware that there was never any intention that these funds would be available for lethal assistance or for the expansion of settlements, but I think it is important to reaffirm that understanding. These NADR funds would not be available for offensive purposes, or for any purpose unrelated to the purchase of defensive, non-lethal anti-terrorism equipment, and the Senator from Kentucky has confirmed that.

Mr. McCONNELL. Let me thank the chairman for including the assistance for Israel in his mark.

WAIVER OF THE LOCAL MATCH FOR THE COMMUNICATIONS INTEROPERABILITY FUNDING

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I would like to engage my colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations Subcommittee, Senator HOLLINGS, in a colloquy on the local match requirements for Federal grant funding. This pressing concern was raised by the local elected officials we heard from during the Appropriations Committee homeland security hearings. One of them testified that in many of these grant programs, particularly in the public safety area, our larger cities with the greatest needs cannot afford to meet a local requirement, while wealthier area with relatively fewer needs are able to take full advantage of these funds.

I hope the distinguished chairman will join me in this colloquy at this time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I would be happy to speak with my colleague from Louisiana on this important issue.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Senator. I believe that local match requirements are an important shared investment in Federal grant making. So there is a need for it and I think my colleague would agree.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I certainly do agree. By giving the local jurisdiction "buy-in" to a grant, the local match adds an incentive for communities to use Federal funding effectively. A wide variety of grant programs have them. I also share in the Senator from Louisiana's concern that many of our communities may not be able to afford that match. Many grant programs provide waivers of the match in certain cases.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I would like to talk to the Senator about the $80 million in interoperable communications funding in the Department of Justice title of the bill. In the District of Columbia Subcommittee we have held hearings on the emergency preparedness needs for Washington, DC. During 9-11, District fire and police personnel had to have the ability to communicate with multiple jurisdictions that responded to the Pentagon. So interoperability is crucial for public safety officials.

The funding in the bill would be administered by the COPS program at the Department of Justice. You have been a leader in the Senate in your support of that program. COPS grants require a 25 percent local match for its grants. The COPS program does allow for a full or partial waiver of the local match for communities that are facing severe fiscal distress. Communities can qualify for a waiver in a wide variety of ways. Some qualify because they have been declared a FEMA disaster area or have been placed in receivership or bankruptcy. Communities can also get a waiver if they have had a recent large, one-time financial expense, like replacing a water treatment facility. The COPS program will also grant waivers to communities that had to make across-the-board budget cuts as a result of difficult economic circumstances.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Congress designed the COPS program to meet the specific law enforcement needs of individual communities. This is true not only with the waiver of the local match, but in how communities can use COPS funding in general.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Is it your understanding that the COPS interoperable communications funding in the bill will be administered in the same manner as the other COPS grant programs regarding the local match and the waiver process?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes. These funds will be administered in the same manner as other COPS grants funds regarding both the matching requirements and the waiver process.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the chairman of the subcommittee. I look forward to working with you on this issue.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the funding for the U.S. Coast Guard aviation programs in the pending supplemental appropriations bill.

On February 20, I spent a day at Coast Guard Air Station Clearwater in St. Petersburg, Florida. I observed first hand some very impressive Coast Guard aviation operations, but also several helicopters that were inoperative due to problems associated with a shortage of spare parts. I am pleased that the pending supplemental will help restore adequate funding for the Coast Guard aviation program, including spare parts, and get these aircraft flying and operational again soon.

The Coast Guard needs this assistance to cover their basic operational expenses. According to the Coast Guard, the first supplemental this year provided funding to operate seven additional aircraft (4 HU-25 Falcon jets and 3 HH-65 helicopters) and provided a 15 percent increase in flight hours. The pending supplemental contains approximately $22 million to continue to operate the entire aviation fleet for the remainder of the fiscal year, with an adequate inventory levels of repair parts. I am also pleased that the Coast Guard reports that the President's fiscal year 2003 budget request contains the necessary recurring funding to support the additional aircraft and flight hours brought on by fiscal year 2002 supplemental funding, as well as continues to resolve the Service's aviation parts shortfalls.

I do recognize that some of the HH-60 helicopter problems that I saw in February are due to aging aircraft issues that affect the entire U.S. H-60 fleet, including those owned by the Department of Defense, and are not just the Coast Guard specific issues.

As one of the nation's first lines of defense in stemming the flow of illicit drugs and illegal immigration into the United States, it is imperative that the U.S. Coast Guard be appropriated the resources that they require to carry out their critical missions on behalf of the American people. And we must remain committed to ensuring that our Coast Guard has adequate resources not just now, but well into the future. The U.S. Coast Guard is important to Florida and important to the nation.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support for the Coast Guard's supplemental funding for fiscal year 2002 as well as for their annual appropriations in fiscal year 2003.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I very much enjoyed Thomas Friedman's op-ed in today's New York Times entitled "Land of Denial." I could not agree more with his assertion that Egypt can—and should—be doing more to be a leader in the Arab world.

Egypt is a land of missed opportunities, and it has forfeited its historical place in Middle Eastern history as a progressive and pluralistic country. Friedman points out that while other countries—Jordan, Bahrain, Qatar, and even Tunisia—have forged ahead with democratic, free press, and economic reforms, Egypt "has been stagnating."

I could not agree more with Friedman's assertion that "[t]he intellectual air has gone stale in Egypt from too many years of controlled press and authoritarian politics."

In the past, I have taken issue with Egypt's cold peace with Israel, its jailing of democracy advocates, its suspicious involvement with North Korean missiles and weapons technicians, and its reckless and irresponsible government-controlled press that fuels extremism on the streets of Cairo and throughout the Arab world.

It is not too late for President Hosni Mubarak to embark on a reform path that will ensure a stable and prosperous Egypt. It is in our interests—as well as those of the Egyptian people—that Mubarak invests in the development of functioning democratic institutions and political processes.

In the supplemental bill I carved out a portion of assistance provided in the Economic Support Fund account for the professional training of Egyptian and other Middle Eastern journalists. I did so because I firmly believe that a free and independent media in Egypt will contribute to our war against terrorism, peace in the region, and the political, legal, and economic development of that country.

The abuses of the government-controlled Egyptian press are legendary, and include personal attacks against

Secretary of State Colin Powell and National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice. America has been repeatedly tarred and feathered, Israel vilified, and Hitler criticized for not killing all the Jews "so that the world could sigh in relief without their evil and sins."

Such inflammatory nonsense fuels ideological extremism that has repercussions on our shores and throughout the world.

Let me assure my colleagues that in my capacity as ranking member of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I will continue to examine the assistance America provides to Egypt. I have already suggested to Secretary Powell that we reassess our assistance to Egypt to ensure that it effectively promotes critically needed reforms, and I look forward to working with the administration on this matter.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have spoken to both the majority and the Republican leader and told them that we were going to go into a period for morning business for the rest of the evening, and they both are aware of what we were going to do. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for a period up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, for the information of all Members, I have spoken with the two leaders, and what we would like to do this evening is propound a unanimous consent request that we be in morning business in the morning from 9:30 until 10:30, with the time from 10:30 until 11 equally divided with the proponents and opponents of the motion to invoke cloture.

We, of course, will be on cloture whether there is an agreement or not. That is the rule. So that is what I am going to propose later on. As I have said, I have explained that to both leaders, and I think that is what they want.

Of course, Mr. President, there are no more rollcall votes today.

CRITICAL ISSUES

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise to ask our colleagues to move beyond the obstructionist position, to work together to get the supplemental passed so we can move on to other critical issues that affect our families. This is one. It is important. There are important pieces in this bill that deal with our issues of homeland security and certainly, representing the great State of Michigan, issues of border security are critical. We are very concerned about making sure we have the resources in place. There are other important resources in this supplemental bill.

However, I am equally concerned about the ability to move beyond this, to get this completed on a bipartisan basis and move beyond this to the rest of the agenda that has to happen.

The Presiding Officer has spoken eloquently about the sense of urgency families feel about medicine and the inability to afford critical lifesaving medicine, whether you have cancer, a heart condition, high blood pressure, or a disabled child and you need to be able to provide that child with medicine that is needed.

We have the ability and, within our budget resolution, the capacity to pass a Medicare prescription drug benefit that will update Medicare and make sure there is a voluntary universal plan in place for those who need it, to be able to afford their prescription drugs.

We also have the ability to lower prices across the board. Our side of the aisle has put forward a strategy to provide a way to lower prices for our business community, large and small. I have seen the business communities come forward, small businesses that are losing the ability to provide health care for their employees because premiums are going up 30 and 40 percent this year.

The big three automakers shared some statistics with me. I came from a weekend-long event on Mackinaw Island, which I invite the Presiding Officer and my colleagues to come and enjoy during the beautiful summer months. There is a wonderful gathering of business and political leaders and university educators who come together once a year to discuss challenges facing the economy in southeastern Michigan and across Michigan and the business concerns. High on their list, if not at the very top, was the rising costs of health care, predominantly due to the explosion of the prices on prescription drugs.

We heard a presentation from DaimlerChrysler that indicated on a SUV today priced at $18,600 the cost of employee health care is $1,300, and that the fastest growing part of that is prescription drug costs. We not only need to be providing Medicare prescription drug coverage for seniors and for the disabled, but we need to close the loopholes which allow the companies to stop compensation through generics that go on to market or are supposed to go on to market once the patents run out where the formula is available to other countries to use and to produce prescription drugs at a lower cost.

We also need to open our borders to Canada. Two weeks ago, we passed fast-track trade authority, but the only thing we could not trade between the United States and Canada is prescription drugs, which makes absolutely no sense. We know, and we will be demonstrating next week in bus trips from a number of States across to Canada, that you can lower your prices at least in half.

I am pleased to have joined with Senator DORGAN from North Dakota, Senator JEFFORDS from Vermont, Senator WELLSTONE from Minnesota, and many others, in an effort to open the border so we can have that competition, and our pharmacists, our hospitals, our businesses can have business relationships with the Canadians, bringing back American made drugs sold to them at lower prices. We have that bill. If we had the opportunity, we could complete the supplemental and bring up that bill and lower prices immediately.

We have been able to put forward a bill that caps the amount the taxpayers subsidize in excessive advertising costs. The drug companies are spending 2.5 times more to advertise a drug than to create a new lifesaving drug, and we have a bill—and the Presiding Officer has joined in the effort—to cap the amount that can be written off on advertising and marketing costs to the same level that research costs are rip-offs on taxes, so taxpayers are subsidizing no more for advertising and marketing sales than we do for research. That would cut costs immediately.

We also have a bill to allow more flexibility for States using innovative techniques as in Maine and Vermont, where they are being sued by the drug companies for coming up with creative ways to lower prices.

We have an agenda to lower prices. We have an agenda that includes a comprehensive, voluntary, Medicare prescription drug benefit. If we can get beyond the current stalemate, we will have the time and opportunity to bring forward these issues that directly affect every single American—every business, every farmer, every worker, every family, every senior. It is an issue whose time has come.

People in our States are saying it is time to act. It is past time to act. We have been talking about this. You would think, given all the time we spent talking about it, on both sides of the aisle, we could have funded a prescription drug benefit.

The reality is we need to act. We need to do it now. I am deeply concerned that we are seeing, day after day, stalemate on moving forward on critical issues such as the supplemental that are so important to us and that are blocking us.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Ms. STABENOW. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. REID. I say to the Senator from Michigan how much I appreciate her leadership on this issue. Yesterday the Presiding Officer gave a speech, right close to where the Senator was standing. It was one of the most significant speeches I have heard since I have been here. He illustrated, in the mind of anyone who was listening, why we cannot wait.

I say to my friend from Michigan, I was on an elected board of trustees from a hospital district in 1966 when Medicare came into being. Prior to Medicare coming into being, 40 percent of the seniors who came into our hospital—it was a county hospital—had no health insurance. We were brutal. That is just the way it was all over America. We would go after whoever brought their mother or father, son or daughter in the hospital. We would go after them for their wages; we would attach their homes. That was the way it was all over America.

Medicare is imperfect, but now virtually every senior citizen who comes into a hospital has some health insurance.

In 1966, I think the Senator would agree, there really was not a paramount need for a health insurance plan that covered seniors for prescription drugs. That was not really a part of the therapy at the time. But now the Senator would also acknowledge the average senior citizen has 18 prescriptions filled every year. They are lifesaving. They make people more comfortable. They prevent disease. How can we, the only superpower in the world, not have a prescription drug benefit for the program we call Medicare to take care of seniors? Would the Senator respond to that?

Ms. STABENOW. I thank the Senator very much for those comments. I could not agree more. When Medicare came into being, as the Senator from Nevada knows, it provided coverage for the way health care was provided at the time. You went into the hospital, you had an operation, and it covered the medications in the hospital. But we all know that health care has dramatically changed, and we are proud of that. We are proud that we have these new lifesaving drugs that stop someone from having to have the operation. We know most health care now involves prescriptions.

The problem we have is that this great American success story called Medicare that was put into place does not cover prescriptions. So effectively, now, we are not providing the health care that we promised our seniors and the disabled.

So for me and I know for the Presiding Officer and for our leader from Nevada, it is common sense. It is past time to update Medicare. I know we are urgently trying to make that happen.

I thank my friend for raising that. I know we have a tremendous amount of support all across this country for getting this done. I often think, in the debate on health care and this debate on prescription drugs, if we only had the same sense of urgency on this issue from a policy standpoint that we have when someone in our family gets sick or we get sick. When you find you are diagnosed with cancer and you have to have cancer medication, you can't say, "This is too tough. We will do it next year. You can have your medicine next year." Or when your child gets sick, you can't say, "You can't get sick this year. You can get sick next year."

Yet we put off this issue year after year after year. We need this kind of urgency that our families feel. I know our leader from Nevada feels that. Certainly the majority leader of the Senate and the Presiding Officer from Georgia have eloquently stated this. We are going to keep coming to the floor, day after day after day, creating this sense of urgency, urging people to get involved with us to create the sense of urgency that we need to get this done.

Mr. REID. I know the Senator from Michigan has a schedule to meet. But will she yield for one more question?

Ms. STABENOW. I would be honored, yes.

Mr. REID. Having listened to the Senator and having listened to the Presiding Officer yesterday, I am—I can't say depressed; maybe in a legislative sense I am, but I am terribly concerned that we are wasting so much time. Everyone knows this bill that is being slow-walked here is going to pass. It has to pass.

This bill making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from the response to terrorist attacks on the United States—we know it is going to pass.

There are things in it that people may not like. But rather than waste 2 days' time here, why don't they file motions to strike what they don't like. It is a shame we have to invoke cloture.

We have spent Monday, we have spent Tuesday, we have spent Wednesday doing basically not much, when we could have been working on this legislation about which the Senator is speaking now, about which the Senator from Georgia spoke yesterday. We are wasting time.

I can be as partisan as a lot of people, but the State of Nevada is equally divided between Democrats and Republicans. I represent the Republicans of the State of Nevada just as I represent the Democrats. We in the Senate have to respond, in my opinion, in that same manner. The people about whom you speak are not Democrats; there are just as many Republicans as Democrats who need Medicare. We have to approach this in that manner. Would the Senator agree?

Ms. STABENOW. I could not agree more. I was thinking as the Senator was speaking, we have seniors who got up this morning and literally sat at the kitchen table and said: Do I eat today or do I get my medicine? Do I pay my utility bill or do I get my medicine? They didn't check to see if their registration card was Democrat or Republican. That is not what this is about. This is about real people's concerns.

People expect us to work together. They expect us to rise above those kinds of partisan efforts and work together to get things done for them in a meaningful way.

So I share the same concern. Every day this week that we are not able to address this is another day where thousands, probably millions of people across this country, are trying to decide how to put their pennies together to be able to afford the medicine that they or their family need. I would say enough is enough. It is time to get on with it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Budget Committee, and certainly the statement just made by my friend, the distinguished Senator from Michigan, Ms. STABENOW.

I spend a lot of time in the Chamber, and I really enjoy it. That is my job. I appreciate my ability to do that, that other Senators give me that responsibility. But there are days such as today and yesterday and Monday that I am concerned we are not doing enough in this body. I don't know why this is being slow-walked, as has been described in today's press. I am not making this up. It is right here in the Congressional Quarterly:

> Senate Republicans say they will not hesitate to slow walk legislation important to Democrats.

But as the Senator from Michigan stated, if we passed a prescription drug benefit for seniors—it would be great if we could do it for everyone, but let's say we do it for seniors on Medicare—they wouldn't know to whom to give credit, whether it be Democrats or Republicans, but they would be happy they got something. Conversely, our doing nothing, the blame goes to both parties. There is no advantage that anyone gets by not moving forward on legislation.

Pick up the newspaper anytime you want—today. I don't have a clip from today's paper, but it is easy to find one. Here is one, May 23. It was in my desk. I was cleaning out my desk as the Senator was speaking:

> The Department of Transportation has issued a warning about attacks on rail and transit systems across the country, law enforcement officials said on Thursday. The Department's warning, sent out Wednesday, was consulted by the Department of Transportation.

The reason that is important is this bill that we are now working on has a provision in it for security. We have almost $1 billion for port security. We have $200 million for security at nuclear weapons facilities. We have $154 million for cyber-security, and border security.

I am a member of the Appropriations Committee. I voted for the bill that came out of committee. But as with all Senators, you don't have an opportunity to read everything in a bill. The bill that came out is not a very big bill. It is 117 pages. I could read the bill easily in a half hour and really understand everything in it. If there is something that people do not like in the bill, they should try to get rid of it.

I think we are doing a disservice to the people of my State of Nevada and the country by not moving forward on this. There is no political advantage. I don't know if we can get cloture tomorrow. If we don't get cloture tomorrow, we will go again and try it some other time.

I don't know what benefit there is of the big stall that is taking place. I think it is a disservice to the country. I have tried on various occasions during the last several days, I have offered unanimous consent requests that we limit the number of amendments. I have offered unanimous consent requests that we have a finite list of amendments. It doesn't matter how many, but let us know how many so the managers can work to cut this down.

I am very disillusioned with what is happening. I say to the American people that they should send a message to their Senators to move forward on this legislation. This legislation is for further recovery in response to the terrorist attacks on the United States.

I will bet the State of Georgia is hurting for money as a result of some of the spending on antiterrorism, and the State of Nevada. There were a lot of things we were spending money on prior to September 11. We did it to make it a safer place. But for our ports, highways, schools, and other things, we are doing more. Nevada and Georgia and other States are eating those costs themselves.

There is money in this bill to help States, as there should be. We are spending lots of money in Nevada training first responders. There is $1 billion in this bill, including funds for firefighting grants, State and local law enforcement grants, grants to help State and local police to better coordinate their operations, fire and medical personnel, emergency planning grants, and search and rescue training. There is much that will help my State.

Frankly, time is of the essence. We would be much better off if this bill had passed last week. We would be better off if it had passed before we took our break for the Memorial Day recess. With each day that goes by, the hard-earned money of the taxpayers of Nevada is being spent. They need help on programs. What is another day? Another day means one more firefighter who is not trained. It means one more police officer who needs additional training. This is not done in a vacuum.

On September 11, the actions of evil people killed about 3,000 men, women, and children—women who were pregnant.

What has happened here is a clear illustration of: Do we really care about those people who are dead? I can't in my mind's eye understand the terror that went through the minds of those innocent people on this airplane who died in an awful way.

That is what this legislation is all about. Can we stop some of that? Of course we can.

There is $125 million for border security. There is $100 million so the Environmental Protection Agency can check the vulnerability and assessment of water systems. We have water in Nevada, as we have everyplace. You just pull it out of the lake. We have reservoirs. We can pull the water out of the reservoir. If these evil people would fly an airplane into a building killing not only the people on the airplane but the people in the building, certainly they wouldn't hesitate in a second to poison water and sicken and kill people.

We need to move forward. I am terribly disappointed that we are not moving forward.

I don't know why the President isn't involved. They came down here yesterday with a Statement of Administration Policy. The Statement of Administration Policy indicates that there are five or six provisions they don't like in the bill. I have no problem with that. The President of the United States has a right to tell us what he doesn't like. But what I don't like is people coming in saying the President is going to veto this bill. There is nothing to veto. If we pass this bill at 6 o'clock tonight, there will be nothing to veto. There is no bill. There is no legislation. We want to get to the House of Representatives so that we can meet and come up with a bill that he can then veto, if he wants to. But as Senator STEVENS said yesterday, it doesn't happen.

We are going to work something out to make the President happy. That is the way it works. We are not going to send him an appropriations bill—especially an emergency supplemental bill—that he doesn't like. He can't use this as an excuse.

My friend from Minnesota is in the Chamber. I am grateful that he came here tonight. I hope tomorrow cloture will be invoked and that we can move forward on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Nevada.

First of all, I assume tomorrow there will be time to talk about the supplemental bill. I will not use a lot of time, but we want to finish this work. I am anxious to make a statement on Colombia. Tonight, I would like to talk about this delay. Am I correct there will probably be time to talk about this bill tomorrow?

Mr. REID. If cloture is invoked, there will be 30 hours, of which you will have an hour of your own.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I hope we will not have to do that.

The only thing I would like to say about this supplemental and where we are is I will refer to an article that the Presiding Officer, Senator MILLER, wrote in the New York Times. There is a lot of work to do here. I think people are becoming increasingly impatient because we are supposed to be here to advocate people, and help and work for people. I think the supplemental bill is a really good bill.

I was here the other day talking about one of the most important features that Senator REID was talking about—homeland defense and bumping up veteran health care to the tune of about $240-plus million. There are gaping holes in this VA health care. It is serious. It is very serious. We have very long waiting lines right now for primary care and for specialty care. We have a moratorium on any additional community clinics. Everybody says they are for the veterans.

Frankly, if you get beyond the Fourth of July and Memorial Day and Veterans Day, the way to speak for veterans is to live up to our commitment to make sure they get good health care coverage which they and their families deserve and expect. That is just one feature in this bill. It is important.

What bothers me the most is this strategy of delay. It is 10 to 6. We are not going to have any more votes. Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle have pretty much blocked everything for now. We should be having debate and votes, and we should be moving forward. We should pass this bill. People can vote up or down. We have a lot of other priorities.

Again, the Presiding Officer has talked about prescription drugs. In Minnesota, about as important an issue as I can think of is affordable prescription drugs.

Frankly, I also like the proposal, and I am part of this work of reimportation from Canada because there, by strict FDA safety guidelines, you are helping seniors and other working families who cannot afford the price.

But let's get on with the work. Let's have the debate relevant to people's lives, vote up or down, be held accountable—representative democracy at its very best, not at its worst.

Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are just delaying and delaying, slowing the Senate. The Senate machinery is geared to grind slowly, but what is going on is just an effort to make the Senate a nondecisionmaking body. I do not think we do well for people when we are not a decisionmaking body.

There are those—I am a big advocate—who want to raise the minimum wage. I understand we are going to be dealing with hate crimes legislation, which I think we should.

For my own part, I would put right up there with affordable prescription drugs wanting to get back to funding education because my State of Minnesota believes they have been cheated out of $2 billion they should have had for the next 10 years. We did it in the Senate: it got blocked in conference committee. The House Republican leaders and the White House opposed it. That would have been a glidepath, full funding for the special education program over the next 5 years, then maintaining that for the next 5 years past that. It would have been $2 billion more for Minnesota.

Since a lot of our school districts have had to take money from other programs to fund special education because they have not gotten Federal money, 50 percent of it would have been fungible for special education, afterschool, more teaching assistants to help kids who are not doing as well in reading or math, being better able to recruit teachers, being better able to keep teachers, there is important work to do here.

We are not the main player in K–12, but this is a place where we could really make a commitment, and should.

I am anxious to get on with the appropriations process. I am anxious to get funding for education. I am anxious to talk about education and kids. Frankly, I am anxious to talk about education, prekindergarten all the way through age 65, because I think that is the way we should define education. A lot of our students in Minnesota are 55 and going back to school. They have lost their jobs. They worked for the taconite industry on the range. LTV shut down, and they are going back to school so they can get different sets of skills for different employment opportunities to support their families.

So I would put it to you this way: As I see it, the early years, starting with the little ones, who are all under 4 feet tall and beautiful—we should be nice to them. That is prekindergarten and the early elementary school years. We want to make sure every kid in our country has an equal opportunity. Education is so important.

Then, when people get older, out of school, it is the jobs, decent wages, health care coverage. Then, when people get older than that, it is Medicare, it is Social Security, it is not losing your pension. There is the whole issue of pension reform so we do not see more people cheated and some of them financially destroyed with more Enron kinds of situations.

All of this is before us: pension reform legislation, getting it right for health care, reimbursement, Medicare. A lot of our hospitals in rural Minnesota are being killed right now from inadequate Medicare reimbursement. Hospital people have been here talking about what is going to happen to our ability to deliver care. Children's Hospital here—what is going to happen with cuts in medical education?

Other people are talking about more funding, expanding health care coverage, prescription drugs, education, raising the minimum wage, going after hate crimes, ending the discrimination.

I will finish this way. Tomorrow, we are going to have close to 2,000 people here from around the country; families who have struggled with mental illness. By the way, I do not know that there is a person in the Senate who does not know someone in their own family or a friend who has to struggle with this illness, saying: Treat it like any other illness. End the discrimination in this coverage. Don't tell us that if our daughter is struggling with depression, and we are scared to death she might take her life, that the health insurance plan will cover a couple of days in the hospital and that is it; a couple visits to the doctor and that is it. Treat this illness as any other illness. End the discrimination.

We want to bring this bill to the floor of the Senate. It is bipartisan. Senator DOMENICI has been the leader. I have been fortunate enough to join him. We have 66 Senators. We have the majority of the House on board.

There is a lot of important legislation we can pass that will lead to the improvement of the lives of people we represent.

I come to the floor tonight just to express some indignation at this delay, delay, delay strategy, slowing the Senate up, making it a nondecisionmaking body, because I think we are not at our best when we operate that way.

I just as soon have at it, have the debate, have the amendments, bring the legislation up for votes; vote yes, vote no. If you want to filibuster, filibuster; have the votes or don't have the votes. But what colleagues are doing now, at 6 o'clock at night—all gone, and will not let us vote on anything else—is making the Senate a nondecisionmaking body.

Frankly, there is a whole lot we could do to help people. The reason we are here is to help people. We might have different definitions of what it means to help people, so then let's have a debate about that. But, for God's sake, let's deal with the relevant legislation that affects people's lives. And let's do it now. Let's not just continue to grind away and slow everything down and block everything and make it impossible for us to move forward.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. REID. The Senator would agree, would he not, that doing nothing does not meet the needs of the people of Minnesota, the people of Nevada, or anyplace in this country?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my colleague from Nevada, only if you believe that we are here to do nothing is doing nothing defensible in any way, shape, or form. And that is what we are doing right now. Because if you want to gum up the works here in the Senate and block everything and basically make it impossible for us to move forward—which is what our Republican colleagues have done—you can do that. But I will tell you, the people we represent will not be pleased with us if we operate this way.

Mr. REID. Does the Senator know that in this morning's Daily Monitor there is a quote from a Republican—in fact, that is not true. It says: “Senate Republicans say they will not hesitate to slow-walk legislation important to Democrats.”

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am sorry. They will not——

Mr. REID. “ . . . they will not hesitate to slow-walk legislation important to Democrats.” Is the Senator aware of that statement that was made?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Well, see, I would say to my colleague—and he might disagree about this—there are two different issues here. Listen, if you think a piece of legislation is egregious, and you know the rules, have at it, slow it up. Fine. I have done that. I do not want to be inconsistent.

But when you have a statement like this, which says: We will not be reluctant to slow up legislation that is important to Democrats, then you are playing a different kind of game. Then it is straight partisanship. It has nothing to do with whether you feel strongly about it. It has more to do with a strategy of basically being able to say: Aha, a majority in a Democrat-run Senate can't get the job done because we will make sure they can't get the job done.

That is not acceptable. Do you know what that is? That is inside party strategy, total reelection stuff, which then means we do not pass affordable prescription drug legislation, we do not get it right for education, we do not get it right on a whole bunch of other issues that are important to people.

Mr. REID. Finally, would the Senator agree that this legislation now before the Senate that is being slow-walked, as the distinguished Senator from Texas said yesterday, and he reminded me he said it today, he felt it was important to “slow the train down"—would the Senator agree that it is not good for the country to slow-walk or "slow the train down," the Supplemental Appropriations Act for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States?

This is an emergency supplemental bill. Does the Senator believe this is something we should be moving expeditiously?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will just say this to my colleague from Nevada. There are two sets of issues people have, and both of them deal with security. There is an uneasiness about economic security, about the future, about jobs, pensions, good education for kids, health care. It is all there.

The other thing is that people—and with considerable justification—are really worried about physical security. Look what we have been through. People want to make sure that we are going to be able to do everything possible to best defend ourselves, everything possible to head off any kind of attack, everything possible to protect them, to protect their children.

So all of the money for Minnesota and all the other States in the country, for homeland defense, I do not think the people view as a waste. I do not know what the problem is in moving this matter forward. I think people in Minnesota and the people in the country—if they know; and we will make sure they know—disapprove, and for good reason.

I came to the floor to call on my colleagues to get going. Let's do the work. Let's get involved in the work of democracy. Let's not just do delay, delay, delay, all for the sake of some party strategy.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Senator from Washington.

TRANSPORTATION SECURITY

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Transportation, I rise this evening in strong support of the Senate amendment to H.R. 4775, the supplemental appropriations bill for 2002.

During our debate, I have heard complaints from some colleagues that this bill is beyond the President's request. Members are asking why this bill is larger than the administration's request and why it is larger than the House-passed bill. Our bill is larger because it makes the critical investments we need to make in transportation security.

We have spent months listening to the experts and finding out what investments we need to make. We did that in my own subcommittee, and through Senator BYRD's leadership we discovered the needs through full committee hearings on homeland defense. The President's budget and the House budget do not make the necessary investments in transportation security. Our bill does. That is why it is larger than the President's request.

I want to spend a few minutes explaining what is in our bill because it will prove that these are critical investments that the President and the House have not been willing to make.

For example, our bill funds the Transportation Security Administration. It will improve cargo security. It will enhance the security in and around our Nation's airports. It will improve security on inner-city buses. It will allow the Coast Guard to assess the vulnerability of our seaports. It will ensure that the FAA can meet the staffing needs at our Nation's control towers this summer without stealing from the budget for modernization and safety improvements. It will better reimburse our Nation's airports for the considerable expenses they have incurred due to our new security requirements. Overall, it will address the security challenges we all know are out there.

Before I talk about some of the specifics of the bill, I want to correct the record on one point. I have heard some claim that our bill is $2.2 billion larger than the House-passed bill. That is simply not accurate. While some in the House claim their bill is $28.8 billion, it is actually $30.1 billion when we use traditional, customary Congressional Budget Office scorekeeping. Instead of using that method, they have used accounting gimmicks. For some items in their bill they have actually chosen to use OMB scorekeeping; for example, concerning the delays in the availability of airline loan guarantees.

That point aside, the Senate bill is larger than the President's request and the House request, and one of the largest differences is in the area of transportation security. In this area, the funding level in our bill is $928 million or 20 percent higher than the administration's request.

It is important to point out that the House of Representatives actually cut the President's request for transportation security. That is why the Senate bill is $1.244 billion or 29 percent higher than the House-passed bill.

The centerpiece of the transportation chapter of this bill is the $4.7 billion the committee has included for the new Transportation Security Administration, or TSA. That amount is more than $300 million higher than the level requested by the administration and more than $850 million more than what is provided in the House bill.

First and foremost, the funding provided for the TSA will fully cover the administration's request to implement the recently enacted Aviation and Transportation Security Act that the President signed into law.

The House version of the bill imposes several cuts to the administration's request just at the time that the administration is aggressively seeking to meet the deadlines imposed by the Transportation Security Act. The most daunting of these deadlines is the requirement to screen all checked baggage for explosives by the end of this calendar year.

As many of our colleagues, I have been frustrated with the performance of the Transportation Security Administration in implementing those requirements. There has not been sufficient consultation with the Nation's airports or with Congress, and there has not been a sufficient amount of hiring at the TSA of individuals with transportation backgrounds. But still I don't think the solution to these problems is to impose significant cuts on the resources the administration itself has requested.

As with most of my colleagues, I do a lot of flying. I have witnessed the long lines of passengers seeking to get through airport security checkpoints. I have shared the frustration of clearing the security checkpoint only to be screened at the gate again. Our aviation industry is already suffering due to the fact that the high revenue business travelers who provide 40 percent of the airline's revenues are not returning to the skies.

If the Transportation Security Administration does not succeed at its stated goal of providing high-quality customer service and a short wait to clear airport security, our aviation industry is going to suffer a great deal further.

Secretary Mineta and Transportation Under Secretary Magaw have committed themselves to a national standard where no passenger will wait longer than 10 minutes to clear airport security. Frankly, many of us question whether they will ever achieve that goal. That is why the bill before us contains a requirement that the TSA publish on a monthly basis the actual wait times at each airport. I intend to monitor the TSA's performance in this area on a regular basis.

Another area of great concern to me is that air passengers are treated with dignity as they pass through our Nation's airports. If passengers can be expected to be treated as criminals from the moment they walk into the airport, they are not going to fly. Treating air passengers as criminals is not a formula for helping our airlines get back on their feet.

The administration's TSA budget has gone through a very torturous path. A full month passed from the time the Bush administration submitted its $4.4 billion supplemental budget request for TSA to the time Secretary Mineta could sit down with members of our committee and discuss what funds could be used for.

That was not necessarily Secretary Mineta's fault. He was spending that month arguing with the President's Office of Management and Budget on how much money we needed to implement the requirement to screen all checked baggage for explosives. When the noise finally quieted down between the DOT and OMB, the results were, frankly, very disappointing. Rather than deploy a significant number of explosive detection system, EDS, machines that can be easily integrated at the airports' luggage distribution system, the administration has chosen to take a cheaper route. They want to deploy only trace detection machines at three-quarters of our Nation's airports. These trace detection machines are effective at detecting explosives, but they were never designed or intended to be primary explosive detection mechanisms at our airports.

What I find most troubling is the TSA's plan to require more than half of passengers' bags to be opened by Federal enforcement personnel at three-quarters of our Nation's airports. I don't believe the flying public is going to be very warm to the idea that more than half of their luggage will be checked by Federal personnel who will rifle through their baggage in the airports.

As such, the committee has included directives to the TSA to ensure that this regime is implemented with dignity and privacy in mind so passengers will not have to open their baggage in full view of all the other passengers with whom they are traveling.

The committee appropriation for the TSA includes a $35 million initiative in the area of aviation safety and security that was not requested by the administration. Those funds are to be used exclusively for enhanced perimeter security and terminal security. Unfortunately, it is not necessary to get through the security checkpoints to attack our Nation's aviation system.

I believe we need a stronger surveillance regime in our airport terminals, and the funding entered by this committee will be used for that purpose.

Also, the record indicates that more needs to be done to ensure that only those individuals who are properly credentialed and qualified are granted access to the secure areas of our airports.

Over the last few months there has been a spate of indictments and arrests of individuals who used falsified documents to gain access to secure areas of our airports. The additional funding provided by our committee will ensure better protection of those areas.

Now, perhaps these are improvements that the OMB considers to be unnecessary security add-ons, but I recommend that Director Daniels review the testimony of both Secretary Mineta and Under Secretary Magaw before making these complaints. Both of those gentlemen identified perimeter security as an area of significant need. That is not adequately funded under the President's proposal.

In the area of port and maritime security, the committee has included several new funding initiatives over and above those requested by the administration.

In the last supplemental appropriations bill, the committee included $93 million for a new advanced program to beef up security in our Nation's seaports. That $93 million appropriation elicited almost $700 million in applications.

In order to better meet that demand, the Senate bill includes an additional $200 million in the bill and also includes a $28 million initiative to deploy Operation Safe Commerce.

During our full committee's hearings on homeland defense in April and May, we heard testimony from ADM Richard Larrabee. Admiral Larrabee recently retired from the Coast Guard and became the director of commerce for the ports in New York and New Jersey. He was sitting in his office in the World Trade Center when the terrorists attacked and he lost dozens of his colleagues on that day.

Admiral Larrabee, along with CDR Stephen E. Flynn, Coast Guard, Retired, testified before our Appropriations Committee about the urgency of establishing a security regime to security cargo containers from the point of origin to their domestic destination.

In addition to the work of the full committee on this issue, the subcommittee has held 2 hearings on this issue, hearing from the administration, labor, industry, port authorities, and others in the field. It is difficult to overstate the importance of beginning to deal with this set of issues now.

Over 30 million intermodal containers enter our Nation's seaports each year and, frankly, we know very little about what is in them.

Between the Coast Guard and Customs Service, fewer than 2 percent of those containers are ever physically inspected. The Customs Service has only recently begun to beef up the reporting requirements regarding the content of those containers.

The Operation Safe Commerce initiative in our bill will be deployed at the three largest container load centers in our country. Together, those port areas take in more than 50 percent of the containers that enter our country every year.

It is impossible to exaggerate the damage that could be done to our economy if we are suddenly required to slow down the trade lanes into and out of our country because of security concerns.

This initiative will demonstrate the art of the possible when it comes to improving security of container shipping.

Also, within the amount provided for the TSA, the committee provided $20 million for improved security for over-the-road bus operators.

I wish to particularly commend the leadership of my colleague from Georgia, Senator MAX CLELAND, on this issue. As he notes, intercity bus transportation is part of our country's vital infrastructure. The Nation's intercity bus operators are just beginning to use the most rudimentary methods to better ensure security of bus passengers. Given the frequency with which we see terrorists overseas use buses as a venue for horrific acts of terrorism, this is the minimal investment we should be making in this area.

The Senate bill provides slightly more than $666 million for the U.S. Coast Guard. Those funds will be used to accelerate the Coast Guard's planned vulnerability assessments of our Nation's seaports.

Funds will also be used to expedite procurement of critical surface and aviation assets and to launch a new maritime domain awareness program to dramatically improve the Coast Guard's readiness to deal with domestic terrorist threats.

During our committee's hearing with Admiral Larrabee, we were disappointed to hear that the Coast Guard doesn't plan to conduct its vulnerability assessment of the second largest shipping port in the United States for 2 years. The committee did not consider that to be a satisfactory plan. So our bill grants the Coast Guard funds to expedite these port vulnerability assessments across the country so we can better secure these gateways of the globe.

The bill also includes $115 million that was not requested by the administration for the emergency funding needs of the Federal Aviation Administration. Since September 11, the FAA has had to spend at least $100 million to dramatically enhance security around its own critical air traffic control towers.

As a result, the FAA now finds itself $100 million short of the amount it needs to provide critical overtime expenses for air traffic controllers as we enter the busy summertime travel season.

Senators will remember, as I do, that during the two summers prior to September 11, air transportation in our country was rife with delays. If we don't adequately fund the shortfall in overtime at the FAA, we can expect to experience those delays again.

The administration's budget proposed to meet this $100 million shortfall by transferring funds already appropriated to improve air traffic control equipment, safety, and capacity. To me, that is not a responsible solution. We are years, if not decades, behind where we need to be in modernizing our air traffic control system, and we have huge, unmet needs at our airports.

That is why our bill provides the $100 million needed to pay for the air traffic controllers without stealing from those other accounts.

The Senate bill also includes an additional $100 million to better compensate the Nation's airports for the security costs they have incurred since September 11. Last year, the committee appropriated $175 million for that purpose.

But the airports committed almost $500 million in costs to the FAA for this funding. This additional $100 million will better reimburse the Nation's small, medium, and large hub airports for the costs associated with the security directives issued by the FAA since September 11.

Finally, separate from the issue of homeland defense, the bill includes a provision drafted by Senator HARRY REID and myself authorizing a higher obligation ceiling for the Federal Aid Highway Program for fiscal year 2003.

As Members should be aware, the administration's budget proposes that overall highway funding to the States be drastically slashed by $8.6 billion next year. That represents a cut of more than 27 percent.

Senator REID serves as the chairman of the authorizing subcommittee for highways, and the provision he and I drafted will ensure that, as part of the appropriations process for 2003, the Appropriations Committee will restore at least $4.5 billion of the President's cut and perhaps as much as $5.7 billion.

I believe my colleagues will agree that during this uncertain time in our economy, we must do our best to avoid the President's proposal to slash thousands of jobs and cut our investment in our Nation's transportation infrastructure.

The provision included in this bill—authorized by Senator REID and myself—will go a long way toward that goal.

I also thank my colleague from Alabama, Senator SHELBY, the ranking member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Transportation, for his assistance in developing the transportation chapter of this bill.

I also thank Senator BYRD and Senator STEVENS for the bipartisan leadership of the Appropriations Committee and for their receptive approach to the views of our subcommittee. Both leaders demonstrated needed vision and commitment to exploring and understanding these issues of critical importance to our Nation's security and prosperity.

I believe the transportation chapter of this bill represents a strong, comprehensive approach to our homeland security needs, and I look forward to arguing for every dollar of this funding when we go to conference with the House of Representatives.

Each item was developed with thought and care. Each item represents an investment that needs to be made. Each item will help build a more secure America.

The critics of this bill, and those who are impeding progress, put those investments at risk. I ask: What investment in airport security don't you want to make? What investment in seaport security don't you want to make? What will you say to the American people—our soldiers and sailors who are defending the Nation—when we don't make these needed investments?

This is a reasonable bill. It takes a reasonable approach to investing in America's security needs.

It was reported unanimously by our committee, and I hope the Senate can dispense with the delays and get on with passing this very important bill. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to briefly speak about the legislation before us and to lend my support to the supplemental appropriations bill. I commend Chairman BYRD and Senator STEVENS for a job well done. They took extensive testimony in many hearings to determine the needs for homeland security, as well as many other needs, and they have incorporated those provisions in this bill.

I also salute and commend my colleague from Washington State, Senator MURRAY, for giving an excellent discussion of the transportation aspects of this bill. She indicated the detailed and the careful deliberation that went into the crafting of this legislation and suggested also the reality that was confronted by the committee in hearing testimony from witnesses who indicated it might take up to 2 years to do a survey of a port when, in fact, the American people are demanding action immediately, not 2 years from now—when the threat is immediate, not hypothetical or 2 years removed.

As a result, I find it ironic, to say the least, that opponents of this bill would simply say we will sacrifice all the needed expenses because the total that we recommend is higher than that recommended by the President of the United States.

Frankly, if you asked most Americans, they would say we are not spending enough on homeland security. If you asked them how much they would want us to spend, it would be: Spend as much as you need to ensure not just one port or one airfield but every port and every airfield, and to ensure every community in America is protected. That is what this bill attempts to do.

This is a downpayment on a much larger bill because the issues and threats we confront will not be banished within a few weeks or a few months. It is long term, ongoing, requiring a tremendous commitment of resources. This is a good downpayment and one that I support wholeheartedly.

The legislation includes within its provisions $14 billion for the cost of our operations in Afghanistan. To delay this bill any longer because of some objections or some overall objection and compromise for delaying funds for Afghanistan, to me, is inconceivable. We have those resources which we must commit and we must spend immediately.

The bill also includes $5.5 billion for the recovery of New York City—again, expenses that we cannot ignore, cannot defer. We have to respond.

There is $4.4 billion for aviation security, once again, a critical aspect of our response to the very real threats we face today because of terrorist attacks on the United States.

The bill contains $1.95 billion for international programs to aid the war on terrorism. These are important complements to our military operations. The administration speaks often, and correctly, about draining the swamp where the terrorists reside. That cannot be done by wishing it away. We have to have resources to deal with profound problems across the globe—inadequate education systems, the overall threat of poverty, lack of economic development—all of those factors that contribute directly sometimes, but certainly indirectly, to the atmosphere that encourages terrorism, encourages those who attack us.

I just returned, with some of my colleagues, from a conference of defense ministers in Singapore. If we look across the globe, this threat is very real and very sobering. We need resources to mount a counteroffensive. Those resources are not just military, they also involve assistance to local governments that are assisting us by intelligence operations, by using their military forces and their intelligence apparatus to help us in this war on terror. For all these reasons, we need to pass this bill and do it promptly.

One of the major provisions of the bill is $3 billion for homeland defense, and that incorporates many issues—first responders, police and fire—to make sure these very brave men and women have the materials and the know-how to confront a wholly different threat. I do not think anyone conceived even a year ago that our police and fire departments would be at the front lines of sophisticated attacks by terrorists against the United States, involving mass casualty operations and massive destruction, yet they are. We have to give them the tools to do the job, to protect themselves, and to protect the communities they serve so well. Those provisions are within this bill also.

We have to protect our nuclear facilities. It was shocking to me—and again this goes to the credibility of the administration saying they oppose this bill because we are spending too much. It was reported recently in the press that the authorities responsible for protecting our nuclear facilities asked for considerably more money and were told by OMB: No, we cannot afford it.

We are not going to accept that answer. We want those facilities protected. Where there are nuclear powerplants, where there are nuclear facilities of the Department of Energy throughout this country, we want those facilities guarded, protected to prevent a catastrophic terrorist attack. That is one aspect of this bill which is important also.

We also have to recognize the issue of biological terror. We witnessed firsthand in this Senate a biological attack. It is expensive, and we simply cannot wait for the next attack. We have to anticipate and, through our wise preventive actions, we hope preclude any type of attack. But that is not the result of wishful thinking and hoping it will not happen. That is putting real resources into prevention, into response, into those things that will prepare us for any type of mass casualty attack—biological, nuclear, or even a conventional weapon that is deployed against our people.

I believe the chairman, the ranking member, and the subcommittee chairmen and women and their counterparts, the ranking members, have done a very good job responding to the concerns.

In the Appropriations Committee when I sat and listened to this testimony from the people who are responsible in the Federal Government, at the State level, and in the local communities, I did not hear: You are spending too much. I heard: We need more help; we have to be responsive. Their position is not sitting here in Washington, it is literally on the front lines of this war on terror.

If we listened to the men and women who are directly responsible for protecting the American people from terrorist threats, I think they would say in a very strong and uniform chorus: Pass this bill now. It is not too expensive. In fact, it is simply a downpayment on significant costs we will face in the foreseeable future.

Our enemies are implacable. They are determined. They are reorganizing to strike again, and if we do not seize the moment and put the resources into a concerted, deliberate, expeditious effort to protect the American people, we will regret it and the American people will suffer the consequences. I urge we pass this legislation as quickly as possible.

I yield the floor.

SENATOR AND MRS. BYRD'S 65TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a week ago today, on the 29th of May, I was fortunate to celebrate 65 years of marriage, 65 years of wedded bliss—in this day and age, a somewhat uncommon occurrence. I am sorry this is so, for I wish that more people could know the joy I have had in finding one's soulmate early in life and then sharing that deep companionship over many happy years.

In the 16th century, John Ford wrote:

The joys of marriage are the heaven on earth,
Life's paradise, great princess, the soul's
quiet,
Sinews of Concord, earthly immortality,
Eternity of pleasures; no restoratives
Like to a constant woman.

Mr. President, my strength, my comfort, was born Erma Ora James, the daughter of a West Virginia coal miner. She was my childhood sweetheart. We married in 1937, in a time of great hardship and trial. Together, we have seen great changes in the world—a world war and numerous other conflagrations around the globe, the dawn of the nuclear age, the advent of space exploration, the collapse of communism, breathtaking medical advances, astounding technological growth, rapid social changes, and resurgent terrors. We have known the highs of life and we have known the lows of family life—the delight of two fine daughters growing up, marrying, and having children of their own; the tragedy of the loss of a grandson; the indescribable love of holding newborn great granddaughters in our arms. For two hillbillies—that is what we are, two hillbillies—from West Virginia, it has been an exciting and wild ride, and I am glad I have had Erma to share it.

In my mind's eye, Erma Byrd will always be that sweet, young girl who allowed me to woo her with candy and chewing gum that were given to me by another schoolmate. She is a strong woman, but she is a quiet woman—even somewhat shy. I know she would rather that I were not speaking right now, and that is just the way she is—never seeking the limelight, keeping her focus on her family and her home. Being the wife of a Senator has never impressed her. She never developed any airs of self-importance, and she has never let me develop any airs either—although some people may think otherwise. She keeps me grounded, or, as my old mom used to say, she never lets me "get above my raising." When I start to get a bit too proud, puffed up with my own accomplishments, she doesn't pop my balloon but, rather, knows how to gently deflate it before it swells too large. But she has always been there for me, helping me to campaign, always making herself available to the people of West Virginia. She is my biggest cheerleader and she is my kindest critic.

Erma has always been an equal partner in our marriage. Her domain is the home, where she rules as a benevolent dictator. There I am not Senator, just ROBERT. I mop the kitchen floor for her each Saturday morning—or I used to up until about a month ago. She will admit that I don't do the windows. When the duties of the Senate filled all my waking hours, and when I was going to school at night to earn my law degree, Erma kept the home fires burning. She took the lead in bringing up our two daughters, teaching them to be the fine women, mothers, and grandmothers they are. Without her help and her support, I could not have put the level of effort into my work that the people of West Virginia deserve and have come to expect; I would not have a law degree. Erma proves the old adage that "behind every successful man is a successful woman." Perhaps Alfred Lord Tennyson put it better when he wrote in "The Princess" as follows:

> The woman's cause is the man's: they rise or sink together.

Mr. President, together, Erma and I are complete and whole, a total that is more than the sum of its parts.

The 65th wedding anniversary is, by tradition, a diamond anniversary. In my life, Erma Ora Byrd is the diamond. She is my strength in times of fear, my comfort in times of sorrow, my perfect complement. She is a priceless treasure, a multifaceted woman of great insight and wisdom, of quiet humor and common sense. She is the reservoir of serenity at which one can slake the thirst of a stressful day.

I can only thank her and thank the Creator that she has put up with me for 65 years and now 1 week.

Mr. President, I would like to close with the words of Charles Jeffreys in a poem he titled "We Have Lived and Loved Together." I dedicate it to my wife Erma and to all the lucky, happy couples who have, like us, been fortunate to spend a lifetime together. To the young married people who work for me, to all who are starting on their married lives together, I wish them well, and I hope that someday this poem will speak for them as well.

We have lived and loved together
Through many changing years;
We have shared each other's gladness
And wept each other's tears;
I have known ne'er a sorrow
That was long unsoothed by thee;
For thy smiles can make a summer
Where darkness else would be.

Like the leaves that fall around us
In autumn's fading hours,
Are the traitor's smiles, that darken
When the cloud of sorrow lowers;
And though many such we've known, love,
Too prone, alas, to range,
We both can speak of one love
Which time can never change.

We have lived and loved together
Through many changing years,
We have shared each other's gladness
And wept each other's tears.
And let us hope the future,
As the past has been will be:
I will share with thee my sorrows,
And thou thy joys with me.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

JUDGE EUGENE SULLIVAN

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Judge Eugene R. Sullivan of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

Since his graduation from West Point, Judge Sullivan has worked diligently to ensure the betterment of our National being. He first proved himself as an Airborne Ranger in Vietnam. His gallantry earned him the Bronze Star and the Air Medal, to name just a few of his decorations.

Upon leaving the Army, Judge Sullivan has led a most amazing life. He first graduated from the Georgetown University Law Center. Following his time at Georgetown, Judge Sullivan went on to work for the law firm of Patton-Boggs. During his tenure there, he had the privilege of serving on the Defense Team for President Richard Nixon.

In the years following, Judge Sullivan returned to public service as an attorney for the Justice Department and as the General Counsel for the United States Air Force. In addition to his duties as General Counsel, the Judge also served as the Chief Legal Advisor to the National Reconnaissance Office and eventually as the Governor of Wake Island. His service was most exemplary.

Since 1986, Judge Sullivan has served as a member of the Federal bench. Many of us had the privilege of presiding over his appointment and his subsequent confirmation as the chief judge of the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

In closing, I want to publicly thank Judge Eugene Sullivan for his service and dedication to our Nation. Moreover, I thank him for being my friend and wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

ENERGY BILL CONFERENCE

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, about 2 weeks ago I urged that the House leadership go ahead and appoint conferees for the energy bill on which we should be in conference at this point.

As Senators will remember, we passed the energy bill in the Senate on April 25. The respective leaders of the two parties appointed conferees on May 1. Since then, we have not seen any action on the House side to appoint conferees so we could begin a conference with the House of Representatives on this very important bill.

The House bill is in excess of 500 pages. The bill we passed in the Senate after 6 weeks of floor debate is nearly 1,000 pages in length. It will take several weeks to come to agreement on a joint proposal we can take back to the two Houses and, hopefully, to the President.

The sooner we can get started, the better for everyone's point of view. It is in the country's interests that we try to resolve the differences between the House and the Senate and try to enact an energy bill this year. As long as we do not have conferees named on the House side, that makes it extremely difficult. I, again, urge the leadership on the House side to appoint their conferees.

When I raised this issue last month, one of my colleagues announced he had heard that the House of Representatives was going to appoint its conferees on the first day back after the recess. Well, that would have been yesterday, and we still don't have any forward motion. I am getting ready to borrow Senator LOTT's bloodhounds to go looking for the House conferees.

We have an immense undertaking before us in terms of getting a balanced and comprehensive energy bill to the President's desk. The House bill is over 500 pages and the Senate bill is nearly 1000 pages. There are some similarities between the bills, but some very important differences, as well.

Conferences on authorizing legislation are never easy. The bioterrorism bill, for example, took months to conference. The bankruptcy bill has been in conference for over a year. To have a successful conference on the energy bill will take a lot of careful planning on the part of the leadership on both sides in both Houses of Congress. As I mentioned before the recess, even the most elementary questions, such as who should chair the conference, seem to be in dispute, although I think that the precedents are clearly in the Senate's favor.

We need to get going, and the actual naming of conferees by the House of Representatives, whenever it happens, will only be a start to a process of figuring out how the conference will be structured, whether there will be subconferences, and which issues to address first. I am anxious to start to work with whomever the House of Representatives decides will be my counterpart to initiate the organizational discussions.

To be most effective with the use of our time, we may have to think about taking on the big issues first to see if there is an overall energy bill that can achieve a critical mass of support on both sides of both House and Senate. If we adopt an incremental approach of working on minor issues first, and leaving all the hard issues to the end, we may be still working on clearing the legislative underbrush in December.

I hope that we can see some progress soon on starting the energy conference.

SUPPLEMENT TO RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, pursuant to rule XXXVI, paragraph 2 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I am submitting for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a supplement to the Rules of Procedure of the Select Committee on Intelligence for purposes of the joint inquiry into the events of September 11, 2001, being conducted by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

I ask unanimous consent they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE—SUPPLEMENTAL JOINT INQUIRY RULES

In connection with the Joint Inquiry with the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence into the events of September 11, 2001, authorized by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence ("SSCI") pursuant to section 5(a)(1) of Senate Resolution 400, 94th Congress, and Rule 6 of the SSCI's Rules of Procedure, and pursuant to Rule XXVI.2 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the SSCI adopts the following Joint Inquiry Rules to supplement the SSCI's Rules of Procedure for purposes of the Joint Inquiry only:

JOINT INQUIRY RULE 1. JOINT PROCEEDINGS

1.1. The SSCI may conduct hearings jointly with the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. All joint hearings shall be considered hearings of both Committees.

1.2. The Rules of Procedure of both the SSCI and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence shall apply in all hearings and other proceedings of this Joint Inquiry, except where superseded by these Joint Inquiry Rules, provided that, at any joint hearing, if any rules of the two Committees are inconsistent, the rules of that Committee whose Chairman or his designee is presiding shall apply.

1.3. For the purposes of the proceedings of this Joint Inquiry, all employees on the staff of either Committee working on the Joint Inquiry shall be considered to be acting on behalf of both Committees.

JOINT INQUIRY RULE 2. HEARINGS

2.1. All testimony at hearings shall be taken under oath or affirmation.

2.2. Subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses, or the production of documents, records, or other materials, at hearings may be authorized by vote of the SSCI pursuant to SSCI Rule 2, or by the SSCI's Chairman and Vice Chairman, acting jointly.

JOINT INQUIRY RULE 3. DEPOSITIONS

3.1. All testimony taken, and all documents, records, or other materials produced, at a deposition of the SSCI shall be considered part of the record of both Committees.

3.2. Subpoenas for depositions and notices for the taking of depositions may be authorized by vote of the SSCI pursuant to SSCI Rule 2, or by the SSCI's Chairman and Vice Chairman, acting jointly, and shall be issued and served as provided in SSCI Rule 7. Deposition notices shall specify a time and place of examination and the name or names of Committee members or staff who will take the deposition. Depositions shall be in private and shall, for purposes of the rules of both Committees, be deemed to be testimony given before the Committees in executive session.

3.3. Witnesses shall be examined upon oath administered by a member of the SSCI or by an individual authorized by local law to administer oaths. Questions may be propounded by members or staff of either Committee. If a witness objects to a question and refuses to testify, the Committee members or staff present may proceed with the deposition, or may, at that time or subsequently, seek a ruling on the objection from the Chairman of the SSCI or any member of the SSCI designated by the Chairman. The SSCI shall not initiate procedures leading to civil or criminal enforcement unless the witness refuses to testify after having been ordered and directed to answer by the Chairman or a member designated by the Chairman.

3.4. Procedures for the attendance of counsel for witnesses at, and for the inspection, correction, and filing of transcripts of, depositions shall be as provided in SSCI Rules 8.4 and 8.7.

PROFESSIONAL BOXING AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2002

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, on May 22, I was joined by my colleague, Senator DORGAN, in introducing the Professional Boxing Amendments Act of 2002. This legislation would strengthen existing Federal boxing laws by making uniform certain health and safety standards, establish a centralized medical registry to be used by local commissions to protect boxers, reduce arbitrary practices of sanctioning organizations, and provide uniformity in ranking criteria and contractual guidelines. This legislation would also establish a Federal regulatory entity to oversee professional boxing and set uniform standards for certain aspects of the sport.

Since 1996, Congress has acted to improve the sport of boxing by passing two laws, the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996, and the Muhammad Ali Boxing Reform Act of 2000. These laws were intended to establish uniform standards to improve the health and safety of boxers, and to better protect them from the sometimes coercive, exploitative, and unethical business practices of promoters, managers, and sanctioning organizations.

While the Professional Boxing Safety Act, as amended by the Muhammad Ali Act, has had some positive effects on the sport, I am concerned by the repeated failure of some State and tribal boxing commissions to comply with the law, and the lack of enforcement of the law by both Federal and State law enforcement officials. Corruption remains endemic in professional boxing, and the sport continues to be beset with a variety of problems, some beyond the scope of the current system of local regulation.

Therefore, the bill we are introducing today would further strengthen Federal boxing laws, and also create a Federal regulatory entity, the "United States Boxing Administration", USBA, to oversee the sport. The USBA would be headed by an Administrator, appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The primary functions of the USBA would be to protect the health, safety, and general interests of boxers. More specifically, the USBA would, among other things: administer Federal boxing laws and coordinate with other Federal regulatory agencies to ensure that these laws are enforced; oversee all professional boxing matches in the United States; and work with the boxing industry and local commissions to improve the status and standards of the sport. The USBA would license boxers, promoters, managers, and sanctioning organizations, and revoke or suspend such licenses if the USBA believes that such action is in the public interest. No longer would a boxer like Mike Tyson be able to forum-shop for a State with a weak commission if he is undeserving of a license.

The fines collected and licensing fees imposed by the USBA would be used to fund a percentage of its activities. The USBA would also maintain a centralized database of medical and statistical information pertaining to boxers in the United States that would be used confidentially by local commissions in making licensing decisions.

Let me be clear. The USBA would not be intended to micro-manage boxing by interfering with the daily operations of local boxing commissions. Instead, the USBA would work in consultation with local commissions, and the Administrator would only exercise his/her authority should reasonable grounds exist for intervention.

The problems that plague the sport of professional boxing compromise the safety of boxers and undermine the credibility of the sport in the eyes of the public. I believe this bill provides a realistic approach to curbing these problems, and I urge my colleagues to support this proposal.

TUNA PROVISION IN THE ANDEAN TRADE PREFERENCES ACT

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to express my deep concern with the tuna provision in the Andean Trade Preferences Expansion Act (ATPEA) portion of the Trade Act of 2002. The purpose of ATPEA is to encourage economic opportunities other than drug production and trade in Andean nations. Previously, canned tuna has not been included in the list of items given preferential tariff treatment. The provision included in the Trade Act would authorize the President to extend duty-free treatment to a specified level of imports of canned tuna from Andean nations.

The Philippines, an important ally in the war on terrorism, is likely to be harmed economically by the unintended consequences of this action. The canneries and most of the tuna fishing fleet of the Philippines are based on the island of Mindanao. The tuna industry directly accounts for 45,000 jobs on Mindanao and approximately 105,000 people are employed in supporting industries. These jobs are being risked by the Andean Trade Preferences Act.

It is also important to note that the Abu Sayyaf, which is believed to be linked to the al-Qaida terrorist network, operates in the Mindanao region. The Abu Sayyaf organization has been responsible for kidnappings, executions, and bombings. U.S. Armed Forces are assisting the Philippines in combating the terrorist group. Providing preferential tariff treatment to tuna from Andean nations has the possibility of destabilizing a region in which we have U.S. troops involved in anti-terrorism operations.

It is my hope that the conferees can effectively address this important national security issue and prevent economic disruption in a region where a war on terrorism is being fought.

The tuna tariffs reveal a need for enhanced coordination of trade preferences. A thoughtful strategy of balancing trade preferences must be developed to prevent future policy inconsistencies in the future.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred July 7, 1993 in Azusa, CA. A gay man was beaten to death. The attackers, Joshua Swindell, 21, and Steven Matus, 17, were charged with murder and committing a hate crime in connection with the incident.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

INITIAL SCOPE OF JOINT INQUIRY

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Initial Scope of the Joint Inquiry into the events of September 11, 2002, being conducted by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREAMBLE

To reduce the risk of future terrorist attacks; to honor the memories of the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks by conducting a thorough search for facts to answer the many questions that their families and many Americans have raised; and to lay a basis for assessing the accountability of institutions and officials of government.

THE SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE AND HOUSE PERMANENT SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE ADOPT THIS INITIAL SCOPE OF JOINT INQUIRY

Pursuant to section 5(a)(1) of Senate Resolution 400, 94th Congress, Rule 6 of the Rules of Procedure of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, Rule XI(1)(b) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and Rule 9 of the Rules of Procedure of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the two Committees have authorized an investigation, to be conducted as a Joint Inquiry, into the Intelligence Community's activities before and after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States. The Committees have undertaken this Joint Inquiry pursuant to their responsibility to oversee and make continuing studies of the intelligence activities and programs of the United States Government and all other authority vested in the Committees.

The purpose of this Joint Inquiry is—

(a) to conduct an investigation into, and study of, all matters that may have any tendency to reveal the full facts about—

(1) the evolution of the international terrorist threat to the United States, the response of the United States Government including that of the Intelligence Community to international terrorism, from the creation of the Director of Central Intelligence's Counterterrorist Center in 1986 to the present, and what the Intelligence Community had, has, or should have learned from all sources of information, including any terrorist attacks, or attempted ones, about the international terrorist threat to the United States;

(2) what the Intelligence Community knew prior to September 11 about the scope and nature of any possible attacks against the United States or United States interests by international terrorists, including by any of the hijackers or their associates, and what was done with that information;

(3) what the Intelligence Community has learned since the events of September 11 about the persons associated with those events, and whether any of that information suggests actions that could or should have been taken to learn of, or prevent, those events;

(4) whether any information developed before or after September 11 indicates systemic problems that may have impeded the Intelligence Community from learning of or preventing the attacks in advance, or that, if remedied, could help the Community identify and prevent such attacks in the future;

(5) how and to what degree the elements of the Intelligence Community have interacted with each other, as well as other parts of federal, state, and local governments with respect to identifying, tracking, assessing, and coping with international terrorist threats; as well as biological, chemical, radiological, or nuclear threats, whatever their source (such as the Anthrax attack of 2001)

(6) the ways in which the Intelligence Community's responses to past intelligence problems and challenges, whether or not related to international terrorism, have affected its counterterrorism efforts; and

(7) any other information that would enable the Joint Inquiry, and the Committees in the performance of their continuing responsibilities, to make such recommendations, including recommendations for new or amended legislation and any administrative or structural changes, or other actions, as they determine to be necessary or desirable to improve the ability of the Intelligence Community to learn of, and prevent, future international terrorist attacks; and

(b) to fulfill the Constitutional oversight and informing functions of the Congress with regard to the matters examined in the Joint Inquiry.

BROWNBACK-CORZINE AMENDMENT TO THE ENERGY BILL

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I want to engage the Senator from New Jersey in a colloquy regarding our amendment, Senate amendment number 3239, which was adopted by the Senate and became Title XI of the final Senate energy bill. In particular, I would like to clarify the intended role of the Department of Commerce in implementing the greenhouse gas reporting system and registry that our amendment would create.

Mr. CORZINE. I believe the intent of the amendment in this regard is that the Department of Commerce would primarily be involved in developing measurement standards for monitoring of emissions, as well as verification technologies and methods to ensure the maintenance of a consistent and technically accurate record or emissions, emission reductions and atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases for the database. This is clearly stated in Sections 1103(b)(2) and 1106(a)(2)(D) of the bill. Within the Department of Commerce, it is my intent that these functions would primarily be carried out by the National Institute of Standards and Technology, or NIST. Is this also the intent of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BROWNBACK. I concur with my colleague that NIST is the intended organization within the Department of Commerce that would primarily be responsible for carrying out the Department's role in implementing Title XI of the energy bill. I thank the Senator from New Jersey for joining me in this colloquy.

Mr. CORZINE. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his work on this important issue.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TOWN OF DUBLIN CELEBRATES 250TH ANNIVERSARY

• Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of the great town of Dublin, New Hampshire. This year, as our Nation observes the 226th anniversary of our independence, Dublin will celebrate the 250th anniversary of its founding. It is therefore timely and appropriate that we recognize this unique New Hampshire community.

Dublin's rich history is closely entwined with that of our country's. Its first settler was William Thornton whose brother, Matthew Thornton, was a delegate to the Continental Congress and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. In fact, Matthew Thornton, although he never lived there, was one of the original proprietors of what was then called Monadnock No. 3 but soon became known as Dublin after the Irish city. Although the "winds are often strong." as described in the official history of Dublin, the air "is pure and bracing" and the location proved to be ideal. By the year 1775, the town's population had rapidly increased to 305 people. Many came from the Colony of Massachusetts seeking greater economic opportunities and were undoubtably drawn by the area's natural beauty, dominated most notably by Mount Monadnock.

As our country strived to build a government free of British control, so too did Dublin. In a tradition that continues to this day, the citizens elected Thomas Morse, Henry Strongman and Benjamin Mason to the Town's first Board of Selectmen. Of course, New Englanders, and New Hampshirites in particular, are known for their fierce independence. It is no surprise then that twenty-six Dublin residents fought in the American Revolution. At least four town residents were at the Battle of Bunker Hill—Jonathan Morse, Richard Gilchrist, Thomas Green and John Swan. Richard Gilchrist vividly demonstrated the ideals of courage and honor by carrying upon his back from the field of battle Thomas Green, who had been severely wounded in that fight. Jonathan Morse later served at the battles of Bennington, Ticonderoga and Monmouth. He was later described by a friend as being "so humane and honest, so rough and ready that, had he lived to this time, he might have been President of the United States." I am sure that such a sentiment could describe many other past and present citizens of Dublin.

To this day, Dublin continues to be a vibrant community with a population of over 1400 people. Dublin is home to Yankee Magazine, which wonderfully chronicles New England's culture, and the Old Farmers Almanac. As a side note, I would point out that since it was first published in 1792, the Almanac has never given an incorrect weather forecast. Because of how this town perfectly embodies this way of life, it became a well-known summer resort for artists and families from around the country. One of the most famous visitors was Mark Twain who spent the summers of 1905 and 1906 here. His love of the town was clearly evident. His response to a reporter's question that "Dublin is the one place I have always longed for, but never knew existed in fact till now" best captures the special feeling Dublin has on those who live there and those who simply pass through its borders.

So, on this the 250th anniversary of Dublin, we salute its citizens and honor their accomplishments, their love of country and their overwhelming spirit of independence.•

WE THE PEOPLE

• Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, on May 4-6, 2002, students from Tahoma High School in Washington State joined more than 1,200 students from across the United States in Washington, D.C. to compete in the national finals of the We the People: The Citizen and the Constitution 2002 National Competition.

As a result of their hard work and preparation, the team from Tahoma High won an honorable mention award in the national finals, becoming one of just 22 schools from all across America to come away from the national finals with an award. I congratulate all the students who participated: Heather Aldrich, Laura Baily, Andy Bauer, Travis Beckett, Lance Bishop, Jonathan Bongard, Sheena Clark, Aimee Craig, Mike DeSisto, Casey Dillon, Kiran Garcha, Tyler Hawks, Katie Kennedy, Rebecca Kennedy, David Knotts, Alissa Loudiana, Julia Lowe, Ryan Marsh, Jamaica Morris, Michaela Soldano, Kellie Stendal, Stefanie Waldron; Emily Walters, Ryan Wells, and Jessica Woodell.

This competition marks the eighth consecutive year that students from Tahoma High School have represented the State of Washington at the national finals. I recognize the dedication of the Tahoma High School faculty, particularly Stephanie Davis, the team's advisor, as well as the hard work and commitment of the students who have made this tremendous accomplishment possible.

Successful participation in the We the People program requires students to achieve a high caliber of constitutional knowledge. During the three-day national competition, the students presented oral arguments on constitutional topics before a panel of judges. Their testimony was followed by a period of questioning by the judges, who probed the depth of their understanding and ability to apply their constitutional knowledge.

Again, I applaud the accomplishments of the Tahoma High School team. I am confident that their success in the national competition will prove to be a useful tool later in their lives as they continue to participate in the governance of our Nation.•

WOMAN OF MONTANA ESSAY WINNERS

• Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I would like to congratulate the winners of the American Association of University Women "Woman of Montana" essay contest, Gina Young. Her essay is entitled "Rehbein." I also congratulate Maureen Sullivan. Her essay is entitled "Effie Dockstander Holmes: A Woman for All Seasons."

The essays follow:

REHBEIN

When I think of a woman who has dedicated most of her life helping Montana citizens, I think of my grandmother, Mary Alice Rehbein. For fifty years, she has served the state of Montana in the field of public health. During her years of work and dedication, she has earned the respect of people all-over Montana, including myself. From her I have learned how to set goals, to accept the differences of others, and to be responsible for myself.

R represents responsibility. Mary Alice Rehbein was born in Jamestown, North Dakota, July 20, 1918, to Ed and Mary Louise Barnhart. She had only nine short years to learn the responsibilities and lessons of life from her mother. At the age of nine, Mary Alice lost her mother to breast cancer. After that tragic death, her father could not stand the loss and moved away from Jamestown leaving Mary Alice to be raised by very strict, practical, but loving grandparents. Her grandparents felt that an education was an absolute must. Mary Alice knew that an education was the only way she would be able to survive in the future.

E stands for her life-long education. Mary Alice Rehbein graduated from high school in 1937. She attended business college for two years while selling insurance. Mary Alice realized that she was not going to be very successful at this career because she was a woman. This was the time in Mary Alice's life that she needed to re-evaluate her career choice and money situation. She finally withdrew the last seventy-five dollars remaining of her mother's life insurance policy. Mary Alice found that she could enroll in nursing school for exactly that amount, so she jumped at the chance of a lifetime and invested her last penny in her education. Mary Alice's lifetime of nursing and honors began upon the completion of her nursing degree in 1943.

H symbolizes Mary Alice Rehbein's various honors. She has been recognized and received numerous awards throughout her years of service. Some of her honors include Sidney's "Woman of the Year" award; the Montana State Department of Health's Public Health Nursing Award for Outstanding and Meritorious Work; an award from the Montana State Mental Health Association; an award from the National League of Nursing Board; and the Dr. Mary Souls Nursing Award, which is the highest honor bestowed on a nurse in Montana and North Dakota. Mary Alice has also held many prestigious offices. She served as a representative to the National League of Nursing Advisory Board for the Western Region of the United States; held the position of the vice-president for the State Nurses Association; and is currently the President of the Montana Nursing League and a member of the Governor's Advisory Board for Aging. Each honor and position has recognized her leadership and the services she has given to public health for the state of Montana. Mary Alice Rehbein is proud of her honors and offices, but she feels the greatest reward has been to provide beneficial health care to the citizens of the community.

B portrays how beneficial Mary Alice has been to people of Montana. She was the Richland County Health Nurse for forty-five years. During her years of working she saved lives, helped deliver babies, gave shots to patients for illness and immunizations, checked children's posture and teeth, administered medical attention to the rural areas with orders from the doctors, provided nursing care to schools, monitored blood pressures, and provided home health care for those in need. She has traveled to every state, with the exception of Maine and Alaska, as well as to hospitals in Australia, New Zealand, and Russia. In each of her expeditions she studied, shared information, and acquired knowledge about the availability and kinds of community health. Mary Alice Rehbein has enjoyed her nursing career.

E denotes all of her efforts and enjoyment. Mary Alice has spent a lifetime providing nursing service and teaching people about health care. Nothing has been more fulfilling than to see the joy of people, at any age, caring about their health, says Mary Alice, and to employ new nursing ideas.

I exemplifies the innovative nursing ideas Mary Alice has brought to Eastern Montana. Besides the general health program that Mary Alice Rehbein ran, she was responsible for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse program until it had funding of its own. She ran the monthly, blood pressure clinics for Richland County and was active in finding ways to provide immunization clinics to isolated residents. In the 1950's, she began encouraging the Mental Health professionals of Montana to provide services to people in outlying areas of Eastern Montana. She has been instrumental in providing home health care to many people who could not get or afford health care. In addition, she provided hospice care. Mary Alice says that nursing is one profession that will not be replaced with total technology, since people will always need "hands on" nursing care.

N depicts the profession of nursing. Mary Alice Rehbein is the oldest, insured, and licensed nurse in the state of Montana. After her numerous years devoted to helping the residents of Montana, she has retired as Richland County Public Health Nurse. In her free time she visits lonely people who do not have families to talk to, she looks in on people who need nursing care, she continues to stay up-to-date on the latest nursing trends, and she still makes time to take blood pressures in her small community.

Out of all of the women who have helped the state of Montana, Mary Alice Rehbein has been one of the most remarkable. She has dedicated her life to helping the people of Montana and has instilled in me the belief that the true treasure of life is a person's health. Therefore, I believe Mary Alice REHBEIN is one of the Great Montana Women.

EFFIE DOCKSTADER HOLMES, A WOMAN FOR ALL SEASONS

The door flew open after a sharp knock and a young man burst in. "Effie, come quick! There's been a terrible accident." My grandmother, Effie Clark Dockstader Holmes, quickly gathered up her medical bag and some clean sheets and set out on a run with the young man. My grandma was a registered nurse, the original one woman QRU for Bigfork. Townsfolk came to Effie with all sorts of medical problems, especially for emergencies or accidents. Over the years Effie dispensed comfort, consolation and healing, saving lives and improving the quality of life for many Bigfork residents. Effie never failed to respond.

One tragic incident is still very much alive in her memory. "The little girl just lay there. It didn't look good; it was very serious." The child had been accidentally run over by a family friend. My grandma could see that there was little she could do herself for the child's massive injuries. But it would be too late when an ambulance got to Bigfork. So Effie started to Kalispell with the little girl in her car. However the journey was short when the child died on the way to the hospital. My grandmother delivered the devastating news to the family. "It was very hard, and I shouldn't have been the one to do it, but no one else wanted to . . . ." My grandma received the Bigfork Citizen of the Year Award in recognition of her contributions to her community.

In 1917, my grandmother and her family left Kansas for their new home in Montana. The long, arduous trek in a Model-T Ford took almost a year. The Clarks homesteaded a parcel of land on the east shore of Flathead Lake. After attending grade school in Bigfork, Effie had to live with a family in Kalispell during the week while going to Flathead High School since the trip from Bigfork was too long to make each day.

My grandma went on to college at Sacred Heart School of Nursing in Spokane, Washington after high school. Bigfork held a dance at the Town Hall to celebrate the momentous event of Effie's departure for college. She was a trailblazer for her time. After graduation, she took a nursing position in Missoula, returning to her beloved Montana. When her Aunt Effie became seriously ill, my grandma quit her job to care for her aunt in Bigfork, staying on with her uncle after her aunt's death. Amazingly, my grandmother still lives in that same house on Electric Avenue where she took care of her Aunt Effie.

My grandmother was introduced to James Dockstader at a dance. When Effie taught Jim to dance, she had no idea this would be the man who would teach her the many lessons of love. My grandparents settled into a farming life, close to the earth and raised three children in Bigfork, each of whom still lives in the area with their families. My grandfather died from cancer on November 20, 1988 at home.

Few people get the chance to revisit their past and to choose the "road not taken," but my grandma did. It all began when the day of Bigfork's Whitewater Festival in 1995 proved to be filled with shock, memories of a past romance, and the promise of true love rekindled.

My grandma recalls the day when Ernest Holmes swept her off her feet for the second time in amazingly vivid detail. Effie was standing outside her house in downtown Bigfork when a stranger asked if she knew Effie Clark. My grandmother replied, "I'm Effie." "I'm Prunie," Ernest responded, using his old high school nickname. Without hesitation, the two embraced repeatedly and began joyously reminiscing right on Electric Avenue. Their reunion continued over lunch.

From that day my grandma was a different person, happier and more full of life than I had ever seen her. This man had long before left a mark on my grandmother's life and heart. Prunie and Effie had been sweethearts when she attended high school in Missoula for one year while her father was working there. Effie returned to Bigfork when her father's job ended the next June. Effie and Prunie were pinned, going steady, and promised to remain true to one another despite the distance. However, an unfortunate misunderstanding broke the two apart, seemingly forever. Ernie was determined to mend the situation and get Effie back, making the long, difficult trip from Missoula to Bigfork in his Model T. However, my grandmother's mind was set and she refused even to come to the door and hear his explanation and apology. Her resolve led to a separation of sixty-six years that was finally bridged that Whitewater Day.

After years of raising their own families, Effie and Prunie were finally together again. A whirlwind romance rekindled their love and passion. My grandmother married Ernest Holmes on August 4, 1995, her 85th birthday, and I was the maid of honor! The day was beautiful, the church was filled to overflowing with friends, family and townsfolk, my grandmother was stunning, and it was one of the happiest days of both of our lives. My new grandfather spent five wonderful years with us before he died in April of 2000.

Sitting in her chair among the many dolls she has made and collected over the years, with antiques younger than she, my grandmother smiles and laughs with the ease of a child and the wisdom of experience. She has lived through much and seen great changes, learning from it all. Effie Dockstader Holmes is a treasure of Montana, a woman to be remembered always. An intelligent, independent woman who fought against the odds at a time when females usually stayed home, my grandmother is truly a modern pioneer woman. She melded the life of homemaker with the career of caretaker of the sick and injured, her only rewards the thanks of those she helped and the knowledge that she had made a difference.●

HEROES AMONG US

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in 1997, the Boston Celtics established the Heroes Among Us program to honor outstanding individuals in New England who have made an overwhelming impact on the lives of others. The "Heroes Among Us" award is designed to honor and recognize members of society that stand tall in their commitment to their community. The extraordinary achievements of the honorees include: individual acts of courage, saving lives, sacrificing for others, overcoming obstacles to achieve their goals, and a lifelong commitment to bettering the lives of those around them. We have recognized those of all ages and from all walks of life, including students, clergy, community leaders, non-profit founders, and even Nobel Prize and Academy Award winners.

At each home game during this 5-year span, the Boston Celtics and their fans have saluted the exemplary efforts of these citizens during a special in-game presentation on the team's legendary parquet floor. To date, more than 200 individuals have received the Heroes Among Us Award. We are all very proud of this program, which has become one of the most recognized and respected initiatives in the city of Boston.

On Friday, June 14, 2002 at 2:00 p.m., the Celtics will host the 4th Annual Heroes Among Us ceremony in the Great Hall at the Massachusetts State House. Heroes from the 2001–2002 season will attend the event, along with Heroes from past seasons. Boston Celtics players, legends, and front office staff will join dignitaries and politicians from all over New England to salute these special individuals.

The Massachusetts Urban Search and Rescue Task Force (Beverly, MA); Erin Rosen-Watson (Natick, MA); William Pease (Gardner, MA); Dawn McNair (Natick, MA); Francis Bok (Boston, MA); Billy Ketchen (Scituate, MA); Raymond Nunez (Lawrence, MA); Lynn Donohue (Marion, MA); Ralph True (Uxbridge, MA); Darin Conley (Uxbridge, MA); Jim Stevens (Uxbridge, MA); Paul Flaherty (Stoughton, MA); Bridget Shaheen (Lawrence, MA); Brian McLaughlin (North Easton, MA); Rachael Levy (Wayland, MA); The Ranieri Family (Bellingham, MA); Chris Curran (Carver, MA); Iris Rivera (Roxbury, MA); Yon Hanlon (Hanson, MA); Sandy Aiello (Waltham, MA); Agnes Lynch (Braintree, MA); Detective Lee Grasso (Melrose, MA); Danny Ricard (West Boylston, MA); Terri Pechner (Revere, MA); Steven Smith (Swampscott, MA); Raymond Piccinni (Marblehead, MA); John Gilpatrick (Hanover, MA); Irene Smalls (Boston, MA).

John Ginley (Warwick, NY); Dr. Roseanna Means (Wellesley, MA); Rev. Dr. Gloria White Hammond (Boston, MA); Dana Laurendeau (Boston, MA); Darrin Dawley (Boston, MA); Eddie Andelman (Lynnfield, MA); Anthony Bibbo (Newton, MA); Liz Walker (Boston, MA); Robert Lewis, Jr. (Boston, MA); Judy and Jim Langmead (Walpole, MA); Clementina and Joseph Chery (Dorchester, MA).

We pay tribute to them for their service.●

TRIBUTE TO HATHAWAY & CLARK FUNERAL HOME

● Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Hathaway & Clark Funeral Home of Louisville, KY. For over 100 years now, Hathaway & Clark Funeral Home has served the local community in a warm and caring manner.

Hathaway & Clark Funeral Home has been soulfully dedicated to serving the needs of the Louisville community since the early part of the 20th century. It is the oldest black-owned and operated funeral business in Louisville. The founder was a man by the name of James H. Hathaway. Mr. Hathaway officially opened the Hathaway mortuary on Burnett Avenue in the Fort Hill area in 1901. After Hathaway's death, his daughter and son-in-law, Columbia and Chester Clark, took over the business, adding Clark to the name.

In 1964, Hathaway & Clark built a new facility in the west end area at 2718 Virginia Avenue. In doing so, they became the first black Louisville funeral home to erect its own building.

Currently, Hathaway & Clark is operated by husband and wife duo, Lawrence and Violet Montgomery. Lawrence Montgomery, who currently serves as the company's president, has worked on and off at Hathaway for about fifty years. His wife Violet has been a full-time employee and secretary-treasurer since 1992. They both have worked extremely hard to build upon the foundation of service and professionalism that Hathaway & Clark was built on. During times of grief and sorrow, families can feel more secure knowing that Hathaway & Clark will be there to take care of all of their immediate needs. Many of their customers have been noted as saying how much they like and appreciate the warm feeling and atmosphere created by the staff and management of Hathaway & Clark.

We have all heard the old saying, "nothing is inevitable except death and taxes." While, I am quite certain that no individual or group will ever make us feel good about paying our taxes, I do know that families in Louisville can put their loved ones peacefully to rest with the help of Hathaway & Clark. I ask that my fellow colleagues join me in thanking Hathaway & Clark for serving Kentucky families since 1901.●

IN RECOGNITION OF LANSING COMMUNITY COLLEGE'S SOFTBALL WORLD SERIES CHAMPIONSHIP WIN

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate join me today in congratulating the Lansing Community College Stars softball team for its win at the National Junior College Athletic Association World Series Championship in Phoenix, AZ. This was Lansing's third straight trip to the World Series, and their first win.

The Stars' season was nothing short of stellar. The Lady Stars broke their 2001 team record for home runs by sending 83 out of the stadium this year. They also batted a .368 team batting average, the highest in the nation. Finishing the season ranked number two in the nation, the Lady Stars finished the season with 49 wins and just seven losses. In the three years of the Lansing Community College program, the team boasts an overall record of 142 wins and just 25 losses.

These statistics don't win a championship on their own, though. The Lady Stars had to battle through 100 degree temperatures and formidable opposition to win three games and the championship on the final day of the series. Great defense, solid pitching, and timely hitting coupled with an experienced ball club made third time the charm for Lansing.

This Championship win is a great accomplishment, and I trust that my Senate colleagues will join me in congratulating the Lansing Community College Lady Stars softball team on this commendable triumph. I wish them the best in repeating next year.

I ask that the names of the team members, their position, college year and high school be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

Monica Kingsley, Pitcher, Sophomore, Fowlerville, MI.

TRIBUTE TO DR. LAURISTON S. TAYLOR

Dr. Lauriston S. Taylor was born on June 1, 1902. Dr. Taylor (or Laurie as he likes to be called) is one of the major contributors to our knowledge of radiation safety, not only in the United States but worldwide as well.

Laurie published his first paper in 1922 while a student at Cornell and has contributed to radiation safety over a span of 80 years, publishing over 150 papers, and has written or contributed to over 16 books.

Laurie served as Chairman of the National Committee on Radiation Protection (NCRP), the organization he helped establish and led for nearly 50 years and the organization now Chartered by the U.S. Congress as the National Council of Radiation Protection and Measurements.

In addition, his accomplishments include serving as: President of the Health Physics Society, Chairman of the International Commission on Radiation Units and Measurements, President of the International Conference on Medical Physics, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, and Special Assistant to the President of the National Academy of Sciences.

A few of the many awards bestowed upon Laurie include: The Presidential Bronze Star and the Medal of Freedom from the United States Air Force, The Gold Medal from the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, and The Janeway Medal from the American Radium Society.

It is with pleasure that I note that Dr. Taylor's decades of contributions to improving radiation safety throughout the World have been documented by the Health Physics Society in an edition of their international journal Health Physics, and their Newsletter.

Laurie is, indeed, a person for all seasons: teacher, mentor, scholar, leader and visionary.

I deeply appreciate all that Laurie Taylor has contributed to this Nation and the world. I invite my colleagues to join in wishing him a very happy 100th birthday.●

TRIBUTE TO JACQUELINE BEAN

● Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, today I recognize a very special woman from the State of Montana who has recently retired from the Burns Telecommunications Center. Jacqueline Bean has made a tremendous difference at the Burns Telecommunications Center during her tenure. Her level of influence in the telecommunications industry and Montana has been instrumental in promoting, maintaining and establishing a base to expand upon the Center and extend its longevity. I cannot tell you how many times Jacqueline stressed the need to ensure the center's long-term impact.

Jacqueline's commitment and loyalty to the Burns Telecommunications Center and to the goals I established have helped lead to the success of the Center. Jacqueline never lost sight of the vision I had in mind, to promote opportunities in education, healthcare, and business especially in rural States like Montana, to work for increased individual opportunity through telecommunications and support Montana telecommunications projects, involving cutting edge technology for education based distance learning programs, telemedicine initiatives, and e-commerce across secure computer networks in the global economy. Jacqueline put forth a whole-hearted effort to increase these opportunities for students, teachers, administrators, individuals, and employees across Montana by advancing the Burns Telecommunications Center and its mission.

Jacqueline has always gone above and beyond the call of duty. She is not only a woman I admire and respect, she is a close, personal friend and I want to extend my personal thanks for all of her support and effort on behalf of the Burns Telecommunications Center. I truly appreciate Jacqueline's loyalty, dedication and commitment and all that she has accomplished on behalf of the Burns Telecommunications Center. We bid farewell, but not good-bye, to a woman that has brought so much integrity to the Burns Telecommunications Center.●

HARLEM GLOBETROTTERS

● Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I note with pleasure that the Harlem Globetrotters basketball team was honored in April by the Arizona chapter of the National Conference for Community and Justice.

The world-renowned Harlem Globetrotters, who have made their home in Phoenix since 1995, have given joy to basketball fans in America and around the world for three quarters of a century. In over 20,000 games of basketball, played in some 115 countries, the team's stellar showmen and athletes have been ambassadors for their country and their sport. Especially impressive is the tenacity of owner and former player Mannie Jackson, who took a franchise on the wane and revived it. He and his athletes have given something of value to Arizonans, Americans, and basketball lovers everywhere.

Arizona is proud to be the home of the 21st century Globetrotters, recipients of a richly deserved humanitarian award.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 2:56 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1372) to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1214) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to establish a program to ensure greater security for United States seaports, and for other purposes, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints the following Members as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, for consideration of the Senate bill and the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. COBLE, Mr. LOBIONDO, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Ms. BROWN of Florida.

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of sections 112 and 115 of the Senate bill, and section 108 of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CRANE, and Mr. RANGEL.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, without amendment:

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BOND:

S. 2579. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to limit access to off-site consequences analysis information in order to reduce the risk of criminal release from stationary sources, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. BOND. Madam President, today I am introducing a bill to help protect communities in Missouri and across the Nation from terrorist attack. Chemical plants in communities across America are perfect terrorist targets. Right now, the U.S. Government provides a virtual blueprint for attacks on these facilities to any member of the public who requests the information—on any terrorists frankly. The Community Protection From Chemical Terrorism Act will help protect communities from terrorists who would use sensitive information made public to destroy those communities.

There are 15,000 chemical facilities across the country. Facilities store and use potentially dangerous chemicals to make consumer products and keep us healthy. Chlorine, for example, is used by every family to whiten and brighten our clothes. Every child, every senior person, every family across America is able to drink clean water and avoid getting sick because of chlorine treatment.

However, we know that chlorine is a dangerous chemical if misused or abused. According to EPA, at least 123 plants each keep amounts of chemicals that if released, could form deadly vapor clouds that would put more than one million people in danger. A plant outside of Detroit projects that a rupture of one of its 90-ton rail cars of chlorine could endanger three million people. Even worse, an accident at a New Jersey plant in suburban New York City could cover a 14 mile radius affecting 12 million people.

Missouri is not spared from these dangers. In the Kansas City metropolitan area alone, there are over 100 plants filing reports to EPA on their potential chemical accidents.

I am holding back on the names and addresses of these facilities, but their identity and location is no secret to those who want to look. In fact, the law currently requires EPA to make this information available to the public. You do not even have to look, because the newspapers are publishing this information. Here is the front page of the Kansas City Star with a story "Chemical Plants Ordered to Prepare for the Worst." The story describes how information on worst-case scenario accidents is publicly available to anyone who bothers to look.

The San Francisco Chronicle published a story entitled "If All Hell Broke Loose." Here you see the newspaper not only describes the chemical facilities in Northern California, but provides a map of the location of the facilities and the radius of potential damage from a toxic release. This newspaper published not only the names and addresses of the facilities, but drew a map with their location and the radius of destruction from a release. It helps the terrorists by showing just what radius of death and destruction would occur. This is the front page of a newspaper that is out there for anybody who wants to make a terrorist strike in San Francisco. This is published in May of 1999. I wonder, after September 11, they would still be so helpful.

The reason this is a problem is that this is exactly the type of information terrorists would use to plan and carry-out an attack. Families in suburban San Francisco and across the country have a bulls eye on their communities because terrorists can use this publicly available information to target their attacks.

By law, the government requires chemical facilities to report to the government the hazardous chemicals they have on site and then predict the worst-case scenario for an accident with those chemicals. These Offsite

Consequence Analysis or OCA reports include the type of chemical, the conditions under which a worst-case accident would occur, the distance a toxic cloud of chemicals might travel, the environmental or public receptors such as hospitals, schools or national parks in danger's way, and the number of people who would be harmed by an attack.

According to the FBI, this publicly available chemical facility information provides a "blueprint for potential terrorist attack." A DOJ report analyzing the threat from terrorists abusing OCA information says:

> The distance that a toxic cloud might travel, the numbers of people who might be harmed, and the environmental or public receptors that could be affected are precisely the types of factors that a terrorist weighs when planning an attack.

Chemical facilities are exactly the type of target terrorists would attack to create mayhem and destruction. According to DOJ:

> Certain types of facilities that are required to submit OCA information are preferred terrorist targets. Many such facilities exist in well-populated areas, where a chemical release could result in mass casualties and would result in widespread destruction.

In a chilling confirmation of this, copies of U.S. chemical trade publications were found in one of the cave holes where Osama bin Laden had hidden. They found it with the other rat infestations in December.

Terrorists would have little problem searching through government collected OCA. According to DOJ, this data provides "one-stop shopping for refined targeting information, allowing terrorists or other criminals to select the best targets from among the 15,000 chemical facilities that have submitted OCA data." Indeed, accessing this publicly available information is easy. In a single afternoon, my staff was able to search and find the top ten facilities across my home state of Missouri where terrorist attacks would produce the greatest number of casualties. By the end of the day, my staff had the names of the facilities, their street address, the name of the vulnerable chemicals, the conditions under which a worst-case scenario release would occur, the radius of harm caused by the attack, any safety or mitigation measures plants might use to control the release, and the number of people in the affected area who could be hurt.

It was shocking to me that Federal law makes information which terrorists could use to destroy communities available to any member of the public.

The argument goes that communities want to know about dangerous chemicals used and stored in their neighborhoods. That is a legitimate desire. The law further intends that members of the public use this information to pressure chemical facilities to remove dangerous chemicals or change their ways so that neighboring communities are not in danger from an accidental release. That also is a very legitimate concern.

Unfortunately, the terrorist attacks of September 11th show us that times are not so simple anymore. The threat from terrorist attack now outweighs the benefits of making this information public. We should be concerned about chemical facilities in our communities. However, our greatest concern must be protecting those communities from terrorist attack.

In a different time, the environmental policy concerns of making worst-case scenario chemical accidental data available to the public might have outweighed the security threats to our communities. Sadly, those times have passed. According to the Department of Justice, OCA worst-case scenario data continues to present a security threat. The threat from terrorists using OCA worst-case scenario data is even greater after the September 11th terrorist attacks. DOJ believes that legislation is necessary to further limit public access to dangerous OCA information.

Unfortunately, the current law does not protect our communities from terrorist attack. Congress amended the law concerning OCA information in 1999. That legislation, entitled the Chemical Safety Information and Site Security Act reversed EPA plans to post OCA information on the Internet. However, the law left the task of establishing specific regulations for publicizing OCA information to EPA and DOJ. Admittedly, the last administration did its work before the terrorist attacks of September 11th. It was a different time then. A legitimate argument was made that environmental policy concerns outweighed the need to protect communities from terrorist attacks.

However, even the restrictions EPA and DOJ devised to limit access to sensitive OCA information were quickly overcome by advocacy groups. This story in the New York Times describes how environmental advocates put OCA disaster data on the Internet. The caption here is, "Getting around a law intended to avoid helping terrorists." My staff used one of these sites to help them determine the communities in Missouri most at risk from a terrorist attack. This is not fair to the communities that wish to avoid terrorist attacks. Further restrictions are necessary to protect our communities from terrorist attack.

The legislation I propose today strikes the best balance between allowing the public to monitor the actions of the chemical industry and protecting individual communities from terrorist attack. Official users engaged in official protection activities will have unrestricted access to OCA information. However, my bill will allow members of the public to view OCA data on chemical facilities without knowing their specific name and location. This will allow advocates to continue watching and pressuring the chemical industry at-large to make safety improvements without placing specific communities at risk of terrorist attack. For those environmental advocates that wish to play a role in a given community, this legislation specifically expands local emergency planning committees to include members of local and national environmental organizations. I recognize that these groups have a role to play in making our communities safer and hope they will accept this invitation to join in formal community protection activities.

Communities have much to fear from terrorist attack. According to DOJ, the risk of terrorists attempting in the foreseeable future to cause an industrial chemical release is both real and credible. We must not help those terrorists who want to destroy our communities. I urge my colleagues to support the Community Protection From Terrorism Act and look forward to working with you on its passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be appropriately referred.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By Mr. WELLSTONE:

S. 2580. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to require the National Transportation Safety Board to investigate all fatal railroad grade crossing accidents; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Fatal Grade Crossing Accident Investigations Act. The bill would require the National Transportation Safety Board, NTSB, to investigate the facts, circumstances and causes of all accidents at railroad grade crossings in which there is a fatality or substantial property damage.

With this bill, we can correct an important gap in our efforts to reduce such accidents. Under current law, NTSB investigations of grade crossing accidents are undertaken only in select cases, as highway accident investigations. The bill would consider grade crossing accidents instead to be railroad accidents, which under current law already must be investigated if there is a fatality or substantial property damage.

We need better information on fatal grade crossing accidents so we can do more to prevent unnecessary loss of life. According to National Railroad Administration Safety Statistics, more than 4,000 accidents per year occur at grade crossings. In 2000, 425 of these resulted in fatalities. Most fatalities occur at what are called passive grade crossings, those offering no warning or signal to a motorist of an oncoming train. Of Minnesota's more than 8,000 railroad grade crossings, three-fourths are passive crossings. The safety of such passive crossings is substantially dependent on such factors as physical layout and the adequacy of the view for drivers of approaching trains. To make good safety choices, communities, transportation agencies and departments at the local, state and federal levels need better information. That is one reason site-specific accident information is so necessary.

NTSB investigations are essential not only to prevent future accidents, through recommendations on operating rules such as speed limits, warning or separation devices, improved signaling, signage, improvements for driver visibility and increased enforcement of stop signs at passive crossings. But their investigations often are also the only means of addressing the role of railroads and their personnel in accidents.

This important issue has been brought to my attention by two passionate rail safety advocates in Minnesota, Lillian and Gerry Nybo. I have worked closely with the Nybos, who have been at the forefront of a national movement, “Citizens Against Railroad Tragedies.” Their 18-year-old son, Gerry, Jr., was killed three years ago this week at an unguarded rail grade crossing in Audubon Township in Becker County, Minnesota. He had just graduated from high school, and his life was full of promise. His friend Ryan Nelson was killed in the same accident. This legislation is needed to give families such as the Nybos, who have lost family members, the results of investigation into the facts and causes of these accidents. It is in memory of Gerry Nybo, Jr. that I introduce this legislation today.

My hope in introducing this bill is to give communities the information they need to improve safety at dangerous intersections. I urge my colleagues to support the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2580

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Fatal Grade Crossing Accident Investigations Act”.

SEC. 2. GRADE CROSSING ACCIDENTS.

Section 1131(a)(1) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by striking “, including a railroad grade crossing accident,”; and

(2) in subparagraph (C), by inserting “, including a railroad grade crossing accident,” after “railroad accident”.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE AND APPLICABILITY.

The amendments made by section 2 shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act and shall apply with respect to railroad grade crossing accidents that occur on or after that date.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN:

S. 2582. A bill to require a report to Congress on a national strategy for the deployment of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, in 1943, the chairman of a famous American electronics company said, “I think there is a world market for maybe five computers.” Good guess. Industry has repeatedly exceeded expectations like that one, and helped the American economy as a whole exceed expectations

New questions are now reverberating from Silicon Valley to Pennsylvania Avenue. How do we catch the next great wave of innovation and ingenuity to unleash the next great boom of productivity and opportunity? How do we find new ways to translate our enormous technological prowess into real economic progress for the American people?

I rise today to introduce what I believe will be a roadmap to revitalization. It's premised on the extraordinary promise of high-speed Internet to help us return to high-intensity growth; by revolutionizing the way we communicate and live our lives. Its goal is to highlight the challenges we face in tapping the transformative potential of broadband technology, to spur agreement on a national strategy for accelerating its development and deployment, and ultimately to help bring on what we all hope will be the broadband boom.

Our country's last big boom was fueled by the most reliable, resilient, and renewable source of energy around: America's creative genius. Government paved the road, first with R&D funding, then in the 1990s with sound budget policies, but it was our innovation industries that made it happen. In fact, the information technology sector, which made up only 4 percent of GDP, was responsible for a remarkable 30 percent of all economic growth between 1995 and 2000.

Today, America's high-tech industries, which have survived the big bust that followed the big bang of the 1990s, haven't lost their edge. Information technology and the innovation economy, for example, are still among our greatest national resources. But as we've emerged from recession, many businesses across the country have been increasingly concerned about our recovery. How strong will it be? How long will it last?

Many in Washington have recognized that broadband can and must be a big part of the solution. But most policymakers have been focusing on short-term obstacles to the next small jump in speed. I think we need a larger and longer vision here. We need to look over the horizon and ask what it will take to usher in advanced broadband that will make speeds of 10 to 100 megabits per second available all across the country, so that we can truly unleash the tremendous economic potential of this technology.

The science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke once said, “Any sufficiently advanced technology is indistinguishable from magic.” Well, the next generation Internet passes that test. It has the ability to levitate productivity, make millions of jobs appear, and transport our economy into the future. And there won't be any sleight of hand involved. Sometimes, there won't even be wires attached.

In education, for example, universities, school districts, and private companies have already started rolling out impressive applications of advanced broadband. We're not just talking about streaming video with questions sent through instant messenger. Broadband can transform the very nature of instruction, right at the time when schools need more flexible and more powerful learning tools to meet higher standards.

In healthcare, the possibilities are equally exciting: hospitals without walls, instantaneous remote monitoring of patient vitals, comprehensive informatics databases that are available to professionals everywhere. We even saw the first remote surgery pioneered last fall, when two surgeons in New York operated on a patient in Strasbourg, France.

Indeed, advanced broadband's ability to both increase economic opportunities and improve society in so many fields, from law to finance, from entertainment to agriculture, and from homeland defense to international defense, are just astounding.

These days, computing power is expanding at an incredible rate. But networking speed is way behind computing speed. Industry can't make the best use of the computing potential that's available without the pipes that bring it home to consumers and businesses—including and especially small businesses. While we have some good arteries, we don't have the capillaries to carry data all the way.

I stand here today to say that we in government can't let this potentially fertile field of technology lie fallow. We need to make the most of this moment, in which the high-speed Internet is on the cusp of catalyzing a quantum leap in our economy. Which is to say, we need to lead, and seed.

Unfortunately, the case for making broadband deployment a priority of a national economic strategy has yet to be understood adequately by government. The broadband buck is still stuck on the government's desk, and with it, thousands of new opportunities and millions of new jobs. Decisions are piling up: on spectrum, competition, rights management, spam, privacy, child protection, and more. These are important issues that need to be resolved, and they need to be resolved comprehensively, with an overarching vision.

Last week I released a white paper entitled Broadband: A 21st Century Technology and Productivity Strategy and today I introduce the National Broadband Strategy Act of 2002. The white paper analyzes the challenges. The legislation will compel us to meet them, requiring the Administration to develop a national broadband strategy within six months of passage.

Taken together, and working in conjunction with insightful leaders and groups in the tech community, I am confident these measures can spark the development and implementation of a coherent, cross-agency strategy to eliminate obstacles, create incentives, and encourage industry innovation.

In the upcoming months, I'll follow up this report and legislation with proposals on how to reach truly advanced broadband, the speed I mentioned before, upwards of 10 megabits per second. There is no focus on this need now, and that's where government particularly needs to lead and seed.

The follow-up legislation I'll propose in the coming months will call on the FCC to develop a regulatory framework to meet the challenges of the next generation Net: propose tax credits for the deployment of advanced broadband, encourage research and development on advanced broadband infrastructure that will enable this technology to reach into all the corners and crevices of the country, and present a program to incentivize research and development on major applications in areas where government plays a central role, including education, healthcare, and e-government.

The public sector cannot and should not manage this effort. Our future will fortunately be in the hands of thousands of individual innovators. Nor should the government be choosing winners and losers. To benefit consumers, government must be pro-broadband, but technology neutral about how business gets there, by encouraging innovation and maximizing competition. Government must clear the path so that business innovators can march forward.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important piece of legislation. I request unanimous consent that the introductory materials to my whitepaper and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD. I note to my colleagues that the full text of the whitepaper is available on my web site, http://lieberman.senate.gov.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2582

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Broadband Strategy Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States needs to develop a long-term investment and growth strategy that will restore the unprecedented gains in structural economic productivity with high employment growth experienced by the United States in the late 1990s.

(2) The gains in structural productivity with high employment growth in the late 1990s resulted from unprecedented investments in information and communication technology.

(3) It was the precipitous decline in these investments that took the United States economy into recession before September 11, 2001.

(4) The United States needs to focus on stimulating resurgence in these investments to regain vibrant growth in structural productivity and high employment growth.

(5) If productivity increases at the rate of 1.5 percent per year, the standard of living will double about every 46 years, or about every two generations. On the other hand, if productivity increases at the rate of 3 percent per year, the standard of living will double about every 23 years, or about every generation. This difference results from the so-called miracle of compounding. To take advantage of compounding, a long-term economic strategy for the United States must focus on structural productivity growth.

(6) Productivity growth has enabled American workers to produce 30 times as much in goods and services in 1999 as they produced in 1899, with only 5 times as many workers. This growth in productivity has increased the standard of living in the United States from $4,200 in 1899 to $33,740 in 1999 (expressed in 1999 dollars). Growth in structural productivity will bring about growth in wages and salaries, profits, and government tax receipts.

(7) The productivity gains of the United States in the late 1990s broke a 25-year trend. From the early 1970s to the mid-1990s, United States productivity grew sluggishly, at an annual rate of about 1.5 percent. During the final 5 years of the 20th Century, it grew at nearly double that rate.

(8) The high cyclical productivity growth the United States has experienced in 2001 and 2002 results for the most part from a reduction in employment and increased utilization of existing capacity.

(9) The United States needs a strategy to generate structural productivity growth arising from the development and deployment of new technology that enhances both efficiency and employment.

(10) The United States needs to prepare now for the retirement of the Baby Boom generation. If the United States does nothing regarding Social Security, it is estimated that by 2030 the annual shortfall between amounts in the Social Security Trust Fund and the amount required to meet obligations of the Fund will reach $814,000,000,000 (in 1999 dollars). The United States has approximately $7,4000,000,000,000 in obligations coming due, and it is advisable to have our fiscal house in order, hopefully with no national debt, when these obligations must be paid. Restoring structural productivity and high employment growth is essential to ensure that the United States can honor these obligations.

(11) Making affordable, high speed broadband Internet connections of 10 Mbps-100 Mbps available to all American homes and small businesses has the potential to restore structural productivity and employment growth.

(12) High speed broadband Internet applications for voice, data, graphics, and video will revolutionize many aspects of life at home, school, and work. High speed broadband Internet will transform health care, commerce, government, and education. The benefits of a successful high speed broadband Internet deployment strategy to the quality of life and economy of the United States will be immeasurable.

(13) Traditionally, the United States is considered the world leader in the development and commercialization of new innovations and technologies. However, the United States lags far behind other countries in broadband deployment, including South Korea, Canada, and Sweden. By 2005, the United States is projected to fall to ninth place in broadband deployment, surpassed by Asian markets in Hong Kong and Singapore, the Scandinavian countries Denmark and Norway, and the Netherlands.

(14) The United States will need high speed broadband Internet for public health, education, and economic welfare, just as the United States now needs universal telephone service. High speed broadband Internet applications are capable of revitalizing the economy and solving countless problems for average Americans. The applications fall into the areas of e-education, e-health, e-commerce, e-government, and e-entertainment.

(15) The benefits that will arise from development and implementation of a national high speed broadband Internet strategy amply justify a priority for such a strategy. The Federal Government will act one way or another on many of the key policy issues affecting broadband deployment. The only question is whether it acts in accordance with a strategy, or piecemeal.

(15) Adopting a national strategy for broadband deployment is consistent with the strategies the United States has adopted to speed deployment of other essential infrastructure, including railroads, electric power, telephone service, and radio and television. Each of those technologies has been the focus of a national economic strategy. There is a consensus that the Northwest Ordinance, Morrill Land-Grant Act, and GI bill, and laws for transcontinental railroads, rural electrification, and the interstate highway system, embodied useful and successful strategies for the future of the United States.

(16) In facilitating high speed broadband Internet deployment, the United States should rely on markets and entrepreneurs and minimize the intrusion of government. Americans need to be creative and innovative when government acts to make sure that it provides value added.

(17) In crafting a comprehensive strategy to advance deployment of high speed broadband Internet, a broad range of policy options should be addressed, and the Administration needs to provide leadership in developing these options and establishing a priority among them.

SEC. 3. NATIONAL STRATEGY FOR HIGH SPEED BROADBAND INTERNET DEPLOYMENT.

(a) STRATEGY FOR INCREASING STRUCTURAL PRODUCTIVITY AND EMPLOYMENT GROWTH.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to Congress a report setting forth a strategy for the nation-wide deployment of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications services.

(b) ELEMENTS.—The report under subsection (a) shall include the following:

(1) A goal for the deployment of broadband telecommunications services nationwide, including a goal regarding the speeds necessary to facilitate applications needed to stimulate structural productivity and employment growth.

(2) A proposal for policies to foster and maintain competition among firms offering broadband telecommunications service, including competition to deploy high speed broadband Internet of 10 Mbps-100 Mbps.

(3) A proposal for incentives to enhance demand for high speed broadband Internet telecommunications service, including demand for purposes of serving Federal mission areas such as homeland security, distance learning, health, scientific collaboration, and electronic commerce.

(4) A proposal for incentives to facilitate and enhance the supply of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications service.

(5) A proposal to enhance global electronic commerce.

(6) A proposal for the optimal allocation of Federal Government resources on research and development regarding high speed broadband Internet telecommunications service, including recommendations for the allocation and prioritization of Federal funds.

(7) A proposal for the optimal allocation of spectrum in furtherance of the deployment of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications service.

(8) An assessment of various limitations to the deployment of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications service, including matters relating to taxation, privacy, security, spamming, content, intellectual property, and rights-of-way, and proposals for eliminating or alleviating such limitations.

(9) An assessment of the impact of the proposals under this subsection on structural productivity and employment growth in the United States and on the international economic competitiveness of the United States.

(10) Any other proposals or matters on the deployment of high speed broadband Internet telecommunications services that the President considers appropriate.

(c) FORM.—The report under subsection (a) shall include a draft proposal of any legislation required to implement the goal described in paragraph (1) of subsection (b), and of any of the proposals set forth under paragraphs (2) through (8) and (10) of that subsection (b).

BROADBAND: A 21ST CENTURY TECHNOLOGY AND PRODUCTIVITY STRATEGY

(From the Office of Senator Joseph I. Lieberman, May 2002)

Over one hundred and fifty years ago, a new technology emerged that grabbed the imaginations of the public and the purse strings of investors. It was a technology that promised to bring people closer together and to greatly stimulate the economy of that time. In order to succeed, that new technology required that the land be crisscrossed with a network upon which news could be carried and goods could be traded.

Bankers funded hundreds of startup companies that were built to take advantage of the new network. Investors clamored to purchase shares at rapidly rising prices. And then, after little more than a decade of overbuilding the infrastructure, it all fell apart as shares plunged 85% and hundreds of businesses and banks went under.

The technology was steam-driven railroad and this is the story told in the May 13th issue of Business Week. The analogies to the Information Technology boom of the 1990s are unmistakable and the lessons are invaluable. But the most important part of the story is what happened after the railroad bubble burst.

Within two decades, railroads were carrying four times as many people as they had at the height of the boom. The tracks were cleared, leaving the most solid companies and the best of the rail technologies to survive. According to W. Brian Arthur, an economist at the Santa Fe Institute, the survivors then developed new strategies that resulted in the industry's greatest growth and had the greatest impact on business and society of that time.

We now find ourselves in the same situation that the railroads were in as they developed their new strategies, except the technology is now broadband. It is clear that broadband will revolutionize business and society in our time, just as the railroads did in theirs. But it is also a confusing time, as many different interests emerge with many different agendas. The issues to be faced are many and they are complex. For some, there will be no easy answers. But it is time for us to have a national strategy that addresses these issues in a coherent and comprehensive manner.

My staff has assembled this report over the past ten months with extensive input from industry, academia, and government. It was no small undertaking and I particularly thank Skip Watts and Chuck Ludlam of my office. While there have been numerous bills offered in Congress dealing with isolated components of broadband policy, this report is the first to identify the full range of issues that must be considered as part of a national broadband strategy designed to stimulate economic expansion.

As the first in a series of legislative initiatives, I will introduce the National Broadband Strategy Act of 2002 next week. This bill highlights the need for a carefully planned national strategy to provide universal availability of broadband and to motivate research and advances in broadband applications and content. It calls upon the Administration to recommend a coherent, cross-agency national broadband strategy in a series of key government policy areas, to Congress.

I want to emphasize that while there is an ongoing competitive scramble to reach the lower broadband speeds, we need to also pay real attention to advanced broadband and to attaining those much higher speeds. The report's Executive Summary identifies four key elements that will be integral to advanced broadband deployment. The elements include an FCC regulatory plan, tax incentives, research on advanced infrastructure technology, and deployment of applications.

As with the railroads of the mid-1800s, broadband is now poised to whistle in a new period of economic growth. We must do all that we can to nurture this emerging technology and to stimulate the development of new killer applications in the fields of education, medicine, government, and science. Commerce and entertainment will not trail far behind. The tracks of rail are now the "pipes" of broadband.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Broadband deployment must become a national priority. Major economic growth and productivity gains can be realized by making affordable high-speed broadband Internet connections—which are already enjoyed by many universities and large businesses—widely available to American homes, schools, and small businesses.

In a soft economic climate with limited prospects for near-term recovery, broadband deployment is a necessary condition for the restoration of capital spending in the information technology sector. Such investments were the critical drivers of the non-inflationary growth that characterized the late 1990s. Broadband, which can play a pivotal role in encouraging investments in information technology, has the potential to transform education, health care, government, entertainment, and commerce.

Of course, embracing broadband as a vehicle for economic growth raises the question, "How fast is fast enough for truly advanced emerging applications?" The telecom, cable, and satellite industries are now providing Internet access at speeds typically less than 1.5 megabits per second (Mbps). A review of existing and likely technologies, however, suggests that we have only achieved the first level of broadband speeds. On the foreseeable horizon are technologies that offer advanced broadband speeds of 10 Mbps in the near-term, and 100 Mbps in the medium-term. A national strategy needs to focus on this advanced broadband opportunity. Arguably, it will be at these advanced speed ranges that the greatest benefits from broadband will come.

A successful strategy to accelerate the deployment of broadband will lead to immeasurable benefits to the quality of life and economy of the American people. But a successful strategy must encompass various issues in a comprehensive and coherent manner, and the debate must not become mired in any one debate. What we need is a sensible, intelligent approach that addresses the full range of issues within the context of an interrelated framework, not the piecemeal process that has brought us to the present confusion and controversies.

This strategy must recognize a truth that sometimes becomes lost in the multiplicity of debates over such issues as the regulation of telephone and cable companies. What is overlooked—and must be recognized—is that demand will drive the next phase of broadband expansion. Strong demand from consumers, smaller businesses, and even big businesses that currently have high-speed Internet connectivity, will produce a cycle of innovation and growth. But demand, in turn, requires that applications of real value be developed. It requires, in other words, "killer applications" that justify, in the minds of consumers, the price of progressively faster broadband connections.

The private sector will need to invest hundreds of billions of dollars before widespread broadband access becomes a reality. Government nevertheless has an important role to play as broadband suppliers face novel challenges in the areas of Internet privacy, security, spam, copyright protection, spectrum allocation, and rights-of-way. It is vital that, in these and other areas, government remain "technology-neutral" and that competition between the delivery technologies exist alongside competition within the technologies. This will allow the best and most cost-effective delivery systems to emerge, meeting the varied needs of different people and different regions across this diverse country.

There are, however, many ways that government, through a national strategy, can accelerate the life cycle of development and competition for emerging broadband technologies. It can do so by stimulating both the demand and supply side of broadband deployment. On the demand side, government should lead the way in generating demand by expanding e-government services to the public and to businesses, and by supporting the development of broadband tools for e-education and e-healthcare. E-entertainment and e-commerce will be quick to take advantage of the expanded services, and renewed economic growth will surely follow. On the supply side, government can consider such tools as tax credits, loans, and grants for a wide variety of research, deployment, and broadband utilization activities.

As the first in a series of legislative initiatives, Senator Lieberman will introduce the National Broadband Strategy Act of 2002. This bill highlights the need for a coherent and comprehensive national strategy for providing widespread availability of broadband and for motivating research and advances in broadband applications and content. Because broadband implementation has been piecemeal, and stalled in significant part because numerous government agencies have failed to act quickly in deciding a wide range of broadband issues now pending before them, the bill calls upon the Administration to recommend a coherent, cross-agency national broadband strategy in a series of key government policy areas.

Parallel to that, and focusing on how we will get to truly advanced broadband speeds (in the range of 10 Mbps and 100 Mbps), Senator Lieberman will introduce over the next few months a series of substantive pieces of legislation addressing four key elements integral to a national strategy for advanced broadband deployment. The key elements are:

(1) FCC Regulatory Framework: Direct the FCC to explore all of the broadband deployment and delivery technology options to enable us to reach advanced broadband speeds. Retaining technological neutrality, the FCC will be asked to develop the regulatory framework to enable and implement a plan to deploy this advanced Internet capability.

(2) Tax Credits: Establish tax credits and incentives for a range of advanced broadband deployment and broadband utilization efforts. These could include credits for infrastructure deployment, equipment implementation, employee utilization, installation in atypical settings, and innovative applications.

(3) Advanced Infrastructure R&D: Ensure that fundamental R&D issues are tackled in a coordinated manner to overcome the scientific and technological barriers to advanced widespread broadband deployment. The U.S. has already established successful interagency and interdisciplinary initiatives under the National Information Technology Research & Development Program to advance critical IT technologies. We must leverage our existing expertise in these programs to resolve fundamental obstacles to effective broadband deployment and hasten the next generation of technologies. A cooperative R&D program, including government, industry and universities, will be critical to advanced broadband.

(4) Application R&D and Deployment: Require federal agencies to undertake R&D and promote the development and availability of major applications in areas where government plays a central role, including e-education, e-medicine, e-government, e-science and homeland security. This could stimulate demand for broadband and promote bridging of the digital divide consistent with the missions of government agencies. And the government should lead by example in moving to expand opportunities for broadband-based e-commerce in federal procurement, bidding, and contracting.

While time and technology will not stop, and our nation's eventual transformation into a broadband society will occur regardless of what steps are taken today, it is ours to choose whether we will be dragged into the next digital age resisting change, or whether we lead others into a new era of economic promise. If we are to take control of our future, we must begin by harnessing the power of broadband as a necessary tool for navigating a world increasingly defined by the speed with which information changes and grows.

By Mr. CORZINE (for himself and Mrs. CLINTON):

S. 2583. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs in the management of health care services for veterans to place certain low-income veterans in a higher health-care priority category; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise today along with Senator HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON to change the way the Veteran's Administration defines low-income veterans by taking into account variations in the cost of living in different parts of the country. The Corzine-Clinton legislation would make the Veteran's Equitable Resource Allocation just that: Equitable.

More specifically, this bill would replace the national income threshold for consideration in Priority Group 5, currently $24,000 for all parts of the country, with regional thresholds defined by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. This simple but far-reaching proposal would help low income veterans across the country afford quality health care and ensure that Veterans Integrated Service Networks or VISNs receive adequate funding to care for their distinct veterans populations.

Our Nation's veterans have made great sacrifices in defense of American freedom and values, and we owe them a tremendous debt of gratitude. The United States Congress must ensure that all American veterans, veterans who have sweated in the trenches to defend liberty, have access to quality health care.

In 1997, Congress implemented the Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation system, or VERA, to distribute medical care funding provided by the VA. The funding formula was established to better take into account the costs associated with various veteran populations. Unfortunately, the VERA formula that was created fails to take into account regional differences in the cost of living, a significant metric in determining veteran healthcare costs. This oversight in the VERA formula dangerously shortchanges veterans living in regions with high costs of living and elevated health expenses.

To allocate money to the Veterans' Integrated Service Networks, VISNs, VERA divides veterans into seven priority groups. Veterans who have no service-connected disability and whose incomes fall below $24,000 are considered low income and placed in Priority Group 5, while veterans whose incomes exceed this national threshold and qualify for no other special priorities are placed in Priority Group 7c.

Using a national threshold for determining eligibility as a low-income veteran puts veterans living in high cost areas at a decided disadvantage. In New Jersey, HUD's fiscal year 2002 standards for classification as "low-income" exceed $24,000 per year in every single county. And some areas exceed the VA baseline by more than 50 percent. Similarly, HUD's "low-income" classification for New York City is set at $35,150 and for Nassau and Suffolk Counties, at $40,150.

As a result, regions that have a high cost of living, like VISN 3, which encompasses substantial portions of New Jersey and New York, tend to have a reduced population of Priority Group 5 veterans and an inflated population of Priority Group 7c veterans.

The fundamental inequity of the VERA formula is apparent when you consider that VERA allocations do not take into account the number of veterans classified in Priority Group 7c. With the costs associated with veterans in Priority Group 7c not considered as part of the VERA allocation, and with high cost of living areas possessing inflated populations of Priority Group 7c vets, high cost regions must provide care to thousands of veterans without adequate funding.

This additional financial burden on VISNs with large populations of veterans in Priority Group 7c has had a tremendous impact on VISN 3. Since FY 1996, VISN 3 has experienced a decline in revenue of 10 percent. As a result of the tremendous shortfall in the VISN 3 budget, the VA cannot move forward with plans to open clinics in various locations, including prospective clinics in Monmouth and Passaic Counties. Consequently, veterans in VISN 3 are forced to wait for unreasonably long periods to receive medical care and travel long distances to existing clinics.

Furthermore, miscategorizing which vets qualify as Priority Group 5 unjustifiably reduces access to medical care for thousands of veterans. Under existing rules, veterans placed in Priority Group 7c must provide a copayment to receive medical care at a VA medical facility; Veterans placed in Priority Group 5 receive medical care free of charge. Under the existing framework, low-income vets in high cost areas are often inappropriately placed in Priority Group 7c, and are forced to provide a copayment.

Recent studies by both the Rand Institute and the General Accounting Office identify this flaw in the VERA formula and recommend a geographic means test like the one provided in our legislation to improve the allocation of resources under VERA. Such a test would ensure that the VERA formula allocation better reflects the true costs of VA healthcare in the various VISNs in the United States.

Our legislation would make a simple adjustment to the VERA formula to account for variations in the cost of living in different regions. The bill would help veterans in high cost areas afford VA health care and guarantee that VISNs across the country receive adequate compensation for the care they provide.

I hope my colleagues will join Senator CLINTON and me in supporting this important bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2583

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS HEALTH CARE PRIORITY FOR CERTAIN LOW-INCOME VETERANS BASED UPON REGIONAL INCOME THRESHOLDS.

(a) CHANGE IN PRIORITY CATEGORY.—Section 1705(a) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (5)—

(A) by inserting "(A) who are" after "Veterans";

(B) by inserting "and" after "through (4)"; and

(C) by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", or (B) who are described in section 1710(a)(3) of this title and are eligible for treatment as a low-income family under section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437a(b)) for the area in which such veterans reside, regardless of whether such veterans are treated as single person families under paragraph (3)(A) of such section 3(b) or as families under paragraph (3)(B) of such section 3(b)";

(2) by striking paragraph (7); and

(3) by redesignating paragraph (8) as paragraph (7) and in that paragraph by striking "paragraph (7)" and inserting "paragraph (5)(B)".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1710(f)(4) of such title is amended by striking "section 1705(a)(7)" and inserting "section 1705(a)(5)(B)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 2, 2002.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I rise today, along with Senator CORZINE, to introduce legislation to remedy the gross disparity in the distribution of Federal dollars to provide health care services to our nation's veterans around the country.

The source of the gap is a formula that does not sufficiently take into account the needs of all facilities, effectively unfairly penalizing states in the Northeast and Midwest. And New York has lost tens of millions of dollars as a result. The bill we're introducing today would provide increased funding for networks in high-cost of living areas, like New York and New Jersey, and help low-income veterans afford quality health care.

In 1997, to repair geographic inequities in the distribution of VA allocations, the Federal government put in place the Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation, VERA, system. As I noted in a letter I sent to VA Secretary Anthony Principi on this issue in March, the VERA formula was intended to better meet the needs of the large number of veterans who flocked to the South. As a General Accounting Office, GAO, report released in February 2002 makes clear, however, the 6-year-old formula has resulted in disparities and cutbacks in health services for veterans in the Northeast and Midwest. Veterans' hospitals in these regions lost a staggering $921 million.

The VERA formula is flawed for a number of reasons. First, the formula, which is based on the number of veterans, does not take into account the differences in various patient health care needs within different networks. As the GAO report states, the formula "excludes about one-fifth of VA's workload in determining each network's allocation." These are veterans who do not have service-related disabilities and whose incomes fall within a low-priority range, called "Priority 7".

Although this group is considered a low-priority, these individuals represent a growing percentage of the veteran population who seek care at VA facilities. From fiscal year 1996 through fiscal year 2001, the number of veterans with incomes within this range increased from 4 percent to 22 percent of the total caseload. However, the formula has not been adjusted to reflect the dramatic increase in these "Priority 7" cases, leaving many networks without the resources to meet the growing demand.

Further, the formula does not accurately reflect the higher cost of medical care in the Northeast. Because VA hospitals in New York City, and Nassau and Suffolk counties are situated in a high cost of living area, they tend to have an inflated number of Priority Group 7 veterans. VA health networks in high cost regions provide care to thousands of veterans without sufficient funding to do so. Additionally, taking into account the regional cost of living would relieve many Priority 7 veterans of the burden of making a copayment.

Finally, the number of veterans treated nationally over the last several years rose 47 percent, with all VA networks contributing to that increase. As I noted to Secretary Principi, a rise in patient caseloads spread across the health network should dictate an equitable distribution of funding. The GAO's recommendations can be reduced to one simple goal: "comparable resources for comparable workloads." Any delay in fixing this formula, the GAO stated, means that approximately $200 million in veterans' health funding annually would be allocated unjustly.

One of my State's newspapers, the Poughkeepsie Journal, reported that Secretary Principi agreed with the GAO's assessment of the formula but wanted to conduct another study of hospital workloads and patient needs before taking action. I strongly believe sufficient time has already been devoted to studying this issue. I urge Secretary Principi to take specific actions now to carry out the recommendations outlined in the GAO's report.

The courageous service and sacrifice of our Nation's veterans in defense of our nation and our democratic values should never be forgotten. Fulfilling our promise to provide for their health care needs is an important part of the enduring bond that we share. I urge my colleagues to support our legislation to remedy this unfair formula so that all of our nation's veterans have access to the health services they deserve.

By Mr. ALLARD (for himself, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 2584. A bill to support certain housing proposals in the fiscal year 2003 budget for the Federal Government, including the downpayment assistance initiative under the HOME Investment Partnerships Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the American Dream Downpayment Act, which will help thousands of families achieve the American Dream of homeownership. The rate of homeownership in the United States has risen steadily over the past few years. However, for many working families, low-income families, women-headed households, minorities, urban dwellers and young families the dream of homeownership remains elusive.

While Americans enjoy the world's greatest opportunities for becoming homeowners, only 46 percent of African-American and Hispanic families own their homes as compared to 74 percent of non-Hispanic whites who own their homes. For many of these families, the biggest barrier to homeownership is their inability to afford downpayment requirements and closing costs.

To help eliminate the gaps in homeownership achievement, I am introducing the American Dream Downpayment Act. This legislation will help 40,000 families annually, focusing on low-income families who are first-time homebuyers. The American Dream

Downpayment Fund will provide communities across America with $200 million in grants to help homebuyers with the downpayment and closing costs.

The American Dream Downpayment Fund, which will be administered as a part of HUD's existing HOME Investment Partnerships Program, HOME, will make more than 400 State and local governments eligible to receive the $200 million in grant funding to help more families achieve the American Dream of homeownership.

The positive effects of homeownership exist on many levels: homeownership has public benefits in the form of neighborhood stability, individual benefits in the form of the financial rewards that come from the appreciation of equity in a home over time, and personal benefits that stem from the satisfaction of attaining a goal, the pride of ownership, and a greater sense of security. In addition to these affirmative impacts of homeownership, the Homeownership Alliance released findings of a study revealing that children living in owned homes had nine percent higher achievement in mathematics and seven percent higher achievement in reading.

I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate on the American Dream Downpayment Act. I believe this legislation will be critical in helping more families achieve the American Dream of homeownership.

I ask unanimous consent the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2584

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “American Dream Downpayment Act”.

SEC. 2. DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE INITIATIVE UNDER HOME PROGRAM.

(a) DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE INITIATIVE.—Subtitle E of title II of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12821) is amended to read as follows:

“Subtitle E—Other Assistance

“SEC. 271. DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE INITIATIVE.

“(a) GRANT AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may make grants to participating jurisdictions to assist low-income families to achieve homeownership, in accordance with this section.

“(b) ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Grants made under this section may be used only for downpayment assistance toward the purchase of single family housing by low-income families who are first-time homebuyers.

“(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subtitle, the term ‘downpayment assistance’ means assistance to help a family acquire a principal residence.

“(c) HOUSING STRATEGY.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section for a fiscal year, a participating jurisdiction shall include in its comprehensive housing affordability strategy submitted under section 105 for such year, a description of the use of the grant amounts.

“(d) FORMULA ALLOCATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate any amounts made available for assistance under this section for the fiscal year in accordance with a formula, established by the Secretary, that considers a participating jurisdiction's need for and prior commitment to assistance to homebuyers.

“(2) ALLOCATION AMOUNTS.—The formula referred to in paragraph (1) may include minimum and maximum allocation amounts.

“(e) REALLOCATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if any amounts allocated to a participating jurisdiction under this section become available for reallocation, the amounts shall be reallocated to other participating jurisdictions in accordance with the formula established pursuant to subsection (d).

“(2) EXCEPTION.—If a local participating jurisdiction failed to receive amounts allocated under this section and is located in a State that is a participating jurisdiction, the funds shall be reallocated to the State.

“(f) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER PROVISIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, grants made under this section shall not be subject to the provisions of this title.

“(2) APPLICABLE PROVISIONS.—In addition to the requirements of this section, grants made under this section shall be subject to the provisions of title I, sections 215(b), 218, 219, 221, 223, 224, and 226(a) of subtitle A of this title, and subtitle F of this title.

“(3) REFERENCES.—In applying the requirements of subtitle A referred to in paragraph (2)—

“(A) any references to funds under subtitle A shall be considered to refer to amounts made available for assistance under this section; and

“(B) any references to funds allocated or reallocated under section 217 or 217(d) shall be considered to refer to amounts allocated or reallocated under subsection (d) or (e) of this section, respectively.

“(g) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Notwithstanding section 212(c), a participating jurisdiction may use funds under subtitle A for administrative and planning costs of the jurisdiction in carrying out this section, and the limitation in section 212(c) shall be based on the total amount of funds available under subtitle A and this section.

“(h) FUNDING.—

“(1) FISCAL YEAR 2002.—This section constitutes the subsequent legislation authorizing the Downpayment Assistance Initiative referred to in the item relating to the ‘HOME Investment Partnerships Program’ in title II of the Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development, and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107–73; 115 Stat. 666).

“(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $200,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.”.

(b) RELOCATION ASSISTANCE AND DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE.—Subtitle F of title II of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act is amended by inserting after section 290 (42 U.S.C. 12840) the following:

“SEC. 291. RELOCATION ASSISTANCE AND DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE.

“The Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 shall not apply to downpayment assistance under this title.”.

SEC. 3. REAUTHORIZATION OF SHOP PROGRAM.

Section 11(p) of the Housing Opportunity Program Extension Act of 1996 (42 U.S.C. 12805 note) is amended by striking “such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2001” and inserting “$65,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004”.

SEC. 4. REAUTHORIZATION OF HOPE VI PROGRAM.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 24(m)(1) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437v(m)(1)) is amended by striking “$600,000,000” and all that follows through “2002” and inserting the following: “$574,000,000 for fiscal year 2003”.

(b) SUNSET.—Section 24(n) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437v(n)) is amended by striking “September 30, 2002” and inserting “September 30, 2003”.

By Mr. CRAIG (for himself and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 2585. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to disclaim any Federal interest in lands adjacent to Spirit Lake and Twin Lakes in the State of Idaho resulting from possible omission of lands from an 1880 survey; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, today I introduce this bill, Spirit Lake and Twin Lakes Omitted Lands Act of 2002 to help resolve a land ownership problem that affects over 400 private property owners and homeowners located around Spirit Lake and Twin Lakes in Kootenai County, ID.

In 1880, a public land survey prepared under contract with the General Land Office, grossly misrepresented portions of the actual lakeshore of the two lakes. The surveys show the meander lines along the lakes up to one-half mile away from their actual location. The errors were not discovered until recently. Over the years, the shorelines of these popular lakes have become heavily developed and property owners have purchased their property and held it in good faith ownership. Most of the property owners affected by this situation have a chain of title that goes back over 100 years. Due to the inaccuracy of the original government survey, county officials have expressed concern regarding their inability to approve and regulate new developments, surveys, permits, etc. The Bureau of Land Management, the responsible Federal agency, has determined that it has no interest in the affected land and wishes only to remove the cloud on the titles.

Under current federal law the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) would be required to conduct a resurvey to properly describe the land. Much of this land would then become “omitted land” and would revert to federal ownership. Landowners who already paid fair market value for the land would then have to re-purchase it, along with paying a $50 application fee, and paying for the appraisal, survey, and conveyance costs.

Obviously, this is not an acceptable solution and does not provide the most equitable benefit to the public, so Senator CRAPO and I are introducing this legislation. A companion bill is being offered in the House of Representatives by Mr. OTTER. This legislation will authorize funds for the BLM to resurvey the land and direct the BLM to issue disclaimers of interest to all of the affected property owners. This is the only acceptable solution and one that keeps the landowners whole.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2585

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The meander lines in the original surveys by John B. David, deputy surveyor, of two lakes in the State of Idaho, Spirit Lake, formerly known as Lake Tesemini, located in T. 53 N.:, R. 4 W., Boise Meridian, and Twin Lakes, formerly known as Fish Lake, located in T. 52 N. and T. 53 N., R. 4 W., Boise Meridian, do not reflect the current line of ordinary high water conditions.

(2) All lands adjacent to the original meander lines have been patented.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue a recordable disclaimer of interest by the United States to any omitted lands or lands lying outside the record meander lines in the vicinity of the lakes referred to in subsection (a).

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) RECORDABLE DISCLAIMER OF INTEREST.—The term "recordable disclaimer of interest" means a document recorded in the county clerk's office or other such local office where real property documents are recorded, in which the United States disclaims any right, title, or interest to those lands found lying outside the recorded meander lines of the lakes referred to in section 1(a)(1), including omitted lands, if any.

(2) OMITTED LANDS.—The term "omitted lands" means those lands that were in place on the date of the original surveys referred to in section 1(a)(1) but were not included in the survey of the township and the meander lines of the water body due to gross error or fraud by the original surveyor.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. SURVEYS.

The Secretary shall—

(1) conduct a survey investigation of the conditions along the lakeshores of Spirit Lake and Twin Lakes in the townships referenced in section 1(a); and

(2) after the completion of the survey investigation, resurvey the original meander lines along the lakeshores, using the results of the survey investigation.

SEC. 4. DISCLAIMER OF INTEREST IN LANDS ADJACENT TO SPIRIT LAKE AND TWIN LAKES, IDAHO.

Upon acceptance and approval of the surveys under section 3 by the Secretary, the Secretary shall—

(1) prepare a recordable disclaimer of interest with land descriptions, using the lot or tract numbers of the omitted lands, if any, and lands lying outside the record meander lines, as shown on the survey plats; and

(2) record such recordable disclaimer of interest simultaneously with the filing of the surveys.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $400,000 to carry out this Act. Funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act may be available without fiscal year limitation.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2587. A bill to establish the Joint Federal and State Navigable Waters Commission of Alaska; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that will help rectify a long-standing problem that adversely affects an array of citizens, landowners, and government entities in Alaska. The Alaska Navigable Waters Commission legislation will create a joint Federal-State commission to establish a process to facilitate determinations of the navigable status of lakes, rivers, and streams in Alaska. This is a vital step in determining the ownership of the riverbanks and submerged lands.

Under the Equal Footing Doctrine and the Submerged Lands Act, every state gains title to the submerged lands that underlie navigable waterways within its borders upon entering the Union. Or, I should say, is supposed to gain title. For decades now, the State of Alaska has been in the unique position of having unresolved navigability determinations for tens of thousands of waterways around the state. This leaves not only the ownership status in limbo but causes unnecessary jurisdictional problems and headaches. This is an intolerable position for Alaskans.

In fact, since Alaska became a State in 1959, only 13 of its more than 22,000 rivers have been determined to be navigable, and the status of well over one million lakes has been left in question. The only recourse available to the State has been to pursue litigation against the United States, a time-consuming, expensive, and unwarranted requirement.

To date, the Federal Government has been unwilling to sit down with the State and make these determinations, even though for the vast majority of these waterways, no reasonable person could disagree as to the navigability of the waters under well-established legal standards.

I want to stress to my colleagues that this bill does not change in any way the legal criteria for navigability determinations. Those have been well settled in a body of Federal case law, led by the Gulkana decision, that stands undisturbed by this legislation. What the bill does is create a joint, Federal-State body to engage in dialogue that will help to resolve these long-standing disputes, and bring Alaska the same legal rights enjoyed by its 49 sister States.

Creating a joint commission to resolve thorny Federal-State issues is not a novel concept. In 1971, the Congress and the State of Alaska created a joint commission to assist in the land-use planning process created under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. This process streamlines communication between the State and Federal governments, and creates an infrastructure for ongoing negotiation over difficult issues. It also obviates the need for litigation over the status of those waterways where agreement can be reached. I think we all can agree that anything that reduces the need for litigation is a good thing.

The Alaska legislature has considered companion legislation, introduced by the Senate President, Rick Halford, and the Speaker of the Alaska House, Brian Porter. That legislation has now been approved by both houses of the legislature. We should enact Federal legislation so that we may join the State of Alaska in seeking to rectify the problem.

I encourage my colleagues to support this bill. Under the Equal Footing Doctrine, Alaska is supposed to enjoy the same rights and privileges as all other states. This bill is another important step in making that national principle a reality.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Mrs. BOXER):

S. 2588. A bill to prohibit the exportation of natural gas from the United States to Mexico for use in electric energy generation units near the United States border that do not comply with air quality control requirements that provide air quality protection that is at least equivalent to the protection provided by requirements applicable in the United States; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to protect those living along the California-Mexican border from harmful power plant emissions.

This bill, which Congressman DUNCAN HUNTER is also introducing today in the House of Representatives, will prevent power plants built in Mexico from using natural gas from the United States, unless firms operating these plants agree to comply with California's air pollution standards.

Currently there are two new power plants planned for Mexicali, Mexico, a city right across the border from Imperial County, California. Imperial County is the region in Southern California impacted most by pollution in Mexico. And since the county has some of the worst air quality in the United States and one of the highest childhood asthma rates in the State, I believe these new plants must meet California emission standards.

One of the Mexicali plants, which is being built by Sempra Energy, will have pollution mitigation technology to minimize the impact of air pollution on the residents of the Imperial Valley. However, the other plant, to be built by InterGen, will not.

I am introducing this legislation today to make sure any plant that comes online along the California-Mexican border meets the same air quality standards as plants in California.

The residents of Imperial County and the entire Southern California region deserve nothing less.

I have heard from many constituents in Southern California concerned about the InterGen plant and local officials in Imperial County are adamantly opposed to the InterGen plant because the company has refused to install pollution control devices on all four operating units.

This legislation will ensure energy plants along the border employ the best technology available to control pollution and protect the public health for residents of Southern California and other border regions in a similar situation.

The bill will prohibit energy companies from exporting natural gas from the United States for use in Mexico unless the natural gas fired generators south of the border meet the air standards prevalent in the United States. This will effectively cut power plants off from their natural gas supply if they do not meet higher emissions standards.

This legislation will not constrain power plants that were put online prior to January 1, 2002. It will apply to plants built after the new year and projects that come online in the future.

This bill will only apply to power plants within 50 miles of the U.S.-Mexican border.

And the legislation will only apply to power plants that generate more than 50 megawatts of power. We do not want to block any moves to replace dirty diesel back-up generators with cleaner natural-gas fired small power sources.

The bill calls for collaboration between the Secretary of Commerce and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to determine if a power plant is in compliance with relevant emission standards.

I support the development of new energy projects for California because I believe we need to bring more power online. However, I do not believe the fact that we need more power in California should allow companies to take advantage of this need and use it as an excuse to devote less attention to clean air and public health.

It is not unreasonable to ensure that companies making money in the California energy market meet strict environmental standards. This legislation is meant to strike a balance between promoting new sources of energy south of the border and protecting the environment throughout the border region. It is not a final resolution of these cross-border issues, but I believe it is a good first step.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 2589. A bill to provide for the prohibition of snow machines within the boundaries of the "Old Park" within the boundaries of Denali National Park and Preserve, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to resolve the issue of snowmobile access in Denali National Park in my home State of Alaska.

Denali National Park and Preserve encompasses just under 5 million acres in the interior of Alaska, including North America's highest mountain, 20,320-foot Mount McKinley. Large glaciers of the Alaska Range, caribou, Dall sheep, moose, grizzly bears and timber wolves live within this great landscape.

The original Mt. McKinley National Park was created on February 26, 1917 and additional acreage was added in 1922 and 1932, bringing the park size to 1.9 million acres. In September of 1978 a separate Denali National Monument was proclaimed. In 1980, Congress enacted the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, ANILCA. ANILCA incorporated Mt. McKinley National Park and the National Monument to create the 4.7, plus million acre Denali National Park and Preserve.

Section 1110(a) of ANILCA, mandates motorized vehicle access for the purpose of engaging in traditional activities in specific conservation system units. However, the National Park Service recently redefined "traditional use," and instead ordered the "old Mt. McKinley National Park closed to snowmobiles, which common sense dictates are motorized vehicles.

For the past two years, this closure has been before the Federal Courts in Alaska in litigation filed by the International Snowmobile Manufactures Association and the Alaska State Snowmobilers Association against the Department of the Interior and the National Park Service.

A few months ago, the plaintiffs dismissed their suit against the Government, and, with the approval of the Department of Justice, both parties are seeking a more reasoned legislative solution to address the access issue once and for all.

This legislation provides such a solution, it addresses snowmobile access in the 1.9 million acre "Old Park" by permanently excluding approximately 1.5 million acres north of the Alaska Range from snow machine access while reaffirming the applicability to Section 1110(a) access for this actibviey in approximately 400,000 acres south of the Alaska Range. In short, this solution eliminates conflict between the various user groups, and the many issues relating to wildlife and natural resource protection.

I thank the Alaska State Snowmobile Association, Inc. and the International Snowmobile Manufactures Association, for their actions to dismiss the legal challenge involving the used of snow machines in Denali National Park and Preserve. I look forward to working with the Associations; the Department of the Interior; the National Park Service; my colleagues on both sides of the Capitol; as well as other interested parties, for their assistance in developing environmentally and scientifically sound decisions and solution that will achieve both reasonable access and protection for the wildlife and valuable natural resources found in this outstanding unit of the National Park System.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2589

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SNOWMOBILE CLOSURE.

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, those portions of Denali National Park and Preserve depicted as "Area A", within the exterior boundaries of the former Mt. McKinley National Park, on map numbered 222 and entitled Denali National Park and Preserve, dated "revised 1999", shall not be considered a conservation system unit for the purposes of access by snowmachines pursuant to Section 1110(a) of Public Law 96–487 nor subject to the Departmental regulations implementing that subsection.

(b) The Statement of Finding, dated June 2000; the Environmental Assessment, revised June 6, 2000; the Finding of No Significant Impact, dated June 6, 2000; and the regulations promulgated by the National Park Service on June 19, 2000 that are codified at 36 Code of Federal Regulations 13.63(h)(1)–(3), all relating to the closure of portions of Denali National Park and Preserve to snowmobile use, are hereby revoked, and the use of snow machines shall be permitted within "Area B" as depicted on the map referenced in subsection (a).

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. BREAUX, and Mr. GREGG):

S. 2590. A bill to amend title IX of the Public Heath Service Act to provide for the improvement of patient safety and to reduce the incidence of events that adversely effect patient safety; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today with my colleagues Senators JEFFORDS, BREAUX, and GREGG in introducing crucial legislation, the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act.

Each year, as many as 98,000 people in the United States die as a result of medical errors. More Americans die each year from medical errors than from breast cancer, AIDS, or motor vehicle accidents. As a physician who has taken the Hippocratic oath "To do no harm," the status quo is simply unacceptable. As the Institute of Medicine wrote in its landmark 1999 report, To Err is Human: "[I]t is simply not acceptable for patients to be harmed by the same health care system that is supposed to offer healing and comfort."

The legislation we are introducing today will go a long way toward preventing many of these tragedies. Although a variety of patient safety initiatives are underway in the private sector as well as within the Department of Health and Human Services, and in the states, Congress has an important role to play in reinforcing, encouraging, and enhancing these efforts.

The major contribution of this legislation is to foster an open, collaborative environment where doctors, nurses, and other health professionals can share information freely and analyze it thoroughly. Health care providers should not be punished for trying to learn from their mistakes, reduce medical errors, and improve the quality of care they deliver to patients.

As a physician and a scientist, I know first hand about the enormous complexities of medicine today and the intricate system in which providers deliver care. I also recognize the need to examine medical errors closely in order to determine where the system has failed patients, and how it can be improved. Yet, adequate protections do not exist today to foster this type of learning and improvement environment. For example, hospitals currently rely upon Mortality and Morbidity Conference to share information about medical errors that occur with respect to individual patients. Unfortunately, because these conferences are focused on events involving individual patients within a single hospital, it is impossible to address system-wide quality and safety problems that may exist across hospital systems and within broader communities. Fear of litigation is the primary barrier to sharing and analyzing information that could save lives and improve treatment within the broader health care community.

We have seen this type of non-punitive reporting model work to vastly improve safety in other situations. In 1975, the Federal Aviation Administration established the Aviation Safety Reporting System, ASRS, to encourage pilots, controllers, flight attendants, mechanics, and the public to voluntarily report actual or potential discrepancies and deficiencies involving the safety of aviation operations. Because this information was widely shared and analyzed, the ASRS helped to significantly improve aviation safety in the United States. The risk of dying in a domestic jet flight decreased from one in two million in 1967 to 1976 to only one in eight million in the 1990s.

The Institute of Medicine, as well as many experts who have testified before Congress during the past few years, have strongly recommended that Congress provide the same type of legal protections for information gathered and reported to improve health care quality and increase patient safety. Without these protections, patient safety improvements will continue to be hampered by fears of retribution and recrimination. If we are to change the health care culture from "name, shame, and blame" to a culture of safety and continuous quality improvement, we must provide these basic protections.

In extending these protections, we have tried to encourage widespread voluntary error reporting while continuing to allow access to medical records and other information that should be available to patients for litigation or other purposes. Protecting data reported to a certified patient safety reporting system does not mean that such information cannot be obtained through other avenues if it is important to securing redress for harm. At the same time, information generated by this new reporting system designed specifically to reduce errors and broadly benefit patients should not become fodder for increased litigation. Moreover, the legislation expressly allows for patient safety information to be disclosed in the context of a disciplinary proceeding or criminal case where it is 1. material to the proceeding; 2. within the public interest; and 3. not available from any other source.

I want to thank Senators JEFFORDS, BREAUX, and GREGG for their support, and input into this legislation. I look forward to working with them, Senator KENNEDY, and my other colleagues in both the House and Senate, to pass legislation that will advance patient safety efforts.

I also value the leadership of the Bush Administration on this critical issue. The Administration's efforts to improve patient safety are underscored by the commitment, support and direct involvement of both Secretary Thompson of the Department of Health and Human Services and Secretary O'Neill of the Department of Treasury in helping to shape this legislation.

Americans take pride in offering the most advanced medical care in the world. A bounty of new devices, new treatments, and new techniques offer the hope of living longer and healthier than ever before. Yet, medical mistakes continue to take thousands of lives and cost billions of dollars each year. We must not let the miracle of modern medicine be extinguished by medical errors. This bill will make the changes in culture and communications that are needed to increase the safety of America's health care system, and improve the quality of care delivered to America's patients.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am happy to have the opportunity today to speak on the vital issue of patient safety and medical errors, and to introduce legislation that will ensure better health care for all Americans. In 1999, the Institute of Medicine published a classic reference book titled To Err is Human, which reported that hospital medical errors contribute to approximately 100,000 deaths a year.

This troubling statistic has been verified by research done by the Commonwealth Foundation and reviewed by articles in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the Annals of Internal Medicine, and the New England Journal of Medicine. This statistic shows that medical errors are a more common cause of death than motor vehicle accidents or breast cancer, and it puts medical errors as the eighth leading cause of death in the United States.

This is totally unacceptable and it need not be occuring at all. Today, I am pleased to introduce legislation with my colleagues Senators FRIST, BREAUX, and GREGG, the "Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act," that will put us on the path to correcting these medical errors.

The "Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act" lays the groundwork for preventing these unnecessary deaths and injuries. Only by providing a framework through which medical errors can be reported and analyzed will we be able to make changes, strengthen and improve our health-care system and reduce morbidity and mortality.

Since the 106th Congress, the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee has held five hearings on this important issue. The testimony given during these hearings reflected an overwelling agreement with the IOM report and the "Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act," acts upon the IOM's findings and recommendations

Key elements of To Err is Human call for improvements in patient safety by developing a learning, rather than a punitive environment; legal protections of privacy and privilege that would foster care systems to be reviewed and appropriate collaborations to occur in developing and implementing patient safety improvement strategies.

Our legislation addresses all of these concerns. Currently, adequate legal protections and a non-punitive environment do not exist to foster the exchange of information and the analysis that is needed to deal with the complex issues of improving patient safety. Our measure creates opportunities for higher standards of continuous safety improvement, and encourages a new culture of patient safety dialogue to insure that safety information will be shared voluntarily and that appropriate collaboration and analysis will occur. It can not be overly stress that an environment where information, data, process, and recommendations enjoy legal protection and privilege it is essential to any safety organization.

These are the key elements of what the "Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act" will do. It promotes a "culture of safety" in our health care system by providing for the legal protection of information reported voluntarily for the purposes of quality improvement and patient safety. It creates incentives for creating voluntary reporting systems that are non-punitive and promote learning. It recognizes that to be effective, these systems must have the buy-in, trust, and cooperation of the health care providers. It recognizes the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) as the leader in patient; safety for funding research and for dissemination of information learned about improving patient safety: and finally, it complements many ongoing patient safety initiatives in the public and private sector.

Finally, I want to point out what the bill does not do: It does not change existing remedies available to injured patients or limit a patient's access to their medical record; it does not "shield" or put patient information that is otherwise available beyond the reach for the purposes of disciplinary, civil or criminal proceedings; it does not change current regulatory processes or add new regulatory requirements; and it does not create mandatory, punitive reporting systems.

Our bill enjoys widespread endorsement by over 40 hospital, patient, doctor, and consumer advocacy organizations, and this degree of support underscores the broad appeal and essential nature of this proposed legislation. It is my strong desire that this bill receive the prompt attention that the issue clearly deserves.

All of us are justifiably proud of our hospital system and the wonders of medicine and technology. But we can no longer ignore the well documented incidence of medical errors, which waste needed medical resources and cause excessive medical complications and unacceptable loss of life. Without attention to this matter, it is reasonable to expect that thousands of innocents will suffer unnecessarily in our hospitals. We simply must not allow this to happen.

S. 2591. A bill to reauthorize the Mammography Quality Standards Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Mammography Quality Standards Reauthorization Act of 2002. This important bipartisan bill will continue a valuable program that helps save women's lives. I am proud that my good friend, Senator SNOWE, and other colleagues have joined on a bipartisan basis to introduce this legislation.

Mammography is not perfect, but it is the best screening tool we have now. Mammograms must be as safe and accurate as possible. A mammogram is worse than useless if it produces a poor-quality image or is misinterpreted. That's why I have fought over the last 10 years to make them even better.

The Mammography Quality Standards Act, MQSA, that I authored has improved the quality of mammograms in this country over the last 10 years. MQSA has brought facilities nationwide into compliance with Federal quality standards. Before MQSA, tests were misread, women were misdiagnosed, and people died as a result of sloppy work. This year Congress must reauthorize the Mammography Quality Standards Act, because women must continue to have safe, quality mammograms. Until there are more effective screening tools, mammography is still the front line against breast cancer.

Ten years ago before the Mammography Quality Standards Act, MQSA, first became law, there was an uneven patchwork of standards for mammography in this country. Image quality of mammograms varied widely. The first rule of all medical treatment is: Above all things, do no harm. And a bad mammogram can do real harm by leading a woman and her doctor to believe that nothing is wrong when something is. The result can be unnecessary suffering or even a death that could have been prevented. That is why this legislation is so important.

What MQSA does is require that all facilities that provide mammograms meet key safety and quality-assurance standards in the area of personnel, equipment, and operating procedures. Before the law passed, tests were misread, women were misdiagnosed, and people died as a result of sloppy work. Since 1992, MQSA has been successful in raising the quality of mammography services that women receive.

What are these national, uniform quality standards for mammography? Well, facilities are required to use equipment designed specifically for mammography. Only radiological technologists can perform mammography. Only qualified doctors can interpret the results of mammography. Facilities must establish a quality assurance and control program to ensure reliability, clarity and accurate interpretation of mammograms. Facilities must be inspected annually by qualified inspectors. Finally, facilities must be accredited by an accrediting body approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

MQSA also ensures that women receive direct written notification of their mammogram results. Women will not assume that "no news is good news" when this is not always the case. They know what their results are, so that they can get any follow up care they need.

The bill that I am introducing today extends the successful MQSA program for another five years. It also allows the Secretary of Health and Human Services to issue a temporary certificate to a mammography facility if certain conditions have prevented the facility from completing the reaccreditation process before its certificate expires. What does this mean? If a facility acquires new mammography equipment and this prevents the facility from meeting reaccreditation time frames, the facility could get a temporary certificate that would allow it to continue to perform mammograms for up to 45 days. The temporary certificate can only be issued if the facility's accreditation body has issued a 45-day accreditation extension. This will provide protection in the law, so that in certain circumstances a mammography facility will not have to close its doors when its certificate expires before it is reaccredited.

This bill also brings to bear the expertise of the Institute of Medicine and the General Accounting Office to further improve MQSA and provide Congress with expert recommendations to consider during the next reauthorization of MQSA.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to reauthorize this important program this year. Last year, an estimated 192,200 women were diagnosed with breast cancer in this country and about 39,600 women died from breast cancer. Early detection and treatment are essential to reducing breast cancer deaths. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important bill, and I look forward to its enactment this year.

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself, Mr. DEWINE, and Ms. STABENOW):

S. 2592. A bill to provide affordable housing opportunities that are headed by grandparents and other relatives of children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I am sure that each and every member of the United States Senate, if asked, could share fond memories of times they spent with their grandparents. I know that for me many of my most memorable childhood memories were spent with my grandmother and grandfather. Summer vacations, Christmas dinners and school recitals were all the more special because Grandma or Grandpa were there. Grandparents are always there to share words of wisdom and windows to the past with their grandchildren. They provide unconditional love and support to parents and their children as they prepare to become our Nation's next generation.

Today, over 4 million grandparents in America are doing more than attending birthday parties and buying their grandchild's first bicycle. The US Census bureau reports that over 4 million grandparents are serving as a full time parent to their grandchildren. In my own State, Louisiana, over 150,000 grandparents are filling these roles. Many of these children have parents who have died, are in prison, or are suffering from substance abuse or mental illness. Others have been taken out of abusive homes. These "grandfamilies" come in all shapes and sizes. Some live in rural areas, some live in cities, others in suburbs. They come from all races, ethnicities and social status and they live in every single State in the Nation.

Grandparents raising children face many barriers, especially if they do not have legal custody of the children, as is the case with a large portion of these caregivers. Most of these grandparents were at a point in their life when the major decisions faced by their peers are surrounding prescription drug coverage and retirement plans. Instead, these seniors are faced with questions about homework, the cost of baby formula and diapers, and where to find safe and affordable housing big enough for the whole family. While this bill does not address all of these barriers, it does attempt to address the critical need for affordable housing.

These families often live in small apartments, assisted living communities or houses that are not suitable for the children they care for. If the grandparent is living in public senior housing, where children are disallowed, they are often subject to eviction if the children are discovered. Furthermore, if a housing development is constructed for seniors, these apartments are often not "child proofed" and there are often no places for the children to play safely. If these grandparents can afford to move to housing that is more suitable for the children, they are often forced to give up some of the amenities that improve an elderly person's quality of life, such as ramps and bathroom rails.

Many programs throughout the Nation have tried to address the need to provide safe and affordable housing for these families. One program, Grandfamilies House, in Massachusetts provides 26, two, three and four bedroom apartments that come equipped with the safety features needed by the older and younger residents it hopes to serve. In addition, they provide on site services to residents, including support groups, exercise programs and a before and after school program. This program is serving as a model to other communities that are hoping to create such an environment for their intergenerational families. There are many localities that have begun the process of implementing programs like the Grandfamilies House in: Baltimore, MD; Buffalo, NY; Chicago, IL, Detroit, MI, Nashville, TN; New York City, NY; Cleveland, OH and Philadelphia, PA.

This bill would allow these programs to grow and prosper as well as encouraging other public and private partners to engage in developing these types of programs. Specifically, this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Housing and Urban Development to provide grants under a demonstration program that would be targeted toward meeting the housing and service needs of grandparent headed households. Furthermore, it clarifies key sections of federal housing law to ensure that grandparents raising grandchildren are able to access the federal assistance provided under federal housing programs. Finally, it directs the Secretary of HUD to provide specialized training to HUD personnel focused on grandparent-headed and relative-headed families.

With 4 million children living solely with grandparents or other relatives, safe and affordable housing for these families is a concern that must be addressed. This is a simple and cost efficient way to begin to address this important question. I would like to thank my colleagues, Senator DEWINE and Senator STABENOW, for their support of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to join us in support of this bill and hope that it will become law this year.

STATEMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 281—DESIGNATING THE WEEK BEGINNING AUGUST 25, 2002, AS "NATIONAL FRAUD AGAINST SENIOR CITIZENS AWARENESS WEEK"

Mr. LEVIN (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mrs. CLINTON, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. BAYH, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. INOUYE, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. CAMPBELL) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 281

Whereas perpetrators of mail, telemarketing, and Internet fraud frequently target their schemes at senior citizens because seniors are often vulnerable and trusting people;

Whereas, as victims of such schemes, many senior citizens have been robbed of their hard-earned life savings and frequently pay an emotional cost, losing not only their money, but also their self-respect and dignity;

Whereas perpetrators of fraudulent schemes against American seniors often operate outside the United States, reaching their victims through the mail, telephone lines, and the Internet;

Whereas the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act increased the power of the United States Postal Service to protect consumers against those who use deceptive mailings featuring games of chance, sweepstakes, skill contests, and facsimile checks;

Whereas the Postal Inspection Service responded to 66,000 mail fraud complaints, arrested 1,691 mail fraud offenders, convicted 1,477 such offenders, and initiated 642 civil or administrative actions in fiscal year 2001;

Whereas mail fraud investigations by the Postal Inspection Service in fiscal year 2001 resulted in over $1,200,000,000 in court-ordered and voluntary restitution payments;

Whereas the Postal Inspection Service, in an effort to curb cross-border fraud, is involved in 3 major fraud task forces with law enforcement officials in Canada, namely, Project Colt in Montreal, The Strategic Partnership in Toronto, and Project Emptor in Vancouver;

Whereas consumer awareness is the best protection from fraudulent schemes; and

Whereas it is vital to increase public awareness of the enormous impact that fraud has on senior citizens in the United States, and to educate the public, senior citizens, their families, and their caregivers about the signs of fraudulent activities and how to report suspected fraudulent activities to the appropriate authorities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the week beginning August 25, 2002, as "National Fraud Against Senior Citizens Awareness Week"; and

(2) requests the President to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate activities and programs to—

(A) prevent the purveyors of fraud from victimizing senior citizens in the United States; and

(B) educate and inform the public, senior citizens, their families, and their caregivers about fraud perpetrated through mail, telemarketing, and the Internet.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution designating the week beginning August 25, 2002, as "National Fraud Against Senior Citizens Awareness Week." This legislation will bring increased awareness to mail, Internet and telemarketing schemes that frequently target elderly Americans. These schemes rob America's seniors not only of their hard-earned savings, but also of their self respect and dignity. Recognizing that increased awareness, especially on the part of seniors, their families and caregivers, is the best defense, this resolution highlights the efforts being made to protect our nation's elderly.

Last June, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations held two days of hearings that focused on the growing problem of Internet, mail and telemarketing fraud. The Subcommittee found that in this age of international communications, foreign countries have unfortunately become a major point of origin for lottery, sweepstakes, and advance-fee-for-loan scams that prey upon Americans through telemarketing. Worse yet, the Subcommittee found that such schemes often specifically target the elderly, who are often the most vulnerable and least able to afford being defrauded.

Last year, alone, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, USPIS, responded to 66,000 mail fraud complaints, arrested nearly 1700 mail fraud offenders, and convicted nearly 1500 such offenders. Moreover, mail fraud investigations resulted in over $1.2 billion in court-ordered restitution and voluntary restitution payments.

The USPIS has joined with the Senior Action Coalition, a grassroots multi-agency organization, to develop a national multi-media fraud prevention campaign. The campaign will include public service announcements as well as newspaper advertisements, mailing inserts and poster displays. Designating National Fraud Against Senior Citizen Awareness Week will highlight these efforts and help reach a wide segment of the elderly population and those who care for them.

I would like to thank Senator SUSAN COLLINS for cosponsoring this legislation as well as all of the other original cosponsors. I hope the rest of my colleagues will consider cosponsoring this resolution and that we can enact it well before the August recess so we can commemorate the week for the first time this year.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I join Senator LEVIN in submitting a resolution that will designate the week of August 25, 2002, as National Fraud Against Senior Citizens Awareness Week. This designation of this week will increase public awareness of mail, Internet and telemarketing schemes that target elderly Americans. It is through increased awareness on the part of seniors, their families, and their caregivers that such schemes, which rob seniors not only of their hard-earned savings but of their dignity and self respect, can best be prevented.

This kind of fraud, unfortunately, is pervasive. Last year alone, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service responded to 66,000 mail fraud complaints, arrested nearly 1,700 mail fraud offenders, and secured nearly 1,500 convictions.

The elderly are often especially vulnerable, and they are frequently among the least able to afford being defrauded. The AARP, the National Association of Attorneys General, and the Federal Trade Commission have estimated that 85 percent of the victims of telemarketing fraud are age 65 or older. During hearings of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations that I chaired last June on mail, Internet and telemarketing fraud, several elderly witnesses testified about how they had been defrauded of thousands of dollars and the resulting hardships caused by the loss of their life savings.

Mrs. Ann Hersom of Acton, for example, testified that her 80-year-old husband, formerly a successful businessman, had fallen prey to devious telemarketers and clever mail solicitations. She estimated that he lost $20,000 to these schemes, and described how devastating these losses had been to their family.

The telemarketing fraud industry is a highly mobile, sophisticated racket that very often involves "boiler rooms" in which hundreds of people make high pressure calls, sometimes 16 hours a day, seven days a week. These fraudulent telemarketers often gear their pitches to elderly citizens living alone and fearful of not having sufficient funds for their remaining years. In fact, it appears that some unscrupulous telemarketers may select their elderly victims by using lists to target those who have recently placed a spouse in a nursing home. Thus, the friendship and compassion these telemarketers appear to offer come when the elderly are particularly vulnerable to such enticements.

Foreign countries have unfortunately become a source of entry for lottery, sweepstakes and advance-fee-for-loan scams that prey upon Americans through direct mail and telemarketing. According to Federal Trade Commission figures, U.S. consumers filed nearly 13,000 complaints against foreign companies during calendar year 2001. Similarly, the dollar value of losses reported by consumers against these companies is nearly $25 million. In the first quarter of 2002, U.S. consumers have filed nearly 7,000 complaints against foreign companies.

How do we fight such fraud? The first line of defense against mail, Internet and telemarketing fraud is to promote public awareness of the dangers of such crimes, the types of schemes in which criminals are likely to engage, and what consumers can do to report fraudulent overtures and help law enforcement officials catch up with the con artists.

National Fraud Against Senior Citizens Week is designed to do just that. During the week of August 25, 2002, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, together with the Senior Action Coalition, a grassroots multi-agency organization based in Pittsburgh, will launch a national multi-media fraud prevention campaign. The campaign will be kicked off with events in Washington, DC, Maine, and elsewhere.

The campaign will include radio and television public service announcements by national spokesperson Betty White. On Sunday, August 25, announcements in newspapers will run in the 13 states that recorded the most complaints of fraud by seniors, including Maine. Poster displays highlighting the problem and what seniors and their caregivers can do to protect themselves and report fraud will be displayed in post office lobbies and other public areas, and mailers are planned to be sent to seniors. Designating National Fraud Against Senior Citizens Awareness Week will help reach a wide segment of America's elderly and those who care for them with the time-honored advice of: "If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is too good to be true."

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . EMERGENCY SUMMER SCHOOL FUNDING.

(a) FINDINGS; PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(A) Under the amendments made by the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, students and schools rightly are held accountable for meeting challenging State academic content and student academic achievement standards in mathematics, reading or language arts, and science.

(B) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program are critical to providing supplemental academic services and academic enrichment activities designed to help students meet local and State academic standards.

(C) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program help children and the children's families in the areas of youth development, drug and violence prevention, and character education.

(D) During the summer of 2002, school districts throughout the Nation will confront more than $200,000,000 in cuts to summer school programs, eliminating services and academic support to more than 150,000 struggling children.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to provide opportunities for communities to provide summertime activities in community learning centers that—

(A) provide opportunities for academic enrichment, including providing tutorial services to help students, particularly students who attend low-performing schools, to meet State and local student academic achievement standards in core academic subjects, such as reading and mathematics; and

(B) offer students an array of additional services, programs, and activities, such as youth development activities, drug and violence prevention programs, counseling programs, art, music, and recreation programs, technology education programs, and character education programs, that are designed to reinforce and complement the regular academic program of participating students.

(b) FUNDING FOR SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Provided that, in addition to amounts otherwise available to carry out section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)), $200,000,000 shall be available to carry out activities described in section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)) during the 2002 summer recess period.

(2) AWARDING OF GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 4202 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7172), the Secretary of Education shall award grants with funds made available under paragraph (1) on a competitive basis to eligible entities serving communities whose local educational agencies are not able to meet fully the communities' need for summer school programs.

(B) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Education shall give priority to an eligible entity that is a local educational agency or who serves a community whose local educational agency—

(i) serves high concentrations or numbers of low-income children;

(ii) before June 6, 2002, announced that the local educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school services in 2002; or

(iii) is located in a State whose State educational agency, before June 6, 2002, announced that the State educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school funding for 2002.

(3) Application and obligation.—

(A) Application.—Notwithstanding sections 4203 and 4204 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7173 and 7174), an eligible entity that desires a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary of Education at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of Education may require.

(B) Obligation.—Not later than 4 weeks after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Education shall obligate funds made available under this section.

(4) Definition of eligible entity.—In this section, the term "eligible entity" has the meaning given the term in section 4201 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7171).

(5) Emergency designation.—The entire amount necessary to carry out this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

SEC. . CONTAMINATED SEAFOOD.

(a) In General.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381) is amended by—

(1) redesignating subsections (b) through (g) as subsections (c) through (h), respectively; and

(2) inserting after subsection (a) the following:

"(b) Contaminated Seafood.—

"(1) Refusal of entry.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall issue an order refusing admission into the United States of all imports of seafood originating from a country or exporter if the Secretary determines, on the basis of evidence that the Secretary finds reliable and applicable, that shipments of such seafood are likely to contain 1 or more animal drugs listed in section 530.4(a) of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations. Such evidence may include—

"(A) the detection of such animal drugs by the Secretary;

"(B) the detection of such animal drugs by an entity commissioned to carry out examinations and investigations under section 702(a) of this Act (21 U.S.C., 372(a));

"(C) findings from an inspection team formed under paragraph (4); or

"(D) the detection by other importing countries of such animal drugs in shipments of seafood that originate from such country or exporter.

"(2) Allowance of individual shipments from exporting country or exporter.—Notwithsteanding an order under paragraph (1) with respect to seafood originating from a country or exporter, the Secretary may permit individual shipments of seafood originating in that country or from that exporter to be admitted into the United States if—

"(A) the exporter or importer presents evidence from a laboratory certified by the Secretary under paragraph (5) that a shipment does not contain a drug listed in section 530.41(a) of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations; or

"(B) the Secretary, or an entity commissioned to carry out examinations and investigations under section 702(a) of this Act (21 U.S.C. 372(a)), has inspected the shipment and has found that the shipment does not contain such a drug.

"(3) Cancellation of order.—The Secretary may cancel an order under paragraph (1) with respect to seafood exported from a country or exporter— if

"(A) an inspection team formed under paragraph (4) has determined that the prohibited drug at issue is no longer sold for use, or being used, in food-producing animals in the country in which the seafood originated; or

"(B) all shipments into the United States under paragraph (2) of seafood originating in that country or from that exporter more than 1 years after the date on which the Secretary issued the order have been found, under the procedures described in paragraph (2), not to contain such a drug.

"(4) Inspection team.—The Secretary may send 1 or more inspectors to a country or exporter from which seafood exported to the United States originates to assess whether any such drug is sold for use, or is being used in, food-producing animals in that country. The inspection team shall prepare a report for the Secretary with its findings. The Secretary shall cause the report to be published in the Federal Register no later than 90 days after the inspection team makes its final report. The Secretary shall notify the country or exporter through appropriate means as to the findings of the report no later than the date on which the report is published in the Federal Register.

"(5) Certified labs.—Within 90 days after the date of enactment of the 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act for Further Recovery From and Response To Terrorist Attacks on the United States, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a list of laboratories certified by the Secretary for purposes of paragraph (2)(A). The Secretary shall update the list, and publish the updated list, no less frequently than annually.".

"(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by—

(1) striking "subsection (b)" in subsection (a) and inserting "subsection (c)";

TITLE III—AMERICAN SERVICEMEMBERS' PROTECTION ACT

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "American Servicemembers' Protection Act of 2002".

SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On July 17, 1998, the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, meeting in Rome, Italy, adopted the "Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court". The vote on whether to proceed with the statute was 120 in favor to 7 against, with 21 countries abstaining. The United States voted against final adoption of the Rome Statute.

(2) As of April 30, 2001, 139 countries had signed the Rome Statute and 30 had ratified it. Pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, the statute will enter into force on the first day of the month after the 60th day following the date on which the 60th country deposits an instrument ratifying the statute.

(3) Since adoption of the Rome Statute, a Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court has met regularly to draft documents to implement the Rome Statute, including Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Elements of Crimes, and a definition of the Crime of Aggression.

(4) During testimony before the Congress following the adoption of the Rome Statute, the lead United States negotiator, Ambassador David Scheffer stated that the United States could not sign the Rome Statute because certain critical negotiating objectives of the United States had not been achieved. As a result, he stated: "We are left with consequences that do not serve the cause of international justice."

(5) Ambassador Scheffer went on to tell the Congress that: "Multinational peacekeeping forces operating in a country that has joined the treaty can be exposed to the Court's jurisdiction even if the country of the individual peacekeeper has not joined the treaty. Thus, the treaty purports to establish an arrangement whereby United States armed forces operating overseas could be conceivably prosecuted by the international court even if the United States has not agreed to be bound by the treaty. Not only is this contrary to the most fundamental principles of treaty law, it could inhibit the ability of the United States to use its military to meet alliance obligations and participate in multinational operations, including humanitarian interventions to save civilian lives. Other contributors to peacekeeping operations will be similarly exposed.".

(6) Notwithstanding these concerns, President Clinton directed that the United States sign the Rome Statute on December 31, 2000. In a statement issued that day, he stated that in view of the unremedied deficiencies of the Rome Statute, "I will not, and do not recommend that my successor submit the Treaty to the Senate for advice and consent until our fundamental concerns are satisfied".

(7) Any American prosecuted by the International Criminal Court will, under the Rome Statute, be denied procedural protections to which all Americans are entitled under the Bill of Rights to the United States Constitution, such as the right to trial by jury.

(8) Members of the Armed Forces of the United States should be free from the risk of prosecution by the International Criminal Court, especially when they are stationed or deployed around the world to protect the vital national interests of the United States. The United States Government has an obligation to protect the members of its Armed Forces, to the maximum extent possible, against criminal prosecutions carried out by the International Criminal Court.

(9) In addition to exposing members of the Armed Forces of the United States to the risk of international criminal prosecution, the Rome Statute creates a risk that the President and other senior elected and appointed officials of the United States Government may be prosecuted by the International Criminal Court. Particularly if the Preparatory Commission agrees on a definition of the Crime of Aggression over United States objections, senior United States officials may be at risk of criminal prosecution for national security decisions involving such matters as responding to acts of terrorism, preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and deterring aggression. No less than members of the Armed Forces of the United States, senior officials of the United States Government should be free from the risk of prosecution by the International Criminal Court, especially with respect to official actions taken by them to protect the national interests of the United States.

(10) Any agreement within the Preparatory Commission on a definition of the Crime of Aggression that usurps the prerogative of the United Nations Security Council under Article 39 of the charter of the United Nations to "determine the existence of any .... act of aggression" would contravene the charter of the United Nations and undermine deterrence.

(11) It is a fundamental principle of international law that a treaty is binding upon its parties only and that it does not create obligations for nonparties without their consent to be bound. The United States is not a party to the Rome Statute and will not be bound by any of its terms. The United States will not recognize the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court over United States nationals.

SEC. 3003. WAIVER AND TERMINATION OF PROHIBITIONS OF THIS TITLE.

(a) Authority To Initially Waive Sections 3005 and 3007.—The President is authorized to waive the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 for a single period of 1 year. A waiver under this subsection may be issued only if the President at least 15 days in advance of exercising such authority—

(1) notifies the appropriate congressional committees of the intention to exercise such authority; and

(2) determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that the International Criminal Court has entered into a binding agreement that—

(A) prohibits the International Criminal Court from seeking to exercise jurisdiction over the following persons with respect to actions undertaken by them in an official capacity:

(i) covered United States persons;

(ii) covered allied persons; and

(iii) individuals who were covered United States persons or covered allied persons; and

(B) ensures that no person described in subparagraph (A) will be arrested, detained, prosecuted, or imprisoned by or on behalf of the International Criminal Court.

(b) Authority To Extend Waiver of Sections 3005 and 3007.—The President is authorized to waive the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 for successive periods of 1 year each upon the expiration of a previous waiver pursuant to subsection (a) or this subsection. A waiver under this subsection may be issued only if the President at least 15 days in advance of exercising such authority—

(1) notifies the appropriate congressional committees of the intention to exercise such authority; and

(2) determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that the International Criminal Court—

(A) remains party to, and has continued to abide by, a binding agreement that—

(i) prohibits the International Criminal Court from seeking to exercise jurisdiction over the following persons with respect to actions undertaken by them in an official capacity:

(I) covered United States persons;

(II) covered allied persons; and

(III) individuals who were covered United States persons or covered allied persons; and

(ii) ensures that no person described in clause (i) will be arrested, detained, prosecuted, or imprisoned by or on behalf of the International Criminal Court; and

(B) has taken no steps to arrest, detain, prosecute, or imprison any person described in clause (i) of subparagraph (A).

(c) Authority To Waive Sections 3004 and 3006 With Respect to an Investigation or Prosecution of a Named Individual.—The President is authorized to waive the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004 and 3006 to the degree such prohibitions and requirements would prevent United States cooperation with an investigation or prosecution of a named individual by the International Criminal Court. A waiver under this subsection may be issued only if the President at least 15 days in advance of exercising such authority—

(1) notifies the appropriate congressional committees of the intention to exercise such authority; and

(2) determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that—

(A) a waiver pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 is in effect;

(B) there is reason to believe that the named individual committed the crime or crimes that are the subject of the International Criminal Court's investigation or prosecution;

(C) it is in the national interest of the United States for the International Criminal Court's investigation or prosecution of the named individual to proceed; and

(D) in investigating events related to actions by the named individual, none of the following persons will be investigated, arrested, detained, prosecuted, or imprisoned by or on behalf of the International Criminal Court with respect to actions undertaken by them in an official capacity:

(i) Covered United States persons.

(ii) Covered allied persons.

(iii) Individuals who were covered United States persons or covered allied persons.

(d) Termination of Waiver Pursuant to Subsection (c).—Any waiver or waivers exercised pursuant to subsection (c) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004 and 3006 shall terminate at any time that a waiver pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 expires and is not extended pursuant to subsection (b).

(e) Termination of Prohibitions of This Title.—The prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004, 3005, 3006, and 3007 shall cease to apply, and the authority of section 3008 shall terminate, if the United States becomes a party to the International Criminal Court pursuant to a treaty made under article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 3004. PROHIBITION ON COOPERATION WITH THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) Application.—The provisions of this section—

(1) apply only to cooperation with the International Criminal Court and shall not apply to cooperation with an ad hoc international criminal tribunal established by the United Nations Security Council before or after the date of the enactment of this Act to investigate and prosecute war crimes committed in a specific country or during a specific conflict; and

(2) shall not prohibit—

(A) any action permitted under section 3008; or

(B) communication by the United States of its policy with respect to a matter.

(b) Prohibition on Responding to Requests for Cooperation.—Notwithstanding section 1782 of title 28, United States Code, or any other provision of law, no United States Court, and no agency or entity of any State or local government, including any court, may cooperate with the International Criminal Court in response to a request for cooperation submitted by the International Criminal Court pursuant to the Rome Statute.

(c) Prohibition on Transmittal of Letters Rogatory From the International Criminal Court.—Notwithstanding section 1781 of title 28, United States Code, or any other provision of law, no agency of the United States Government may transmit for execution any letter rogatory issued, or other request for cooperation made, by the International Criminal Court to the tribunal, officer, or agency in the United States to whom it is addressed.

(d) Prohibition on Extradition to the International Criminal Court.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no agency or entity of the United States Government or of any State or local government may extradite any person from the United States to the International Criminal Court, nor support the transfer of any United States citizen or permanent resident alien to the International Criminal Court.

(e) Prohibition on Provision of Support to the International Criminal Court.—

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no agency or entity of the United States Government or of any State or local government, including any court, may provide support to the International Criminal Court.

(f) Prohibition on Use of Appropriated Funds To Assist the International Criminal Court.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds appropriated under any provision of law may be used for the purpose of assisting the investigation, arrest, detention, extradition, or prosecution of any United States citizen or permanent resident alien by the International Criminal Court.

(g) Restriction on Assistance Pursuant to Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties.—The United States shall exercise its rights to limit the use of assistance provided under all treaties and executive agreements for mutual legal assistance in criminal matters, multilateral conventions with legal assistance provisions, and extradition treaties, to which the United States is a party, and in connection with the execution or issuance of any letter rogatory, to prevent the transfer to, or other use by, the International Criminal Court of any assistance provided by the United States under such treaties and letters rogatory.

(h) Prohibition on Investigative Activities of Agents.—No agent of the International Criminal Court may conduct, in the United States or any territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, any investigative activity relating to a preliminary inquiry, investigation, prosecution, or other proceeding at the International Criminal Court.

SEC. 3005. RESTRICTION ON UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN CERTAIN UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS.

(a) Policy.—Effective beginning on the date on which the Rome Statute enters into force pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, the President should use the voice and vote of the United States in the United Nations Security Council to ensure that each resolution of the Security Council authorizing any peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations permanently exempts, at a minimum, members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in such operation from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court for actions undertaken by such personnel in connection with the operation.

(b) Restriction.—Members of the Armed Forces of the United States may not participate in any peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations, the creation of which is authorized by the United Nations Security Council on or after the date that the Rome Statute enters into effect pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, unless the President has submitted to the appropriate congressional committees a certification described in subsection (c) with respect to such operation.

(c) Certification.—The certification referred to in subsection (b) is a certification by the President that—

(1) members of the Armed Forces of the United States are able to participate in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation without risk of criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court because, in authorizing the operation, the United Nations Security Council permanently exempted, at a minimum, members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in the operation from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court for actions undertaken by them in connection with the operation;

(2) members of the Armed Forces of the United States are able to participate in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation without risk of criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court because each country in which members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in the operation will be present either is not a party to the International Criminal Court and has not invoked the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court pursuant to Article 12 of the Rome Statute, or has entered into an agreement in accordance with Article 98 of the Rome Statute preventing the International Criminal Court from proceeding against members of the Armed Forces of the United States present in that country; or

(3) the national interests of the United States justify participation by members of the Armed Forces of the United States in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation.

SEC. 3006. PROHIBITION ON DIRECT OR INDIRECT TRANSFER OF CLASSIFIED NATIONAL SECURITY INFORMATION AND LAW ENFORCEMENT INFORMATION TO THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) In General.—Not later than the date on which the Rome Statute enters into force, the President shall ensure that appropriate procedures are in place to prevent the transfer of classified national security information and law enforcement information to the International Criminal Court for the purpose of facilitating an investigation, apprehension, or prosecution.

(b) Indirect Transfer.—The procedures adopted pursuant to subsection (a) shall be designed to prevent the transfer to the United Nations and to the government of any country that is party to the International Criminal Court of classified national security information and law enforcement information that specifically relates to matters known to be under investigation or prosecution by the International Criminal Court, except to the degree that satisfactory assurances are received from the United Nations or that government, as the case may be, that such information will not be made available to the International Criminal Court for the purpose of facilitating an investigation, apprehension, or prosecution.

(c) Construction.—The provisions of this section shall not be construed to prohibit any action permitted under section 3008.

SEC. 3007. PROHIBITION OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO PARTIES TO THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) Prohibition of Military Assistance.—Subject to subsections (b) and (c), and effective 1 year after the date on which the Rome Statute enters into force pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, no United States military assistance may be provided to the government of a country that is a party to the International Criminal Court.

(b) National Interest Waiver.—The President may, without prior notice to Congress, waive the prohibition of subsection (a) with respect to a particular country if he determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that it is important to the national interest of the United States to waive such prohibition.

(c) Article 98 Waiver.—The President may, without prior notice to Congress, waive the prohibition of subsection (a) with respect to a particular country if he determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that such country has entered into an agreement with the United States pursuant to Article 98 of the Rome Statute preventing the International Criminal court from proceeding against United States personnel present in such country.

(d) Exemption.—The prohibition of subsection (a) shall not apply to the government of—

(1) a NATO member country;

(2) a major non-NATO ally (including Australia, Egypt, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Argentina, the Republic of Korea, and New Zealand); or

(3) Taiwan.

SEC. 3008. AUTHORITY TO FREE MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES AND CERTAIN OTHER PERSONS DETAINED OR IMPRISONED BY OR ON BEHALF OF THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) Authority.—The President is authorized to use all means necessary and appropriate to bring about the release of any person described in subsection (b) who is being detained or imprisoned by, on behalf of, or at the request of the International Criminal Court.

(b) Persons Authorized To Be Freed.—The authority of subsection (a) shall extend to the following persons:

(1) Covered United States persons.

(2) Covered allied persons.

(3) Individuals detained or imprisoned for official actions taken while the individual was a covered United States person or a covered allied person, and in the case of a covered allied person, upon the request of such government.

(c) Authorization of Legal Assistance.—When any person described in subsection (b) is arrested, detained, investigated, prosecuted, or imprisoned by, on behalf of, or at the request of the International Criminal Court, the President is authorized to direct any agency of the United States Government to provide—

(1) legal representation and other legal assistance to that person (including, in the case of a person entitled to assistance under section 1037 of title 10, United States Code, representation and other assistance in the manner provided in that section);

(2) exculpatory evidence on behalf of that person; and

(3) defense of the interests of the United States through appearance before the International Criminal Court pursuant to Article 18 or 19 of the Rome Statute, or before the courts or tribunals of any country.

(d) Bribes and Other Inducements Not Authorized.—This section does not authorize the payment of bribes or the provision of other such incentives to induce the release of a person described in subsection (b).

SEC. 3009. ALLIANCE COMMAND ARRANGEMENTS.

(a) Report on Alliance Command Arrangements.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President should transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a report with respect to each military alliance to which the United States is party—

(1) describing the degree to which members of the Armed Forces of the United States may, in the context of military operations undertaken by or pursuant to that alliance, be placed under the command or operational control of foreign military officers subject to the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court because they are nationals of a party to the International Criminal Court; and

(2) evaluating the degree to which members of the Armed Forces of the United States engaged in military operations undertaken by or pursuant to that alliance may be exposed to greater risks as a result of being placed under the command or operational control of foreign military officers subject to the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court.

(b) Description of Measures To Achieve Enhanced Protection for Members of the Armed Forces of the United States.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President should transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a description of modifications to command and operational control arrangements within military alliances to which the United States is a party that could be made in order to reduce any risks to members of the Armed Forces of the United States identified pursuant to subsection (a)(2).

(c) Submission in Classified Form.—The report under subsection (a), and the description of measures under subsection (b), or appropriate parts thereof, may be submitted in classified form.

SEC. 3010. WITHHOLDINGS.

Funds withheld from the United States share of assessments to the United Nations or any other international organization during any fiscal year pursuant to section 705 of the Admiral James W. Nance and Meg Donovan Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2000 and 2001 (as enacted by section 1000(a)(7) of Public Law 106–113; 113 Stat. 1501A–460), are authorized to be transferred to the Embassy Security, Construction and Maintenance Account of the Department of State.

SEC. 3011. APPLICATION OF SECTIONS 3004 AND 3006 TO EXERCISE OF CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITIES.

(a) In General.—Sections 3004 and 3006 shall not apply to any action or actions with respect to a specific matter involving the International Criminal Court taken or directed by the President on a case-by-case basis in the exercise of the President's authority as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States under article II, section 2 of the United States Constitution or in the exercise of the executive power under article II, section 1 of the United States Constitution.

(b) Notification to Congress.—

(1) In general.—Subject to paragraph (2), not later than 15 days after the President takes or directs an action or actions described in subsection (a) that would otherwise be prohibited under section 3004 or 3006, the President shall submit a notification of such action to the appropriate congressional committees. A notification under this paragraph shall include a description of the action, a determination that the action is in the national interest of the United States, and a justification for the action.

(2) Exception.—If the President determines that a full notification under paragraph (1) could jeopardize the national security of the United States or compromise a United States law enforcement activity, not later than 15 days after the President takes or directs an action or actions referred to in paragraph (1) the President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees that an action has been taken and a determination has been made pursuant to this paragraph. The President shall provide a full notification under paragraph (1) not later than 15 days after the reasons for the determination under this paragraph no longer apply.

(c) Construction.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as a grant of statutory authority to the President to take any action.

SEC. 3012. NONDELEGATION.

The authorities vested in the President by sections 3003 and 3011(a) may not be delegated by the President pursuant to section 301 of title 3, United States Code, or any other provision of law. The authority vested in the President by section 3005(c)(3) may not be delegated by the President pursuant to section 301 of title 3, United States Code, or any other provision of law to any official other than the Secretary of Defense, and if so delegated may not be subdelegated.

SEC. 3013. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this title and in section 706 of the Admiral James W. Nance and Meg Donovan Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2000 and 2001:

(1) Appropriate congressional committees.—The term "appropriate congressional committees" means the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

(2) Classified national security information.—The term "classified national security information" means information that is classified or classifiable under Executive Order 12958 or a successor Executive order.

(3) Covered allied persons.—The term "covered allied persons" means military personnel, elected or appointed officials, and other persons employed by or working on behalf of the government of a NATO member country, a major non-NATO ally (including Australia, Egypt, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Argentina, the Republic of Korea, and New Zealand), or Taiwan, for so long as that government is not a party to the International Criminal Court and wishes its officials and other persons working on its behalf to be exempted from the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court.

(4) Covered united states persons.—The term "covered United States persons" means members of the Armed Forces of the United States, elected or appointed officials of the United States Government, and other persons employed by or working on behalf of the United States Government, for so long as the United States is not a party to the International Criminal Court.

(5) Extradition.—The terms "extradition" and "extradite" mean the extradition of a person in accordance with the provisions of chapter 209 of title 18, United States Code, (including section 3181(b) of such title) and such terms include both extradition and surrender as those terms are defined in Article 102 of the Rome Statute.

(6) International criminal court.—The term "International Criminal Court" means the court established by the Rome Statute.

(7) Major non-nato ally.—The term "major non-NATO ally" means a country that has been so designated in accordance with section 517 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

(8) Participate in any peacekeeping operation under chapter vi of the charter of the united nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter vii of the charter of the united nations.—The term "participate in any peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations" means to assign members of the Armed Forces of the United States to a United Nations military command structure as part of a peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations in which those members of the Armed Forces of the United States are subject to the command or operational control of one or more foreign military officers not appointed in conformity with article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States.

(9) Party to the international criminal court.—The term "party to the International Criminal Court" means a government that has deposited an instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval, or accession to the Rome Statute, and has not withdrawn from the Rome Statute pursuant to Article 127 thereof.

(10) Peacekeeping operation under chapter vi of the charter of the united nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter vii of the charter of the united nations.—The term "peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations" means any military operation to maintain or restore international peace and security that—

(A) is authorized by the United Nations Security Council under chapter VI or VII of the charter of the United Nations; and

(B) is paid for from assessed contributions of United Nations members that are made available for peacekeeping or peace enforcement activities.

(11) Rome statute.—The term "Rome Statute" means the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted by the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court on July 17, 1998.

(12) Support.—The term "support" means assistance of any kind, including financial support, transfer of property or other material support, services, intelligence sharing, law enforcement cooperation, the training or detail of personnel, and the arrest or detention of individuals.

(13) United states military assistance.—The term "United States military assistance" means—

(A) assistance provided under chapter 2 or 5 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.); or

(B) defense articles or defense services furnished with the financial assistance of the United States Government, including through loans and guarantees, under section 23 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2763).

(B) providing a deadline by which the airport will have an adequate number of air traffic controllers.

SA 3603. Mr. TORRICELLI submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 101, after line 23, insert the following:

SEC. 1008. It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) Newark International Airport has an inadequate number of air traffic controllers;

(2) there is cause for concern about passenger safety at Newark International Airport as a result of the inadequate number of air traffic controllers at the airport;

(3) the number of passengers using air transportation is expected to continue to increase, and will eventually equal or exceed the number of passengers using air transportation prior to September 11, 2001;

(4) an increase in passenger volume will exacerbate the effects of the air traffic controller shortage at Newark International Airport;

(5) Newark International Airport was the busiest airport in the New York Metropolitan Area in 2001, with more than 30,000,000 passengers arriving at or departing from the airport;

(6) Newark International Airport provides substantial economic benefits to its region including—

(A) the direct employment of more than 24,000 people at the airport; and

(B) contributing $11,300,000,000 in economic activity to the New York-New Jersey Metropolitan Region, including $3,300,000,000 in wages for some 100,000 jobs derived from airport activity; and

(7) the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration should act expeditiously—

(A) to determine the number of the air traffic controllers needed at Newark International Airport to ensure—

(i) safe travel for passengers; and

(ii) the continued smooth operation of the airport; and

(B) to ensure that the number of air traffic controllers described in paragraph (A) are in place at the Newark International Airport.

SA 3604. Mr. HOLLINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 10, line 19, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That of the amount appropriated under this heading in Public Law 107–117, $6,400,000 shall be for infrastructure and network requirements of the Federal Bureau of Investigation Laboratory".

SEC. 505. That portion of the former Charleston, South Carolina, Naval Base (including all associated improvements and fixtures) on which is situated a law enforcement training facility for the Department of Justice shall not be transferred to, or transferred for the direct or indirect use or benefit of, the State of South Carolina or any locality or subdivision thereof.

SA 3606. Mr. SPECTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

SEC. . TREATMENT OF CERTAIN COUNTIES FOR PURPOSES OF REIMBURSEMENT UNDER THE MEDICARE PROGRAM.

(a) RECLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN PENNSYLVANIA COUNTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, subject to paragraph (3), effective for discharges occurring during fiscal year 2002, for purposes of making payments under subsections (d) and (j) of section 1886 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww) to hospitals (including rehabilitation hospitals and rehabilitation units under such subsection (j))—

(A) in Columbia, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Wyoming, and Lycoming Counties, Pennsylvania, such counties are deemed to be located in the Allentown-Bethlehem-Easton, Pennsylvania Metropolitan Statistical Area;

(B) in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, such county is deemed to be located in Youngstown-Warren, Ohio Metropolitan Statistical Area; and

(C) in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, such county is deemed to be located in the Harrisburg-Lebanon-Carlisle, Pennsylvania Metropolitan Statistical Area.

(2) RULES.—The reclassifications made under paragraph (1) with respect to a subsection (d) hospital shall be treated as a decision of the Medicare Geographic Classification Review Board under paragraph (10) of section 1886(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)).

(3) LIMITATION ON APPLICATION DURING FISCAL YEAR 2002.—With respect to fiscal year 2002, this subsection shall apply only to discharges occurring on and after July 1, 2002.

(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVISIONS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall implement the provisions of subsection (a) by program memorandum. In implementing such provisions, the Secretary shall recalculate new standardized amounts, weighting factors, rates, and wage indices by July 1, 2002, in a manner that assures overall budget neutrality.

SA 3607. Mr. BUNNING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 111, after line 2 insert the following:

STATE AND TRIBAL ASSISTANCE GRANTS

The referenced statement of the managers under this heading in Public Law 106–377 is deemed to be amended by striking everything after "$1,000,000" in reference to item 91 and inserting "to the Northern Kentucky Area Development District for Carroll County Wastewater Infrastructure Project ($500,000), City of Owenton Water Collection and Treatment System Improvements and Freshwater Intake Project ($400,000), Grant County Williamstown Lake Expansion Study ($50,000), and Pendleton County Williamstown Lake Expansion Study ($50,000)".

SA 3608. Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. Smith of Oregon, Mrs. Boxer, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Reid, Mrs. Murray, Mr. Durbin, and Mr. Reed) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; as follows:

SEC. 807. EMERGENCY SUMMER SCHOOL FUNDING.

(a) Findings; Purpose.—

(1) Findings.—Congress finds the following:

(A) Under the amendments made by the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, students and schools rightly are held accountable for meeting challenging State academic content and student academic achievement standards in mathematics, reading or language arts, and science.

(B) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program are critical to providing supplemental academic services and academic enrichment activities designed to help students meet local and State academic standards.

(C) Summer programs and activities supported under the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program help children and the children's families in the areas of youth development, drug and violence prevention, and character education.

(D) During the summer of 2002, school districts throughout the Nation will confront more than $150,000,000 in cuts to summer school programs, eliminating services and academic support to more than 150,000 struggling children.

(2) Purpose.—The purpose of this section is to provide opportunities for communities to provide summertime activities in community learning centers that—

(A) provide opportunities for academic enrichment, including providing tutorial services to help students, particularly students who attend low-performing schools, to meet State and local student academic achievement standards in core academic subjects, such as reading and mathematics; and

(B) offer students an array of additional services, programs, and activities, such as youth development activities, drug and violence prevention programs, counseling programs, art, music, and recreation programs, technology education programs, and character education programs, that are designed to reinforce and complement the regular academic program of participating students.

(b) Funding for Summer School Programs.—

(1) In general.—That, in addition to amounts otherwise available to carry out section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)), $150,000,000 shall be available to carry out activities described in section 4205(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7175(a)) during the 2002 summer recess period.

(2) Awarding of grants.—

(A) In general.—Notwithstanding section 4202 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7172), the Secretary of Education shall award grants with funds made available under paragraph (1) on a competitive basis to eligible entities serving communities whose local educational agencies are not able to meet fully the communities' need for summer school programs.

(B) Priority.—In awarding grants under subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Education shall give priority to an eligible entity that is a local educational agency or who serves a community whose local educational agency—

(i) serves high concentrations or numbers of low-income children;

(ii) before June 6, 2002, announced that the local educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school services in 2002; or

(iii) is located in a State whose State educational agency, before June 6, 2002, announced that the State educational agency is canceling or reducing summer school funding for 2002.

(3) Application and obligation.—

(A) Application.—Notwithstanding sections 4203 and 4204 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7173 and 7174), an eligible entity that desires a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary of Education at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of Education may require.

(B) Obligation.—Not later than 4 weeks after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Education shall obligate funds made available under this section.

(4) Definition of eligible entity.—In this section, the term "eligible entity" has the meaning given the term in section 4201 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7171).

Sec. 807. (a) Temporary Increase of Medicaid FMAP.—

(1) Permitting maintenance of fiscal year 2001 FMAP for last 2 calendar quarters of fiscal year 2002.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, but subject to paragraph (5), if the FMAP determined without regard to this subsection for a State for fiscal year 2002 is less than the FMAP as so determined for fiscal year 2001, the FMAP for the State for fiscal year 2001 shall be substituted for the State's FMAP for the third and fourth calendar quarters of fiscal year 2002, before the application of this subsection.

(2) Permitting maintenance of fiscal year 2002 FMAP for fiscal year 2003.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, but subject to paragraph (5), if the FMAP determined without regard to this subsection for a State for fiscal year 2003 is less than the FMAP as so determined for fiscal year 2002, the FMAP for the State for fiscal year 2002 shall be substituted for the State's FMAP for each calendar quarter of fiscal year 2003, before the application of this subsection.

(3) General 1 percentage point increase for last 2 calendar quarters of fiscal year 2002 and fiscal year 2003.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, but subject to paragraphs (5) and (6), for each State for the third and fourth calendar quarters of fiscal year 2002 and each calendar quarter of fiscal year 2003, the FMAP (taking into account the application of paragraphs (1) and (2)) shall be increased by 1 percentage point.

(4) Increase in cap on medicaid payments to territories.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, but subject to paragraph (6), with respect to the third and fourth calendar quarters of fiscal year 2002 and each calendar quarter of fiscal year 2003, the amounts otherwise determined for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa under subsections (f) and (g) of section 1108 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1308) shall each be increased by an amount equal to 2 percent of such amounts.

(5) Scope of application.—The increases in the FMAP for a State under this subsection shall apply only for purposes of title XIX of the Social Security Act and shall not apply with respect to—

(A) disproportionate share hospital payments described in section 1923 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r–4); or

(B) payments under titles IV and XXI of such Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq. and 1397aa et seq.).

(6) State eligibility.—

(A) In general.—A State is eligible for an increase in its FMAP under paragraph (3) or an increase in a cap amount under paragraph (4) only if the eligibility under its State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act (including any waiver under such title or under section 1115 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1315)) is no more restrictive than the eligibility under such plan (or waiver) as in effect on January 1, 2002.

(B) Rule of construction.—Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall be construed as affecting a State's flexibility with respect to benefits offered under the State medicaid program under title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.) (including any waiver under such title or under section 1115 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1315)).

(7) Definitions.—In this subsection:

(A) FMAP.—The term "FMAP" means the Federal medical assistance percentage, as defined in section 1905(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(b)).

(B) State.—The term "State" has the meaning given such term for purposes of title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.).

(8) Repeal.—Effective as of October 1, 2003, this subsection is repealed.

(b) Additional Temporary State Fiscal Relief.—

(1) In general.—Title XX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397–1397f) is amended by adding at the end the following:

TITLE —EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL ASSISTANCE

Subtitle A—Assistance

SEC. 01. INCOME LOSS ASSISTANCE.

(a) MANDATORY FUNDING.—The Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this subtitle as the "Secretary") shall use $1,800,000,000 of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to make emergency financial assistance available to producers on a farm that have incurred qualifying income losses in calendar year 2001, including losses due to army worms.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary shall make assistance available under this section in the same manner as provided under section 815 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (Public Law 106–387; 114 Stat. 1549A–55), including using the same loss thresholds for the quantity and economic losses as were used in administering that section.

(c) USE OF FUNDS FOR CASH PAYMENTS.—The Secretary may use funds made available under this section to make, in a manner consistent with this section, cash payments not for crop disasters, but for income loss to carry out the purposes of this section.

SEC. 02. LIVESTOCK ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a) MANDATORY FUNDING.—The Secretary shall use $500,000,000 of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to make and administer payments for livestock losses to producers for 2001 losses in a county that has received an emergency designation by the President or the Secretary after January 1, 2001, of which $12,000,000 shall be made available for the American Indian livestock program under section 806 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (Public Law 106–387; 114 Stat. 1549A–51).

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary shall make assistance available under this section in the same manner as provided under section 806 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (Public Law 105–277; 114 Stat. 1549A–51).

SEC. 03. COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.

SEC. 04. ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In addition to funds otherwise available, not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the salaries and expenses of the Department of Agriculture in carrying out this subtitle $50,000,000, to remain available until expended.

(b) RECEIPT AND ACCEPTANCE.—The Secretary shall be entitled to receive, shall accept, and shall use to carry out this section the funds transferred under subsection (a), without further appropriation.

SEC. 05. REGULATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to implement this subtitle.

(b) PROCEDURE.—The promulgation of the regulations and administration of this subtitle shall be made without regard to—

(1) the notice and comment provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code;

(2) the Statement of Policy of the Secretary of Agriculture effective July 24, 1971 (36 Fed. Reg. 13804), relating to notices of proposed rulemaking and public participation in rulemaking; and

(3) chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code (commonly known as the "Paperwork Reduction Act").

(c) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW OF AGENCY RULEMAKING.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall use the authority provided under section 808 of title 5, United States Code.

Subtitle B—Offsets

SEC. 11. REVISION OF TAX RULES ON EXPATRIATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part II of subchapter N of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after section 877 the following new section:

"SEC. 877A. TAX RESPONSIBILITIES OF EXPATRIATION.

"(a) GENERAL RULES.—For purposes of this subtitle—

"(1) MARK TO MARKET.—Except as provided in subsection (f), all property of a covered expatriate to whom this section applies shall be treated as sold on the day before the expatriation date for its fair market value.

"(2) RECOGNITION OF GAIN OR LOSS.—In the case of any sale under paragraph (1)—

"(A) notwithstanding any other provision of this title, any gain arising from such sale shall be taken into account for the taxable year of the sale, and

"(B) any loss arising from such sale shall be taken into account for the taxable year of the sale to the extent otherwise provided by this title, except that section 1091 shall not apply to any such loss.

Proper adjustment shall be made in the amount of any gain or loss subsequently realized for gain or loss taken into account under the preceding sentence.

"(3) EXCLUSION FOR CERTAIN GAIN.—The amount which would (but for this paragraph) be includible in the gross income of any individual by reason of this section shall be reduced (but not below zero) by $600,000. For purposes of this paragraph, allocable expatriation gain taken into account under subsection (f)(2) shall be treated in the same manner as an amount required to be includible in gross income.

"(4) COST-OF-LIVING-ADJUSTMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an expatriation date occurring in any calendar year after 2002, the $600,000 amount under paragraph (3) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(i) such dollar amount, multiplied by

"(ii) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for such calendar year, determined by substituting 'calendar year 2001' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(B) ROUNDING RULES.—If any amount after adjustment under subparagraph (A) is not a multiple of $1,000, such amount shall be rounded to the next lower multiple of $1,000.

"(b) ELECTION TO DEFER TAX.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If the taxpayer elects the application of this subsection with respect to any property treated as sold by reason of subsection (a), the payment of the additional tax attributable to such property shall be postponed until the due date of the return for the taxable year in which such property is disposed of (or, in the case of property disposed of in a transaction in which gain is not recognized in whole or in part, until such other date as the Secretary may prescribe).

"(2) DETERMINATION OF TAX WITH RESPECT TO PROPERTY.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the additional tax attributable to any property is an amount which bears the same ratio to the additional tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year solely by reason of subsection (a) as the gain taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to such property bears to the total gain taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to all property to which subsection (a) applies.

"(3) TERMINATION OF POSTPONEMENT.—No tax may be postponed under this subsection later than the due date for the return of tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year which includes the date of death of the expatriate (or, if earlier, the time that the security provided with respect to the property fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (4), unless the taxpayer corrects such failure within the time specified by the Secretary).

"(4) SECURITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No election may be made under paragraph (1) with respect to any property unless adequate security is provided to the Secretary with respect to such property.

"(B) ADEQUATE SECURITY.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), security with respect to any property shall be treated as adequate security if—

"(i) it is a bond in an amount equal to the deferred tax amount under paragraph (2)(A) for the property, or

"(ii) the taxpayer otherwise establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the security is adequate.

"(5) WAIVER OF CERTAIN RIGHTS.—No election may be made under paragraph (1) unless the taxpayer consents to the waiver of any right under any treaty of the United States which would preclude assessment or collection of any tax imposed by reason of this section.

"(6) ELECTIONS.—An election under paragraph (1) shall only apply to property described in the election and, once made, is irrevocable. An election may be made under paragraph (1) with respect to an interest in a trust with respect to which gain is required to be recognized under subsection (f)(1).

"(7) INTEREST.—For purposes of section 6601—

"(A) the last date for the payment of tax shall be determined without regard to the election under this subsection, and

"(B) section 6621(a)(2) shall be applied by substituting '5 percentage points' for '3 percentage points' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(c) COVERED EXPATRIATE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'covered expatriate' means an expatriate.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—An individual shall not be treated as a covered expatriate if—

"(A) the individual—

"(i) became at birth a citizen of the United States and a citizen of another country and, as of the expatriation date, continues to be a citizen of, and is taxed as a resident of, such other country, and

"(ii) has not been a resident of the United States (as defined in section 7701(b)(1)(A)(ii)) during the 5 taxable years ending with the taxable year during which the expatriation date occurs, or

"(B)(i) the individual's relinquishment of United States citizenship occurs before such individual attains age 18½, and

"(ii) the individual has been a resident of the United States (as so defined) for not more than 5 taxable years before the date of relinquishment.

"(d) SECTION NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN PROPERTY.—This section shall not apply to the following:

"(1) UNITED STATES REAL PROPERTY INTERESTS.—Any United States real property interest (as defined in section 897(c)(1)), other than stock of a United States real property holding corporation which does not, on the day before the expatriation date, meet the requirements of section 897(c)(2).

"(2) INTEREST IN CERTAIN RETIREMENT PLANS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any interest in a qualified retirement plan (as defined in section 4974(c)), other than any interest attributable to contributions which are in excess of any limitation or which violate any condition for tax-favored treatment.

"(B) FOREIGN PENSION PLANS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, interests in foreign pension plans or similar retirement arrangements or programs.

"(ii) LIMITATION.—The value of property which is treated as not sold by reason of this subparagraph shall not exceed $500,000.

"(3) SPECIFIED PROPERTY.—Any property or interest in property not described in paragraph (1) or (2) which the Secretary specifies in regulations.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EXPATRIATE.—The term 'expatriate' means—

"(A) any United States citizen who relinquishes citizenship, and

"(B) any long-term resident of the United States who—

"(i) ceases to be a lawful permanent resident of the United States (within the meaning of section 7701(b)(6)), or

"(ii) commences to be treated as a resident of a foreign country under the provisions of a tax treaty between the United States and the foreign country and who does not waive the benefits of such treaty applicable to residents of the foreign country.

"(2) EXPATRIATION DATE.—The term 'expatriation date' means—

"(A) the date an individual relinquishes United States citizenship, or

"(B) in the case of a long-term resident of the United States, the date of the event described in clause (i) or (ii) of paragraph (1)(B).

"(3) RELINQUISHMENT OF CITIZENSHIP.—A citizen shall be treated as relinquishing United States citizenship on the earliest of—

"(A) the date the individual renounces such individual's United States nationality before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States pursuant to paragraph (5) of section 349(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1481(a)(5)),

"(B) the date the individual furnishes to the United States Department of State a signed statement of voluntary relinquishment of United States nationality confirming the performance of an act of expatriation specified in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of section 349(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1481(a)(1)–(4)),

"(C) the date the United States Department of State issues to the individual a certificate of loss of nationality, or

"(D) the date a court of the United States cancels a naturalized citizen's certificate of naturalization.

Subparagraph (A) or (B) shall not apply to any individual unless the renunciation or voluntary relinquishment is subsequently approved by the issuance to the individual of a certificate of loss of nationality by the United States Department of State.

"(4) LONG-TERM RESIDENT.—The term 'long-term resident' has the meaning given to such term by section 877(e)(2).

"(f) SPECIAL RULES APPLICABLE TO BENEFICIARIES' INTERESTS IN TRUST.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an individual is determined under paragraph (3) to hold an interest in a trust on the day before the expatriation date—

"(A) the individual shall not be treated as having sold such interest,

"(B) such interest shall be treated as a separate share in the trust, and

"(C)(i) such separate share shall be treated as a separate trust consisting of the assets allocable to such share,

"(ii) the separate trust shall be treated as having sold its assets on the day before the expatriation date for their fair market value and as having distributed all of its assets to the individual as of such time, and

"(iii) the individual shall be treated as having recontributed the assets to the separate trust.

Subsection (a)(2) shall apply to any income, gain, or loss of the individual arising from a distribution described in subparagraph (C)(ii). In determining the amount of such distribution, proper adjustments shall be made for liabilities of the trust allocable to an individual's share in the trust.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR INTERESTS IN QUALIFIED TRUSTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the trust interest described in paragraph (1) is an interest in a qualified trust—

"(i) paragraph (1) and subsection (a) shall not apply, and

"(ii) in addition to any other tax imposed by this title, there is hereby imposed on each distribution with respect to such interest a tax in the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) AMOUNT OF TAX.—The amount of tax under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the highest rate of tax imposed by section 1(e) for the taxable year which includes the day before the expatriation date, multiplied by the amount of the distribution, or

"(ii) the balance in the deferred tax account immediately before the distribution determined without regard to any increases under subparagraph (C)(ii) after the 30th day preceding the distribution.

"(C) DEFERRED TAX ACCOUNT.—For purposes of subparagraph (B)(ii)—

"(i) OPENING BALANCE.—The opening balance in a deferred tax account with respect to any trust interest is an amount equal to the tax which would have been imposed on the allocable expatriation gain with respect to the trust interest if such gain had been included in gross income under subsection (a).

"(ii) INCREASE FOR INTEREST.—The balance in the deferred tax account shall be increased by the amount of interest determined (on the balance in the account at the time the interest accrues), for periods after the 90th day after the expatriation date, by using the rates and method applicable under section 6621 for underpayments of tax for such periods, except that section 6621(a)(2) shall be applied by substituting '5 percentage points' for '3 percentage points' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(iii) DECREASE FOR TAXES PREVIOUSLY PAID.—The balance in the tax deferred account shall be reduced—

"(I) by the amount of taxes imposed by subparagraph (A) on any distribution to the person holding the trust interest, and

"(II) in the case of a person holding a nonvested interest, to the extent provided in regulations, by the amount of taxes imposed by subparagraph (A) on distributions from the trust with respect to nonvested interests not held by such person.

"(D) ALLOCABLE EXPATRIATION GAIN.—For purposes of this paragraph, the allocable expatriation gain with respect to any beneficiary's interest in a trust is the amount of gain which would be allocable to such beneficiary's vested and nonvested interests in the trust if the beneficiary held directly all assets allocable to such interests.

"(E) TAX DEDUCTED AND WITHHELD.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The tax imposed by subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be deducted and withheld by the trustees from the distribution to which it relates.

"(ii) EXCEPTION WHERE FAILURE TO WAIVE TREATY RIGHTS.—If an amount may not be deducted and withheld under clause (i) by reason of the distributee failing to waive any treaty right with respect to such distribution—

"(I) the tax imposed by subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be imposed on the trust and each trustee shall be personally liable for the amount of such tax, and

"(II) any other beneficiary of the trust shall be entitled to recover from the distributee the amount of such tax imposed on the other beneficiary.

"(F) DISPOSITION.—If a trust ceases to be a qualified trust at any time, a covered expatriate disposes of an interest in a qualified trust, or a covered expatriate holding an interest in a qualified trust dies, then, in lieu of the tax imposed by subparagraph (A)(ii), there is hereby imposed a tax equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the tax determined under paragraph (1) as if the day before the expatriation date were the date of such cessation, disposition, or death, whichever is applicable, or

"(ii) the balance in the tax deferred account immediately before such date.

Such tax shall be imposed on the trust and each trustee shall be personally liable for the amount of such tax and any other beneficiary of the trust shall be entitled to recover from the covered expatriate or the estate the amount of such tax imposed on the other beneficiary.

"(G) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULE.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) QUALIFIED TRUST.—The term 'qualified trust' means a trust which is described in section 7701(a)(30)(E).

"(ii) VESTED INTEREST.—The term 'vested interest' means any interest which, as of the day before the expatriation date, is vested in the beneficiary.

"(iii) NONVESTED INTEREST.—The term 'nonvested interest' means, with respect to any beneficiary, any interest in a trust which is not a vested interest. Such interest shall be determined by assuming the maximum exercise of discretion in favor of the beneficiary and the occurrence of all contingencies in favor of the beneficiary.

"(iv) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may provide for such adjustments to the bases of assets in a trust or a deferred tax account, and the timing of such adjustments, in order to ensure that gain is taxed only once.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF BENEFICIARIES' INTEREST IN TRUST.—

"(A) DETERMINATIONS UNDER PARAGRAPH (1).—For purposes of paragraph (1), a beneficiary's interest in a trust shall be based upon all relevant facts and circumstances, including the terms of the trust instrument and any letter of wishes or similar document, historical patterns of trust distributions, and the existence of and functions performed by a trust protector or any similar adviser.

"(B) OTHER DETERMINATIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(i) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—If a beneficiary of a trust is a corporation, partnership, trust, or estate, the shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries shall be deemed to be the trust beneficiaries for purposes of this section.

"(ii) TAXPAYER RETURN POSITION.—A taxpayer shall clearly indicate on its income tax return—

"(I) the methodology used to determine that taxpayer's trust interest under this section, and

"(II) if the taxpayer knows (or has reason to know) that any other beneficiary of such trust is using a different methodology to determine such beneficiary's trust interest under this section.

"(g) TERMINATION OF DEFERRALS, ETC.—In the case of any covered expatriate, notwithstanding any other provision of this title—

"(1) any period during which recognition of income or gain is deferred shall terminate on the day before the expatriation date, and

"(2) any extension of time for payment of tax shall cease to apply on the day before the expatriation date and the unpaid portion of such tax shall be due and payable at the time and in the manner prescribed by the Secretary.

"(h) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section."

(b) TAX ON GIFTS AND BEQUESTS RECEIVED BY UNITED STATES CITIZENS AND RESIDENTS FROM EXPATRIATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle B (relating to estate and gift taxes) is amended by inserting after chapter 14 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 15—GIFTS AND BEQUESTS FROM EXPATRIATES

"Sec. 2801. Imposition of tax.

"SEC. 2801. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If, during any calendar year, any United States citizen or resident receives any covered gift or bequest, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to the product of—

"(1) the highest rate of tax specified in the table contained in section 2001(c) as in effect on the date of such receipt, and

"(2) the value of such covered gift or bequest.

"(b) TAX TO BE PAID BY RECIPIENT.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) on any covered gift or bequest shall be paid by the person receiving such gift or bequest.

"(c) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN GIFTS.—Subsection (a) shall apply only to the extent that the covered gifts and bequests received during the calendar year exceed the amount determined under section 2503(b)(2).

"(d) TAX REDUCED BY FOREIGN GIFT OR ESTATE TAX.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) on any covered gift or bequest shall be reduced by the amount of any gift or estate tax paid to a foreign country with respect to such covered gift or bequest.

"(e) COVERED GIFT OR BEQUEST.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'covered gift or bequest' means—

"(A) any property acquired by gift directly or indirectly from an individual who, at the time of such acquisition, was a covered expatriate, and

"(B) any property acquired by bequest, devise, or inheritance directly or indirectly from an individual who, at the time of death, was a covered expatriate.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS FOR TRANSFERS OTHERWISE SUBJECT TO ESTATE OR GIFT TAX.—Such term shall not include—

"(A) any property shown on a timely filed return of tax imposed by chapter 12 which is a taxable gift by the covered expatriate, and

"(B) any property shown on a timely filed return of tax imposed by chapter 11 of the estate of the covered expatriate.

"(3) TRANSFERS IN TRUST.—Any covered gift or bequest which is made in trust shall be treated as made to the beneficiaries of such trust in proportion to their respective interests in such trust (as determined under section 877A(f)(3)).

"(f) COVERED EXPATRIATE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'covered expatriate' has the meaning given to such term by section 877A(c)."

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for subtitle B is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 14 the following new item:

"Chapter 15. Gifts and bequests from expatriates."

"(48) TERMINATION OF UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An individual shall not cease to be treated as a United States citizen before the date on which the individual's citizenship is treated as relinquished under section 877A(e)(3).

"(B) DUAL CITIZENS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, subparagraph (A) shall not apply to an individual who became at birth a citizen of the United States and a citizen of another country."

(d) INELIGIBILITY FOR VISA OR ADMISSION TO UNITED STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 212(a)(10)(E) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(10)(E)) is amended to read as follows:

"(E) FORMER CITIZENS NOT IN COMPLIANCE WITH EXPATRIATION REVENUE PROVISIONS.—Any alien who is a former citizen of the United States who relinquishes United States citizenship (within the meaning of section 877A(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) and who is determined by the Attorney General, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, not to be in compliance with sections 877A and 2801 of such Code (relating to expatriation)."

(2) AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 6103(i) (relating to disclosure to Federal officers or employees for administration of Federal laws not relating to tax administration) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(8) DISCLOSURE TO DENY VISA OR ADMISSION TO CERTAIN EXPATRIATES.—Except as provided in paragraph (6), upon written request of the Attorney General, the return of an individual or return information with respect to such individual shall be open to inspection by, or disclosure to, officers and employees of the Federal agency responsible for making a determination under section 212(a)(10)(E) of the Immigration and Nationality Act for the purpose of, and to the extent necessary in, making such determination with respect to such individual.”

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 6103(i)(6) (relating to confidential informants; impairment of investigations) is amended by striking “(5), or (7)” and inserting “(5), (7), or (8)”.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to individuals who relinquish United States citizenship on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

“(g) APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply to an expatriate (as defined in section 877A(e)) whose expatriation date (as so defined) occurs on or after the date of first passage by the Senate of legislation adding section 877A to this title.”

(2) Section 2107 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

(3) Section 2501(a)(3) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

(B) The second sentence of section 6039G(e) is amended by inserting “or who relinquishes United States citizenship (within the meaning of section 877A(e)(3))” after “877(a))”.

(C) Section 6039G(f) is amended by inserting “or 877A(e)(2)(B)” after “877(e)(1)”.

(f) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part II of subchapter N of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 877 the following new item:

“Sec. 877A. Tax responsibilities of expatriation.”

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall apply to expatriates (within the meaning of section 877A(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by this section) whose expatriation date (as so defined) occurs on or after the date of the first passage by the Senate of this section.

(2) GIFTS AND BEQUESTS.—Chapter 15 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (b)) shall apply to covered gifts and bequests (as defined in section 2801 of such Code, as so added) received on or after the date of the first passage by the Senate of this section from an individual or the estate of an individual whose expatriation date (as so defined) occurs on or after such date.

SEC. 12. REVIEW OF STATE AGENCY BLINDNESS AND DISABILITY DETERMINATIONS.

“(e)(1) The Commissioner of Social Security shall review determinations, made by State agencies pursuant to subsection (a) in connection with applications for benefits under this title on the basis of blindness or disability, that individuals who have attained 18 years of age are blind or disabled as of a specified onset date. The Commissioner of Social Security shall review such a determination before any action is taken to implement the determination.

“(2)(A) In carrying out paragraph (1), the Commissioner of Social Security shall review—

“(i) at least 25 percent of all determinations referred to in paragraph (1) that are made in fiscal year 2003; and

“(ii) at least 50 percent of all such determinations that are made in fiscal year 2004 or thereafter.

“(B) In carrying out subparagraph (A), the Commissioner of Social Security shall, to the extent feasible, select for review the determinations which the Commissioner of Social Security identifies as being the most likely to be incorrect.”.

TITLE II—BUDGETARY RESTRAINTS, RESERVE FUNDS, AND RULEMAKING

Subtitle A—Budgetary Restraints

SEC. 201. CONGRESSIONAL DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS FOR 2003 THROUGH 2007.

(a) Definition.—In this section, for purposes of enforcement in the House of Representatives and the Senate, the term "discretionary spending limit" means—

(1) for fiscal year 2003—

(A) for the nondefense category, $375,262,000,000 in new budget authority and $372,224,000,000 in outlays;

(B) for the defense category, $392,757,000,000 in new budget authority and $380,228,000,000 in outlays;

(C) for the highway category, $28,922,000,000 in outlays;

(D) for the mass transit category, $6,030,000,000 in outlays; and

(E) for the conservation category, $1,922,000,000 in new budget authority and $1,872,000,000 in outlays;

(2) for fiscal year 2004—

(A) for the nondefense category, $387,110,000,000 in new budget authority and $425,296,000,000 in outlays; and

(B) for the defense category $394,916,000,000 in new budget authority and $390,236,000,000 in outlays;

(3) for fiscal year 2005—

(A) for the nondefense category, $394,989,000,000 in new budget authority and $432,168,000,000 in outlays; and

(B) for the defense category $415,556,000,000 in new budget authority and $406,855,000,000 in outlays;

(4) for fiscal year 2006—

(A) for the nondefense category, $402,873,000,000 in new budget authority and $439,161,000,000 in outlays; and

(B) for the defense category $436,202,000,000 in new budget authority and $420,599,000,000 in outlays; and

(5) for fiscal year 2007—

(A) for the nondefense category, $413,763,000,000 in new budget authority and $449,430,000,000 in outlays; and

(B) for the defense category $457,708,000,000 in new budget authority and $433,847,000,000 in outlays.

(b) Point of Order.—

(1) In general.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives and the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that exceeds any discretionary spending limit set forth in this section.

(2) Exception.—This subsection shall not apply if a declaration of war by Congress is in effect.

(c) Waiver and Appeal.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

SEC. 202. EMERGENCY DESIGNATION POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.

(a) Designations.—

(1) Guidance.—In making a designation of a provision of legislation as an emergency requirement under section 251(b)(2)(A) or 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the committee report and any statement of managers accompanying that legislation shall analyze whether a proposed emergency requirement meets all the criteria in paragraph (2).

(2) Criteria.—

(A) In general.—The criteria to be considered in determining whether a proposed expenditure or tax change is an emergency requirement are—

(i) necessary, essential, or vital (not merely useful or beneficial);

(ii) sudden, quickly coming into being, and not building up over time;

(iii) an urgent, pressing, and compelling need requiring immediate action;

(iv) subject to subparagraph (B), unforeseen, unpredictable, and unanticipated; and

(v) not permanent, temporary in nature.

(B) Unforeseen.—An emergency that is part of an aggregate level of anticipated emergencies, particularly when normally estimated in advance, is not unforeseen.

(3) Justification for failure to meet criteria.—If the proposed emergency requirement does not meet all the criteria set forth in paragraph (2), the committee report or the statement of managers, as the case may be, shall provide a written justification of why the requirement should be accorded emergency status.

(b) Point of Order.—When the Senate is considering a bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report, a point of order may be made by a Senator against an emergency designation in that measure and if the Presiding Officer sustains that point of order, that provision making such a designation shall be stricken from the measure and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor.

(c) Waiver and Appeal.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

(d) Definition of an Emergency Requirement.—A provision shall be considered an emergency designation if it designates any item an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) or 252(e) of the Balanced

Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(e) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under this section may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(f) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under this section against a conference report, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

SEC. 203. RESTRICTIONS ON ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS IN THE SENATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that would provide an advance appropriation.

(b) EXCEPTION.—An advance appropriation may be provided—

(1) for fiscal year 2004 for programs, projects, activities, or accounts identified in the joint explanatory statement of managers accompanying this resolution under the heading "Accounts Identified for Advance Appropriations" in an aggregate amount not to exceed $23,159,000,000 in new budget authority; and

(2) for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

(c) APPLICATION OF POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(1) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—In the Senate, subsection (a) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under subsection (a).

(2) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under subsection (a) may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(3) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under subsection (a) against a conference report in the Senate, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(d) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "advance appropriation" means any discretionary new budget authority in a bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for fiscal year 2002 that first becomes available for any fiscal year after 2002.

(e) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 should be amended to address procedures for advance appropriations for fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 2004.

(f) PROHIBITION ON DIVERTING CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—

(1) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to ensure that amounts deposited in the Crime Victims Fund are distributed in a timely manner to assist victims of crime as intended by current law and are not diverted to offset increased spending when such offset devices produce no permanent budgetary or economic effects.

(2) BUDGETARY RULE.—In the Senate, for purposes of points of order under this resolution and the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, provisions contained in any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that perpetuate or resemble section 619 of Public Law 107–77 shall not be scored with respect to the level of budget authority, outlays, or revenues contained in such legislation.

SEC. 204. PAY-AS-YOU-GO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.

(a) PURPOSE.—The Senate declares that it is essential to continue the pay-as-you-go enforcement system.

(b) POINT OF ORDER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any direct spending or revenue legislation that would increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit for any one of the three applicable time periods as measured in paragraphs (5) and (6).

(2) APPLICABLE TIME PERIODS.—For purposes of this subsection the term "applicable time period" means any one of the three following periods:

(A) The first year covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(B) The period of the first five fiscal years covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(C) The period of the five fiscal years following the first five fiscal years covered in the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(3) DIRECT-SPENDING LEGISLATION.—For purposes of this subsection and except as provided in paragraph (4), the term "direct-spending legislation" means any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that affects direct spending as that term is defined by and interpreted for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(4) EXCLUSION.—For purposes of this subsection, the terms "direct-spending legislation" and "revenue legislation" do not include—

(A) any concurrent resolution on the budget; or

(B) any provision of legislation that affects the full funding of, and continuation of, the deposit insurance guarantee commitment in effect on the date of enactment of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

(5) BASELINE.—Estimates prepared pursuant to this section shall—

(A) use the baseline used for the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; and

(B) be calculated under the requirements of subsections (b) through (d) of section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 for fiscal years beyond those covered by that concurrent resolution on the budget.

(6) PRIOR SURPLUS.—If direct spending or revenue legislation increases the on-budget deficit or causes an on-budget deficit when taken individually, then it must also increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit when taken together with all direct spending and revenue legislation enacted since the beginning of the calendar year not accounted for in the baseline under paragraph (5)(A).

(c) WAIVER.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn.

(d) APPEALS.—Appeals in the Senate from the decisions of the Chair relating to any provision of this section shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the appellant and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, as the case may be. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

(e) DETERMINATION OF BUDGET LEVELS.—For purposes of this section, the levels of new budget authority, outlays, and revenues for a fiscal year shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the Senate.

(f) SUNSET.—Subsections (a) through (e) of this section shall expire September 30, 2007.

SEC. 205. EXTENSION OF SUPERMAJORITY DISCIPLINE IN THE SENATE.

Notwithstanding any provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, sections 904(c)(2) and 904(d)(3) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall remain in effect as rules of the Senate through September 30, 2007.

Subtitle B—Reserve Funds

SEC. 211. RESERVE FUND FOR MEDICARE.

If the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill or joint resolution, or an amendment is offered thereto, or a conference report thereon is submitted, which reforms the Medicare Program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395 et seq.) and improves the access of beneficiaries under that program to prescription drugs, and that repeals the 15 percent reduction in payments under the Medicare Program to home health agencies enacted by the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 and now scheduled to go into effect on October 1, 2002, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the ranking member, may revise committee allocations for that committee and other appropriate budgetary aggregates and allocations of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) in this resolution by the amount provided by that measure for that purpose, but not to exceed $0 for fiscal year 2003, and $349,682,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012, of which $16,182,000,000 shall be made available only with respect to the repeal of the 15 percent reduction to home health agencies.

SEC. 212. RESERVE FUND FOR HEALTH INSURANCE FOR THE UNINSURED.

If the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill or joint resolution, or an amendment thereto is offered, or a conference report thereon is submitted, that provides health insurance for the uninsured (including a measure providing for tax deductions for the purchase of health insurance for, among others, moderate income individuals not receiving health insurance from their employers), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the ranking member, may revise committee allocations for that committee and other appropriate budgetary aggregates and allocations of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) and may revise the revenue aggregates and other appropriate budgetary aggregates and allocations in this resolution by the amount provided by that measure for that purpose, but not to exceed $116,989,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012 or $116,989,000,000 in revenues for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012 or any combination of budget authority and outlays or revenues as long as the sum of all revisions does not exceed $116,989,000,000.

SEC. 213. RESERVE FUND FOR FAMILY OPPORTUNITY ACT.

If the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill or joint resolution, or if an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that provides States with the opportunity to expand Medicaid coverage for children with special needs, allowing families of disabled children with the opportunity to purchase coverage under the Medicaid Program for such children (commonly referred to as the "Family Opportunity Act of 2002"), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the ranking member, may revise committee allocations for that committee and other appropriate budgetary aggregates and allocations of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) in this resolution by the amount provided by that measure for that purpose, but not to exceed $142,000,000 in new budget authority and $95,000,000 in outlays for fiscal year 2003, and $8,390,000,000 in new budget authority and $7,940,000,000 in outlays for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012.

SEC. 214. RESERVE FUND FOR IDEA.

(a) RESERVE FUND FOR 2003.—In the Senate, if the Committee on Appropriations reports a bill or joint resolution, or if an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that provides in excess of $8,529,000,000 in new budget authority for fiscal year 2003 for grants to States authorized under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the ranking member, may revise the appropriate allocations for such committee and other appropriate levels in this resolution by the amount provided by that measure for that purpose, but not to exceed $9,482,000,000 in new budget authority for fiscal year 2003 and outlays flowing therefrom.

(b) ADDITIONAL RESOURCES AVAILABLE FOR REFORM.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(A) the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), which since 1975 has guaranteed the Nation's disabled school children the right to a free and appropriate public education, is under consideration for reauthorization and reform by the 107th Congress;

(B) special education enrollment (as a share of total enrollment) continues to grow, and the cost of educating the average disabled student is nearly twice that of the average non-disabled student, according to the Department of Education; and

(C) the President has established a Commission on Excellence in Special Education to identify areas of needed reform and improvement in IDEA, to be reported to the President no later than July 1, 2002.

(2) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that this budget resolution provides substantial additional funding for IDEA programs in 2003, and that future budget resolutions will provide additional resources in a manner consistent with the Commission's report and reforms and reauthorization of IDEA enacted into law.

SEC. 215. RESERVE FUND FOR HIGHWAYS AND HIGHWAY SAFETY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the Senate, if the Committee on Appropriations reports a bill or joint resolution, or if an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that establishes an obligation limitation in excess of $23,285,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 for programs, projects, and activities within the highway category (under section 251(c)(7)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the ranking member, may increase the allocation of outlays and other appropriate budgetary aggregates, including the discretionary spending limits set out in this resolution for such committee by the amount of outlays resulting from such excess, but—

(1) only if the chairman of the Committee on the Budget determines, in consultation with the ranking member, that the bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that establishes such obligation limitation provides that such increase to the obligation limitation is made available solely for programs, projects, or activities as distributed under section 1102 of the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century; and

(2) not to exceed $1,180,000,000 in outlays for fiscal year 2003.

(b) RULE OF ENFORCEMENT.—In the Senate, section 302(f)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall be deemed to apply to the applicable allocation of outlays in the case of any bill or joint resolution that establishes an obligation limitation for fiscal year 2003 for programs within the highway category, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon.

SEC. 216. AMTRAK RESERVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the Senate, if the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation reports a bill or joint resolution which restructures and reforms the national passenger rail system and such measure is enacted and if the Committee on Appropriations reports a bill or joint resolution, or amendment is offered thereto, or a conference report thereon is submitted that provides in excess of $531,000,000 in new budget authority for fiscal year 2003 for a national passenger rail system, then the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget, with the concurrence of the ranking member, may revise the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations and other appropriate budgetary aggregates, including the discretionary spending limits set out in this resolution, but such revisions shall not exceed $987,000,000 in new budget authority and $171,000,000 in outlays for fiscal year 2003.

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 221. APPLICATION AND EFFECT OF CHANGES IN ALLOCATIONS AND AGGREGATES.

(a) APPLICATION.—Any adjustments of allocations and aggregates made pursuant to this resolution shall—

(1) apply while that measure is under consideration;

(2) take effect upon the enactment of that measure; and

(3) be published in the Congressional Record as soon as practicable.

(b) EFFECT OF CHANGED ALLOCATIONS AND AGGREGATES.—Revised allocations and aggregates resulting from these adjustments shall be considered for the purposes of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as allocations and aggregates contained in this resolution.

(c) BUDGET COMMITTEE DETERMINATIONS.—For purposes of this resolution—

(1) the levels of new budget authority, outlays, direct spending, new entitlement authority, revenues, deficits, and surpluses for a fiscal year or period of fiscal years shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committees on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate; and

(2) such chairman, and in the Senate, (in consultation with the ranking member), as applicable, may make any other necessary adjustments to such levels to carry out this resolution.

SEC. 222. EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS.

Congress adopts the provisions of this title—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change those rules (so far as they relate to that House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

TITLE III—SENSE OF THE SENATE

SEC. 301. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING ESTIMATES OF THE COST OF SMALL BUSINESS CREDIT PROGRAMS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds the following:

(1) Small businesses play a critical role in our Nation and our economy, and the Federal Government assists that role by providing small businesses with loans and loan guarantees.

(2) Since the enactment of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, the Small Business Administration and Office of Management and Budget have repeatedly reestimated downward the subsidy cost for the Small Business Administration's 7(a) and 504 credit programs. For the 7(a) program alone, SBA and OMB have reestimated more than $1,000,000,000 in subsidy costs.

(3) These overestimates have resulted in borrowers and lenders in both programs having to pay higher than necessary fees to participate in the programs.

(4) In addition, these overestimates have diverted more than $1,000,000,000 in resources from other discretionary programs.

(5) In its 2003 budget, the Administration expects to further revise downward in fiscal year 2002 the estimated cost of small business loan programs.

(6) The Administration has begun working on substantially revising its model for the section 7(a) program, but was unable to complete its work in time for the 2003 budget.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the performance of the SBA and OMB in administering the Federal Credit Reform Act for small business credit programs has been unsatisfactory;

(2) the Administration should expeditiously complete its work on the new model for the section 7(a) program and share the results of that work with the Budget and Small Business Committees by no later than this August;

(3) the Administration should immediately begin work on similarly improving its subsidy model for the section 504 program; and

(4) the Administration should work with Congress to ensure that adequate funding is provided in fiscal year 2003 for small business credit programs.

SEC. 302. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING FEDERAL EMPLOYEE PAY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds the following:

(1) Members of the uniformed services and civilian employees of the United States make significant contributions to the general welfare of the Nation.

(2) Increases in the pay of members of the uniformed services and of civilian employees of the United States have not kept pace with increases in the overall pay levels of workers in the private sector, so that there now exists—

(A) a 32 percent gap between compensation levels of Federal civilian employees and compensation levels of private sector workers; and

(B) an estimated 10 percent gap between compensation levels of members of the uniformed services and compensation levels of private sector workers.

(3) The President's budget proposal for fiscal year 2003 includes a 4.1 percent pay raise for military personnel.

(4) The Office of Management and Budget has requested that Federal agencies plan their fiscal year 2003 budgets with a 2.6 percent pay raise for civilian Federal employees.

(5) In almost every year during the past 2 decades, there have been equal adjustments in the compensation of members of the uniformed services and the compensation of civilian employees of the United States.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that there should continue to be parity between the adjustments in the compensation of members of the uniformed services and the adjustments in the compensation of civilian employees of the United States.

SEC. 303. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON MENTAL HEALTH PARITY.

It is the sense of the Senate that in providing for mental health parity—

(1) nothing in this budget resolution shall be construed to alter or amend title II of the Social Security Act (or any regulation promulgated under that Act);

(2) the Secretary of the Treasury will annually estimate the impact of enactment of such a policy on the income and balances of the trust funds established under section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401); and

(3) that if the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the enactment of mental health parity has a negative impact on the income and balances of the trust funds established under section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401), the Secretary shall transfer, not less frequently than quarterly, from the general revenues of the Federal Government an amount sufficient so as to ensure that the income and balances of such trust funds are not reduced as a result of this policy.

SEC. 304. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON MEDICAID COMMISSION.

It is the sense of the Senate that Congress should establish a National Commission on Medicaid and State-Based Health Care Reform to study and make recommendations to Congress, the President, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the program under title XIX of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 305. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING PILT FUNDING.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) if certain Federal lands are not to become part of the local tax base, then compensation should be offered to local governments to make up for the presence of nontaxable land within their jurisdictions;

(2) PILT funds are critical to the budget of local governments, which supply many valuable local social services, such as law enforcement, road maintenance and firefighting, as well as services for adjacent Federal lands such as search and rescue operations;

(3) the Administration has proposed funding PILT at $165,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, which is 22 percent less than the current funding level—of $325,000,000; and

(4) many counties with high percentages of Federal land ownership that rely on PILT payments have higher than average unemployment and poverty.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that within the discretionary allocation provided to the Committee on Appropriations that the Payment in Lieu of Taxes program should be fully funded.

SA 3685. Mr. SANTORUM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

(b) REPEAL OF OBSOLETE PROVISIONS.—

(1) CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT OF 1974.—Section 314(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by striking paragraphs (2) through (5); and

(B) by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (2).

(2) BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985.—Section 251(b)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended

(A) by striking subparagraphs (C) through (F); and

(B) by redesignating subparagraph (G) as subparagraph (C).

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 254 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended

(1) in subsection (c)(2), by striking "2002" each time it appears and inserting "2003"; and

(2) in subsection (f)(2)(A), by striking "2002" each time it appears and inserting "2003".

SEC. 02. ENFORCEMENT EXTENSIONS.

(a) EXTENSION OF ENFORCING DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.—Notwithstanding section 275 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, section 251 of that Act shall expire on September 30, 2003.

(b) EXTENSION OF ENFORCING PAY-AS-YOU-GO.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 275 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, section 252, except as provided in paragraph (2), and sections 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 258A, and 258C of that Act shall expire on September 30, 2011.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR ON-BUDGET SURPLUSES.—If prior to September 30, 2007, the Final Monthly Treasury Statement for any of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006 reports an on-budget surplus, section 252 shall expire at the end of the following fiscal year and the President, in the next budget, shall submit to Congress a recommendation for pay-as-you-go enforcement procedures that the President believes are appropriate when there is an on-budget surplus.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsections (a) and (b)(1) of section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by striking "2002" each place it appears and inserting "2007".

(c) EXTENSION OF SUPERMAJORITY DISCIPLINE IN THE SENATE.—Section 904(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

SEC. 03. SENATE ENFORCEMENT.

(a) ALLOCATIONS TO THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS OF THE SENATE.—Upon the enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate shall file allocations to the committee on Appropriations of the Senate consistent with this Act pursuant to section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(b) RESTRICTIONS ON ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS IN THE SENATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that would provide an advance appropriation.

(2) EXCEPTION.—An advance appropriation may be provided—

(A) for fiscal year 2004 for programs, projects, activities, or accounts identified in the joint explanatory statement of managers accompanying this Act under the heading "Accounts Identified for Advance Appropriations" in an aggregate amount not to exceed $23,159,000,000 in new budget authority; and

(B) for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

(3) APPLICATION OF POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(A) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—In the Senate, paragraph (1) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under paragraph (1).

(B) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under paragraph (1) may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(C) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under paragraph (1) against a conference report in the Senate, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(4) DEFINITION.—In this subsection, the term "advance appropriation" means any discretionary new budget authority in a bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for fiscal year 2002 that first becomes available for any fiscal year after 2002.

(5) PROHIBITION ON DIVERTING CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—

(A) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this paragraph is to ensure that amounts deposited in the Crime Victims Fund are distributed in a timely manner to assist victims of crime as intended by current law and are not diverted to offset increased spending when such offset devices produce permanent budgetary or economic effects.

(B) BUDGETARY RULE.—For purposes of points of order under the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to fiscal year 2004 and any subsequent fiscal year, provisions contained in any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that perpetuate or resemble section 619 of Public Law 107–77 shall not be scored with respect to the level of budget authority, outlays, or revenues contained in such legislation.

(c) PAY-AS-YOU-GO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(1) PURPOSE.—The Senate declares that it is essential to continue the pay-as-you-go enforcement system.

(2) POINT OF ORDER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any direct spending or revenue legislation that would increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit for any 1 of the 3 applicable time periods as measured in subparagraphs (E) and (F).

(B) APPLICABLE TIME PERIODS.—For purposes of this subsection the term "applicable time period" means any 1 of the 3 following periods:

(i) The budget year.

(ii) The period of the budget year and the following 4 fiscal years.

(iii) The period of the 5 fiscal years following the 5 fiscal years described in clause (ii).

(C) DIRECT-SPENDING LEGISLATION.—For purposes of this subsection and except as provided in subparagraph (D), the term "direct-spending legislation" means any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that affects direct spending as that term is defined by and interpreted for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(D) EXCLUSION.—The terms "direct-spending legislation" and "revenue legislation" do not include—

(i) any concurrent resolution on the budget; or

(ii) any provision of legislation that affects the full funding of, and continuation of, the deposit insurance guarantee commitment in effect on the date of enactment of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

(E) BASELINE.—Estimates prepared pursuant to this subsection shall—

(i) use the baseline used for the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; and

(ii) be calculated under the requirements of subsections (b) through (d) of section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 for fiscal years beyond those covered by subparagraph (B).

(F) PRIOR SURPLUS.—If direct spending or revenue legislation increases the on-budget deficit or causes an on-budget deficit when taken individually, then it must also increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit when taken together with all direct spending and revenue legislation enacted since the beginning of the calendar year not accounted for in the baseline under subparagraph (E)(i), except that direct spending or revenue effects resulting in net deficit reduction enacted pursuant to reconciliation instructions since the beginning of that same calendar year shall not be available.

(3) WAIVER.—This subsection may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn.

(4) APPEALS.—Appeals in the Senate from the decisions of the Chair relating to any provision of this subsection shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the appellant and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, as the case may be. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this subsection.

(5) DETERMINATION OF BUDGET LEVELS.—For purposes of this subsection, the levels of new budget authority, outlays, and revenues for a fiscal year shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the Senate.

(d) EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS.—Congress adopts the provisions of this section—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each house, or of that house to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either house to change those rules (so far as they relate to that house) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that house.

(e) SUNSET.—Subsections (a) through (d) shall cease to be effective upon the adoption of a concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2003.

(f) ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT.—Section 205(g) of H. Con. Res. 290 (106th Congress) is repealed.

SEC. 04. REPEAL OF OBSOLETE PROVISIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 253 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET AND IMPOUNDMENT CONTROL ACT OF 1974.—Section 312 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by repealing subsection (c); and

(B) by redesignating subsections (d) through (f) as subsections (c) through (e).

(2) BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985.—The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended—

(A) in section 251(a)(1), by striking "and section 253";

(B) in section 252(b)—

(i) in paragraph (1), by striking "or section 253"; and

(ii) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "or section 253".

SEC. 3. EXTENSION OF PAY-AS-YOU-GO REQUIREMENT.

Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902) is amended—

(1) in subsections (a) and (b)(1), by striking "enacted before October 1, 2002," and inserting "enacted before October 1, 2007"; and

(2) in subsection (b) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there shall be no sequestration under this section for any fiscal year in which a surplus exists (as measured in conformance with section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990).".

SEC. 4. POINT OF ORDER TO REQUIRE COMPLIANCE WITH THE DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS AND PAY-AS-YOU-GO.

"(b) DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMIT AND PAY-AS-YOU-GO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (6), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill or resolution or any separate provision of a bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that would—

"(A) exceed any of the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or any suballocation of such limits among subcommittees under section 302(b); or

"(B) for direct spending or revenue legislation, would cause or increase a deficit (as measured in conformance with section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990) for any one of the following three applicable time periods:

"(i) the first year covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget;

"(ii) the period of the first 5 fiscal years covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; or

"(iii) the period of the 5 fiscal years following the first five fiscal years covered in the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

"(2) BUDGET RESOLUTIONS.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (6), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that concurrent resolution) that would exceed any of the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

"(3) POINT OF ORDER AGAINST A SPECIFIC PROVISION.—If the Presiding Officer sustains a point of order under paragraph (1) with respect to any separate provision of a bill or resolution, that provision shall be stricken from the measure and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor.

"(4) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under this section may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e).

"(5) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under this section against a conference report the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d).

"(6) EXCEPTIONS.—This subsection shall not apply if a declaration of war by the Congress is in effect or if a joint resolution pursuant to section 258 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 has been enacted.".

SEC. 5. ENFORCEMENT AGAINST BUDGET EVASION.

"BUDGET EVASION POINT OF ORDER

"SEC. 316. (a) Discretionary Spending Limits.—It shall not be in order to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that waives or suspends the enforcement of section 251 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or otherwise would alter the spending limits set forth in that section.

"(b) PAY-AS-YOU-GO.—It shall not be in order to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that waives or suspends the enforcement of section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 or otherwise would alter the balances of the pay-as-you-go scorecard pursuant to that section.

"(c) DIRECTED SCORING.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment, motion, or conference report on that bill or resolution) that directs the scorekeeping of any bill or resolution.

"(d) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the item for section 315 the following:

"316. Budget evasion point of order.".

(2) in subsection (f)(2)(A), by striking "2002" each time it appears and inserting "2003".

SEC. 02. ENFORCEMENT EXTENSIONS.

(a) EXTENSION OF ENFORCING DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.—Notwithstanding section 275 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, section 251 of that Act shall expire on September 30, 2003.

(b) EXTENSION OF ENFORCING PAY-AS-YOU-GO.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 275 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, section 252, except as provided in paragraph (2), and sections 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 258A, and 258C of that Act shall expire on September 30, 2011.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR ON-BUDGET SURPLUSES.—If prior to September 30, 2007, the Final Monthly Treasury Statement for any of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006 reports an on-budget surplus, section 252 shall expire at the end of the following fiscal year and the President, in the next budget, shall submit to Congress a recommendation for pay-as-you-go enforcement procedures that the President believes are appropriate when there is an on-budget surplus.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsections (a) and (b)(1) of section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by striking "2002" each place it appears and inserting "2007".

(c) EXTENSION OF SUPERMAJORITY DISCIPLINE IN THE SENATE.—Section 904(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking "2002" and inserting "2007".

SEC. 03. SENATE ENFORCEMENT.

(a) ALLOCATIONS TO THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS OF THE SENATE.—Upon the enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate shall file allocations to the committee on Appropriations of the Senate consistent with this Act pursuant to section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(b) RESTRICTIONS ON ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS IN THE SENATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that would provide an advance appropriation.

(2) EXCEPTION.—An advance appropriation may be provided—

(A) for fiscal year 2004 for programs, projects, activities, or accounts identified in the joint explanatory statement of managers accompanying this Act under the heading "Accounts Identified for Advance Appropriations" in an aggregate amount not to exceed $23,159,000,000 in new budget authority; and

(B) for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

(3) APPLICATION OF POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(A) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—In the Senate, paragraph (1) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under paragraph (1).

(B) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under paragraph (1) may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(C) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under paragraph (1) against a conference report in the Senate, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(4) DEFINITION.—In this subsection, the term "advance appropriation" means any discretionary new budget authority in a bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for fiscal year 2002 that first becomes available for any fiscal year after 2002.

(5) PROHIBITION ON DIVERTING CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—

(A) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this paragraph is to ensure that amounts deposited in the Crime Victims Fund are distributed in a timely manner to assist victims of crime as intended by current law and are not diverted to offset increased spending when such offset devices produce permanent budgetary or economic effects.

(B) BUDGETARY RULE.—For purposes of points of order under the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to fiscal year 2004 and any subsequent fiscal year, provisions contained in any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that perpetuate or resemble section 619 of Public Law 107–77 shall not be scored with respect to the level of budget authority, outlays, or revenues contained in such legislation.

(c) PAY-AS-YOU-GO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(1) PURPOSE.—The Senate declares that it is essential to continue the pay-as-you-go enforcement system.

(2) POINT OF ORDER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any direct spending or revenue legislation that would increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit for any 1 of the 3 applicable time periods as measured in subparagraphs (E) and (F).

(B) APPLICABLE TIME PERIODS.—For purposes of this subsection the term "applicable time period" means any 1 of the 3 following periods:

(i) The budget year.

(ii) The period of the budget year and the following 4 fiscal years.

(iii) The period of the 5 fiscal years following the 5 fiscal years described in clause (ii).

(C) DIRECT-SPENDING LEGISLATION.—For purposes of this subsection and except as provided in subparagraph (D), the term "direct-spending legislation" means any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that affects direct spending as that term is defined by and interpreted for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(D) EXCLUSION.—The terms "direct-spending legislation" and "revenue legislation" do not include—

(i) any concurrent resolution on the budget; or

(ii) any provision of legislation that affects the full funding of, and continuation of, the deposit insurance guarantee commitment in effect on the date of enactment of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

(E) BASELINE.—Estimates prepared pursuant to this subsection shall—

(i) use the baseline used for the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; and

(ii) be calculated under the requirements of subsections (b) through (d) of section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 for fiscal years beyond those covered by subparagraph (B).

(F) PRIOR SURPLUS.—If direct spending or revenue legislation increases the on-budget deficit or causes an on-budget deficit when taken individually, then it must also increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit when taken together with all direct spending and revenue legislation enacted since the beginning of the calendar year not accounted for in the baseline under subparagraph (E)(i), except that direct spending or revenue effects resulting in net deficit reduction enacted pursuant to reconciliation instructions since the beginning of that same calendar year shall not be available.

(3) WAIVER.—This subsection may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn.

(4) APPEALS.—Appeals in the Senate from the decisions of the Chair relating to any provision of this subsection shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the appellant and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, as the case may be. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this subsection.

(5) DETERMINATION OF BUDGET LEVELS.—For purposes of this subsection, the levels of new budget authority, outlays, and revenues for a fiscal year shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the Senate.

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each house, or of that house to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either house to change those rules (so far as they relate to that house) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that house.

(e) SUNSET.—Subsections (a) through (d) shall cease to be effective upon the adoption of a concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2003.

(f) ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT.—Section 205(g) of H. Con. Res. 290 (106th Congress) is repealed.

SEC. 04. REPEAL OF OBSOLETE PROVISIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 253 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET AND IMPOUNDMENT CONTROL ACT OF 1974.—Section 312 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by repealing subsection (c); and

(B) by redesignating subsections (d) through (f) as subsections (c) through (e).

(2) BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985.—The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended—

(A) in section 251(a)(1), by striking "and section 253";

(B) in section 252(b)—

(i) in paragraph (1), by striking "or section 253"; and

(ii) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "or section 253".

TITLE —COMMISSION ON THE ACCOUNTABILITY AND REVIEW OF FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Commission on the Accountability and Review of Federal Agencies Act".

SEC. 02. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the Commission on the Accountability and Review of Federal Agencies (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Commission").

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall consist of 12 members, all of whom shall be appointed by the President within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—The President shall designate a chairperson and vice chairperson from among the members of the Commission.

(c) PERIOD OF APPOINTMENT; VACANCIES.—Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(d) INITIAL MEETING.—Not later than 30 days after the date on which all members of the Commission have been appointed, the Commission shall hold its first meeting.

(e) MEETINGS.—The Commission shall meet at the call of the chairperson.

SEC. 03. DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) DEFINITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term "agency", as used in this section, has the meaning given the term "executive agency" under section 105 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) EXCEPTION.—The term "agency" does not include the Department of Defense or its subdivisions.

(b) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall—

(1) evaluate all agencies and programs within those agencies, using the criteria under subsection (c); and

(2) submit to Congress—

(A) a plan with recommendations of the agencies and programs that should be realigned or eliminated; and

(B) proposed legislation to implement the plan under subparagraph (A).

(c) CRITERIA.—

(1) DUPLICATIVE.—If 2 or more agencies or programs are performing the same essential function and the function can be consolidated or streamlined into a single agency or program, the Commission shall recommend that the agency or program be realigned.

(2) WASTEFUL OR INEFFICIENT.—The Commission shall recommend the realignment or elimination of any agency or program that has wasted Federal funds by—

(A) egregious spending;

(B) mismanagement of resources and personnel; or

(C) use of such funds for personal benefit or the benefit of a special interest group.

(3) OUTDATED, IRRELEVANT, OR FAILED.—The Commission shall recommend the elimination of any agency or program that—

(A) has completed its intended purpose;

(B) has become irrelevant; or

(C) has failed to meet its objectives.

(d) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to the President and Congress a report that includes—

(A) the plan described under subsection (b)(1) with supporting documentation for all recommendations; and

(B) the proposed legislation described under subsection (b)(2).

(2) USE OF SAVINGS.—The proposed legislation under paragraph (1)(B) shall provide that all funds saved by the implementation of the plan under paragraph (1)(A) shall be used to support other domestic programs.

(3) RELOCATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—The proposed legislation under paragraph (1)(B) shall provide that if the position of an employee of an agency is eliminated as a result of the implementation of the plan under paragraph (1)(A), the affected agency shall make reasonable efforts to relocate such employee to another position within the agency or within another Federal agency.

SEC. 04. POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) HEARINGS.—The Commission or, at its direction, any subcommittee or member of the Commission, may, for the purpose of carrying out this title—

(1) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, receive such evidence, and administer such oaths as any member of the Commission considers advisable;

(2) require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses as any member of the Commission considers advisable; and

(3) require, by subpoena or otherwise, the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, tapes, and other evidentiary materials relating to any matter under investigation by the Commission.

(b) Issuance and Enforcement of Subpoenas.—

(1) Issuance.—Subpoenas issued under subsection (a) shall bear the signature of the chairperson of the Commission and shall be served by any person or class of persons designated by the chairperson for that purpose.

(2) Enforcement.—In the case of contumacy or failure to obey a subpoena issued under subsection (a), the United States district court for the judicial district in which the subpoenaed person resides, is served, or may be found, may issue an order requiring such person to appear at any designated place to testify or to produce documentary or other evidence. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt of that court.

(c) Information From Federal Agencies.—The Commission may secure directly from any Federal department or agency such information as the Commission considers necessary to carry out this title. Upon request of the chairperson of the Commission, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(d) Postal Services.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

(e) Gifts.—The Commission may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

SEC. 05. COMMISSION PERSONNEL MATTERS.

(a) Compensation of Members.—

(1) Non-federal members.—Except as provided under subsection (b), each member of the Commission who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government shall not be compensated.

(2) Federal officers or employees.—All members of the Commission who are officers or employees of the United States shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officers or employees of the United States.

(b) Travel Expenses.—The members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission.

(c) Staff.—

(1) In general.—The chairperson of the Commission may, without regard to the civil service laws and regulations, appoint and terminate an executive director and such other additional personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to perform its duties. The employment of an executive director shall be subject to confirmation by the Commission.

(2) Compensation.—Upon the approval of the chairperson, the executive director may fix the compensation of the executive director and other personnel without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification of positions and General Schedule pay rates, except that the rate of pay for the executive director and other personnel may not exceed the maximum rate payable for a position at GS–15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title.

(3) Personnel as federal employees.—

(A) In general.—The executive director and any personnel of the Commission who are employees shall be employees under section 2105 of title 5, United States Code, for purposes of chapters 63, 81, 83, 84, 85, 87, 89, and 90 of that title.

(B) Members of commission.—Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to apply to members of the Commission.

(d) Detail of Government Employees.—Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement, and such detail shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege.

(e) Procurement of Temporary and Intermittent Services.—The chairperson of the Commission may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, at rates for individuals which do not exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of such title.

SEC. 06. TERMINATION OF THE COMMISSION.

The Commission shall terminate 90 days after the date on which the Commission submits the report under section 03(d).

SEC. 07. CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION OF REFORM PROPOSALS.

(a) Definitions.—In this section—

(1) the term "implementation bill" means only a bill which is introduced as provided under subsection (b), and contains the proposed legislation included in the report submitted to Congress under section 03, without modification; and

(2) the term "calendar day" means a calendar day other than 1 on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a date certain.

(b) Introduction; Referral; and Report or Discharge.—

(1) Introduction.—On the first calendar day on which both Houses are in session, on or immediately following the date on which the report is submitted to Congress under section 03, a single implementation bill shall be introduced (by request)—

(A) in the Senate by the Majority Leader of the Senate, for himself and the Minority Leader of the Senate, or by Members of the Senate designated by the Majority Leader and Minority Leader of the Senate; and

(B) in the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for himself and the Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, or by Members of the House of Representatives designated by the Speaker and Minority Leader of the House of Representatives.

(2) Referral.—The implementation bills introduced under paragraph (1) shall be referred to any appropriate committee of jurisdiction in the Senate and any appropriate committee of jurisdiction in the House of Representatives. A committee to which an implementation bill is referred under this paragraph may report such bill to the respective House without amendment.

(3) Report or discharge.—If a committee to which an implementation bill is referred has not reported such bill by the end of the 15th calendar day after the date of the introduction of such bill, such committee shall be immediately discharged from further consideration of such bill, and upon being reported or discharged from the committee, such bill shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

(c) Floor Consideration.—

(1) In general.—When the committee to which an implementation bill is referred has reported, or has been discharged under subsection (b)(3), it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the implementation bill, and all points of order against the implementation bill (and against consideration of the implementation bill) are waived. The motion is highly privileged in the House of Representatives and is privileged in the Senate and is not debatable. The motion is not subject to amendment, or to a motion to postpone, or to a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the implementation bill is agreed to, the implementation bill shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(2) Amendments.—An implementation bill may not be amended in the Senate or the House of Representatives.

(3) Debate.—Debate on the implementation bill, and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. An amendment to, or a motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business, or a motion to recommit the implementation bill is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the implementation bill is agreed to or disagreed to is not in order.

(4) Vote on final passage.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on an implementation bill, and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the implementation bill shall occur.

(5) Rulings of the chair on procedure.—Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to an implementation bill shall be decided without debate.

(d) Coordination With Action by Other House.—If, before the passage by 1 House of an implementation bill of that House, that House receives from the other House an implementation bill, then the following procedures shall apply:

(1) Nonreferral.—The implementation bill of the other House shall not be referred to a committee.

(2) Vote on bill of other house.—With respect to an implementation bill of the House receiving the implementation bill—

(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no implementation bill had been received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the implementation bill of the other House.

(e) Rules of the Senate and the House of Representatives.—This section is enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and as such it is deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of an implementation bill described in subsection (a), and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

SA 3718. Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC. . (a) For the purpose of section 101(a)(1) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act of 2001 (P.L. 107–42), the term "air carrier" as defined in that Act and in title 49 USC 40102 shall include manufacturers of small jet turbofan aircraft that will—

(1) have 8 passenger seats or fewer,

(2) will be certified by the Federal Aviation Administration under 14 C.F.R. Part 23,

(3) utilize avionics compatible with the latest Federal Aviation Administration air traffic control technology initiatives, and

(4) be designed to provide service to rural, small and medium-sized underserved communities.

(b) For purposes of this section, and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems necessary, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within amounts available to carry out the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act of 2001, issue credit instruments to the manufactures of small jet turbofan aircraft as defined in subsection (a) that do not in the aggregate, exceed $50,000,000 and provide the subsidy amounts necessary for such instruments in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990 (2 U.S.C. 661 et seq.)

SA 3719. Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . LOAN GUARANTEE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems necessary, there are hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary, the Secretary shall issue credit instruments to manufacturers of small jet turbofan aircraft that do not in the aggregate, exceed $50,000,000 and provide the subsidy amounts necessary for such instruments in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990 (2 U.S.C. 661 et seq.).

(b) The Secretary shall enter into agreements with 1 or more obligors to issue Federal credit instruments under subsection (a) if the Secretary determines, at his discretion, that—

(1) the obligor is a manufacturer of small jet turbofan aircraft for which credit is not reasonably available at the time of the transactions; and

(2) the intended obligation by the obligor is prudently incurred.

(c) TERMS AND LIMITATIONS.—

(1) FORMS; TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—A Federal credit instrument shall be issued under subsection (a) in such form and on such terms and conditions and contain such covenants, representations, warranties, and requirements (including requirements for audits) as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(2) PROCEDURES.—Not later than 14 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall issue regulations setting forth procedures for application and minimum requirements, which may be supplied by the Secretary at his discretion, for the issuance of Federal credit instruments under subsection (a).

(d) FINANCIAL PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent feasible and practicable, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the Secretary shall ensure that the Government is compensated for the risk assumed in making guarantees under this Act.

(2) GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN GAINS.—To the extent to which any participating corporation accepts financial assistance, in the form of accepting the proceeds of any loans guaranteed by the Government under this Act, the Board is authorized to enter into contracts under which the Government, contingent on the financial success of the participating corporation, would participate in the gains of the participating corporation or its security holders through the use of such instruments as warrants, stock options, common or preferred stock, or other appropriate equity instruments.

(3) DEPOSIT IN TREASURY.—All amounts collected by the Secretary of the Treasury under this subsection shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this Act, the term "small jet turbofan aircraft manufacturer" means a person that manufactures small jet turbofan aircraft that will—

(1) have 8 passenger seats or fewer,

(2) will be certified by the Federal Aviation Administration under 14 C.F.R. Part 23,

(3) utilize avionics compatible with the latest Federal Aviation Administration air traffic control technology initiatives, and

(4) be designed to provide service to rural, small and medium sized underserved communities.

(f) Provided, That the entire amount shall be available only to the extent an official budget request, that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement as defined in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, is transmitted by the President to the Congress: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

SA 3720. At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. DEDUCTION OF CERTAIN EXPENSES OF MEMBERS OF THE RESERVE COMPONENT.

(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—Section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain trade or business expenses) is amended by redesignating subsection (p) as subsection (q) and inserting after subsection (o) the following new subsection:

"(p) TREATMENT OF EXPENSES OF MEMBERS OF RESERVE COMPONENT OF ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.—For purposes of subsection (a), in the case of an individual who performs services as a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces of the United States at any time during the taxable year, such individual shall be deemed to be away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business during any period for which such individual is away from home in connection with such service.".

(b) DEDUCTION ALLOWED WHETHER OR NOT TAXPAYER ELECTS TO ITEMIZE.—Section 62(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain trade and business deductions of employees) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) CERTAIN EXPENSES OF MEMBERS OF RESERVE COMPONENTS OF THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.—The deductions allowed by section 162 which consist of expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer in connection with the performance of services by such taxpayer as a member of a reserve component of the Armed Forces of the United States.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to amounts paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

SEC. ___. CREDIT FOR EMPLOYMENT OF RESERVE COMPONENT PERSONNEL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to business-related credits) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 45G. RESERVE COMPONENT EMPLOYMENT CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of section 38, the reserve component employment credit determined under this section is an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) the employment credit with respect to all qualified employees of the taxpayer, plus

"(2) the self-employment credit of a qualified self-employed taxpayer.

"(b) EMPLOYMENT CREDIT.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The employment credit with respect to a qualified employee of the taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to 50 percent of the amount of qualified compensation that would have been paid to the employee with respect to all periods during which the employee participates in qualified reserve component duty to the exclusion of normal employment duties, including time spent in a travel status had the employee not been participating in qualified reserve component duty. The employment credit, with respect to all qualified employees, is equal to the sum of the employment credits for each qualified employee under this subsection.

"(2) QUALIFIED COMPENSATION.—When used with respect to the compensation paid or that would have been paid to a qualified employee for any period during which the employee participates in qualified reserve component duty, the term 'qualified compensation' means compensation—

"(A) which is normally contingent on the employee's presence for work and which would be deductible from the taxpayer's gross income under section 162(a)(1) if the employee were present and receiving such compensation, and

"(B) which is not characterized by the taxpayer as vacation or holiday pay, or as sick leave or pay, or as any other form of pay for a nonspecific leave of absence, and with respect to which the number of days the employee participates in qualified reserve component duty does not result in any reduction in the amount of vacation time, sick leave, or other nonspecific leave previously credited to or earned by the employee.

"(3) Qualified employee.—The term 'qualified employee' means a person who—

"(A) has been an employee of the taxpayer for the 21-day period immediately preceding the period during which the employee participates in qualified reserve component duty, and

"(B) is a member of the Ready Reserve of a reserve component of an Armed Force of the United States as defined in sections 10142 and 10101 of title 10, United States Code.

"(c) Self-Employment Credit.—

"(1) In general.—The self-employment credit of a qualified self-employed taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to 50 percent of the excess, if any, of—

"(A) the self-employed taxpayer's average daily self-employment income for the taxable year over

"(B) the average daily military pay and allowances received by the taxpayer during the taxable year, while participating in qualified reserve component duty to the exclusion of the taxpayer's normal self-employment duties for the number of days the taxpayer participates in qualified reserve component duty during the taxable year, including time spent in a travel status.

"(2) Average daily self-employment income and average daily military pay and allowances.—As used with respect to a self-employed taxpayer—

"(A) the term 'average daily self-employment income' means the self-employment income (as defined in section 1402) of the taxpayer for the taxable year divided by the difference between—

"(i) 365, and

"(ii) the number of days the taxpayer participates in qualified reserve component duty during the taxable year, including time spent in a travel status, and

"(B) the term 'average daily military pay and allowances' means—

"(i) the amount paid to the taxpayer during the taxable year as military pay and allowances on account of the taxpayer's participation in qualified reserve component duty, divided by

"(ii) the total number of days the taxpayer participates in qualified reserve component duty, including time spent in travel status.

"(3) Qualified self-employed taxpayer.—The term 'qualified self-employed taxpayer' means a taxpayer who—

"(A) has net earnings from self-employment (as defined in section 1402) for the taxable year, and

"(B) is a member of the Ready Reserve of a reserve component of an Armed Force of the United States.

"(d) Credit in Addition to Deduction.—The employment credit provided in this section is in addition to any deduction otherwise allowable with respect to compensation actually paid to a qualified employee during any period the employee participates in qualified reserve component duty to the exclusion of normal employment duties.

"(e) Limitations.—

"(1) Maximum credit.—

"(A) In general.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for the taxable year—

"(i) shall not exceed $7,500 in the aggregate, and

"(ii) shall not exceed $2,000 with respect to each qualified employee.

"(B) Controlled groups.—For purposes of applying the limitations in subparagraph (A)—

"(i) all members of a controlled group shall be treated as one taxpayer, and

"(ii) such limitations shall be allocated among the members of such group in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

For purposes of this subparagraph, all persons treated as a single employer under subsection (a) or (b) of section 52 or subsection (m) or (o) of section 414 shall be treated as members of a controlled group.

"(2) Disallowance for failure to comply with employment or reemployment rights of members of the reserve components of the armed forces of the united states.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) to a taxpayer for—

"(A) any taxable year in which the taxpayer is under a final order, judgment, or other process issued or required by a district court of the United States under section 4323 of title 38 of the United States Code with respect to a violation of chapter 43 of such title, and

"(B) the two succeeding taxable years.

"(3) Disallowance with respect to persons ordered to active duty for training.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) to a taxpayer with respect to any period for which the person on whose behalf the credit would otherwise be allowable is called or ordered to active duty for any of the following types of duty:

"(A) active duty for training under any provision of title 10, United States Code,

"(B) training at encampments, maneuvers, outdoor target practice, or other exercises under chapter 5 of title 32, United States Code, or

"(C) full-time National Guard duty, as defined in section 101(d)(5) of title 10, United States Code.

"(f) General Definitions and Special Rules.—

"(1) Military pay and allowances.—The term 'military pay' means pay as that term is defined in section 101(21) of title 37, United States Code, and the term 'allowances' means the allowances payable to a member of the Armed Forces of the United States under chapter 7 of that title.

"(2) Qualified reserve component duty.—The term 'qualified reserve component duty' includes only active duty performed, as designated in the reservist's military orders, in support of a contingency operation as defined in section 101(a)(13) of title 10, United States Code.

"(3) Normal employment and self-employment duties.—A person shall be deemed to be participating in qualified reserve component duty to the exclusion of normal employment or self-employment duties if the person does not engage in or undertake any substantial activity related to the person's normal employment or self-employment duties while participating in qualified reserve component duty unless in an authorized leave status or other authorized absence from military duties. If a person engages in or undertakes any substantial activity related to the person's normal employment or self-employment duties at any time while participating in a period of qualified reserve component duty, unless during a period of authorized leave or other authorized absence from military duties, the person shall be deemed to have engaged in or undertaken such activity for the entire period of qualified reserve component duty.

"(4) Certain rules to apply.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 52 shall apply for purposes of this section.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—Section 38(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to general business credit) is amended—

(1) by striking "plus" at the end of paragraph (14),

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (15) and inserting ", plus", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

(c) Clerical Amendment.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 45F the following new item:

"Sec. 45G. Reserve component employment credit.".

(d) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

SA 3727. Mr. KENNEDY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

In chapter 9 of title I, insert after the text relating to the Library of Congress the following:

OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT

For necessary expenses of the Office of Technology Assessment, as authorized by section 12(a) of Public Law 92–484 (2 U.S.C. 481(a)), $1,000,000, to be available for assessments of the technology requirements and priorities of the committees of Congress with respect to the war on terrorism and homeland security, with such assessments to be carried out in consultation with the committees of Congress and under the guidance of the Technology Assessment Board: Provided, That the amount appropriated by this paragraph shall remain available until expended: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

SA 3728. Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Ms. Collins, and Ms. Landrieu) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4775, making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . EDUCATION FIRST.

(a) Statement of Purpose; Findings.—

(1) Statement of purpose.—It is the purpose of this section to dedicate a portion of unexpected, additional Federal resources to—

(A) assist disadvantaged children, teachers, and schools in meeting the additional academic challenges posed in the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (Public Law 107–110);

(B) provide for full funding of Federal financial commitment to children with disabilities and local communities as identified in the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.);

(C) ensure that every student with the talent, desire, and drive to pursue postsecondary training at a school of their choice is not inhibited by family financial need; and

(D) grow to 10 percent over time, the share of the Federal discretionary budget dedicated toward education.

(2) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(A) In fiscal year 2003, funding for the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (Public Law 107–110) is authorized at $31,100,000,000. In fiscal year 2002, the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (Public Law 107–110) was funded at $22,200,000,000. The Budget of the United States Government for Fiscal Year 2003, as submitted to Congress, proposes to fund the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (Public Law 107–110) at $22,100,000,000.

(B) In 1975, the Federal Government promised to contribute to local communities 40 percent of the additional costs necessary to ensure that each child with a disability receives the free and appropriate public education to which they are entitled. The Budget of the United States Government for Fiscal Year 2003, as submitted to Congress, proposes that the Federal Government contribute only 17 percent of the additional costs associated with educating each child with a disability.

(C) The size of the maximum Federal Pell Grant is authorized to be $5,800, but because of insufficient funding, in fiscal year 2002, the maximum Federal Pell Grant was only $4,000.

(D) In fiscal year 1946, the share of the Federal budget dedicated to education was 10.4 percent. In fiscal year 2002, the share of the Federal budget dedicated to education was 2.5 percent. On March 23, 1994, the United States Senate unanimously resolved to increase to 10 percent by 2004 the share of the Federal budget dedicated to education.

(b) ADJUSTMENT.—If the report provided pursuant to section 202(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 602(e)) (the budget and economic outlook: update (for fiscal years 2003 through 2012)), estimates on-budget Federal revenues for fiscal year 2002 through 2012 that exceed estimated on-budget Federal revenues set forth in the Congressional Budget Office's March 2002 budget and economic outlook for fiscal year 2003 (adjusted for the enactment of the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–147) and the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–171)), then the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate shall—

(1) in an amount equal to the increase in estimated on-budget Federal revenues for fiscal year 2003 that is not more than $5,000,000,000, increase the amount of discretionary budget authority and outlays flowing therefrom allocated under section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 633(a)) to carry out Function 500 education programs;

(2) in an amount equal to 20 percent of the increase in estimated on-budget Federal revenues for fiscal year 2003 that is remaining after subtracting the amount described in paragraph (1), increase the amount of discretionary budget authority and outlays flowing therefrom allocated under section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 633(a)) to carry out Function 500 education programs; and

(3) in an amount equal to 80 percent of the increase in estimated on-budget Federal revenue for fiscal year 2003 that is remaining after subtracting the amount described in paragraph (1), reduce the deficit and level of publicly held debt in order to better secure the integrity of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund under section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401), unless there is a national emergency related to the war on terrorism.

(c) LIMITATION.—Amounts made available under subsection (a) shall—

(1) not exceed ½ of 1 percent of on-budget Federal revenues for fiscal year 2003; and

(2) supplement, and not supplant, amounts allocated under section 302(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 633(b)) and any other amounts used to carry out the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.), the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.), and the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) for the previous fiscal year for which amounts are provided under this section.

(d) CONFORMING CHANGES.—The Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate shall make all necessary conforming changes to the functions and aggregates included in any applicable resolution as a result of adjustments under this section.

(e) NON-REDUCTION.—If the report described in subsection (b) estimates on-budget Federal revenues for fiscal year 2002 through 2012 that are less than estimated on-budget Federal revenues set forth in the Congressional Budget Office's March 2002 budget and economic outlook for fiscal year 2003 (adjusted for the enactment of the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–147) and the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–171)), then the amount of discretionary budget authority and outlays flowing therefrom allocated under section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 633(a)) that was dedicated in accordance with section 302(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 633(b)) to carry out Function 500 education programs shall not be reduced.

(f) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—In each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, if the report provided pursuant to section 202(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 602(e)) (the budget and economic outlook: update) estimates on-budget Federal revenues for that fiscal year that exceed estimated on-budget Federal revenues set forth in the Congressional Budget Office's spring budget and economic outlook for that fiscal year, it is the sense of the Senate that Congress should, in an amount equal to the amount and percentages described in subsection (b)—
